To such a conclusion must every sober mind be led, when superstition and bigotry give place to sound reason, common sense, and revelation interpreted in harmony with the known perfections of God, and its general tenor. Let us cease to make infidels by representing the God who made us as a monster in wrath!

"The soul that sinneth it shall die," is God's testimony, and Paul testifies, "The wages of sin is death." Such is the general tenor of Scripture from Gen. to Rev.; and no figurative expressions are to be allowed to override the plain and positive declarations of the divine announcements. The root of all these horrible assumptions about eternal torture is found in the grand assumption that man is created immortal, or has an immortal soul, an expression which is never found in the Bible. Starting with a false position as to man's inherent nature, theologians bewilder themselves and others; and thousands become infidels from necessity under such teachings: infidels, not because they wish to be, but their natural benevolence compels them to reject a Bible which they are told teaches eternal torments, endlessly and hopelessly accumulating, under the administration of a Creator who brought them into an immortal state without their knowledge or consent, and with the foresight that they were to be hopelessly and eternally miserable after a brief life of mixed joy and sorrow here. Perish the thought!

The Bible, the Word of God.

Somewhere, in some way, the Creator, God, must have expressed his will as to man in such a way that man can know it just so far as he is to be held accountable for his treatment of it. If not so, God is a being without justice; is malevolent; is unsettled, without plan in his treatment of men: for, to punish men, (as all the time he's doing) because they go against his will, when they do not know there is a will to be violated, or if there be one, what it is, is remorseless injustice. To have a will as to man, upon which all his destinies hang, and to keep it wholly out of his reach, is malevolence. To go on bringing that will to bear upon man—as everybody sees and feels it does do—and keeping it a mere chance force, with no settled, certain modes of action, is carrying on an aimless, abominable despotism over men. If these are not true of God's ways toward men (who can affirm they are?) where is the Record? the setting forth of his will, so that we may surely know it? Somewhere it must be, or God is the being above supposed.

It is not (a) In Nature. Because, nature is material; has neither mind nor soul; no spiritual being; so can neither take nor give any spiritual ideas. Words, too, or intellectual conveyances are indispensable for carrying ideas into our minds from any source. We think in words. We feel as the effect of words. But nature has no speech, no words; even if ideas were evolved from it. Poetically, it speaks, sings, reasons, i. e., after all those processes are done by something else, it seems in some points to do so, or to echo them. But is the echo of a man's voice, the voice itself, or the organs able to produce voice?

It is not (b) In Human Reason. For reason is made; is a creature of the will of God, and so can set forth that will only so far as the will is organically embodied in its make and faculty. Less than the creative power out of which it came, how can it contain or comprehend that power? Is the pottery a higher order of thing than the potter who fashions it? Is the chronometer a higher, greater work than the brain and hand which formed it? Reason, too, is a second term. It cannot exist as reason until something—a system of things exists for it to act upon. Something to reason about: or reason is a shadow without a substance, which is impossible. Is reason eternal, independent, self-created? That it is, or it can no more reveal the will of God, or be a guide to man, than memory or appetite can do it. What then?

The Bible, the word of God, is the will of God expressed to man. It is a necessity. God must give this book, or his divineness is impeached. Man must have it, or the human sinks to the brutal. The link between God and man is by eternal necessity here. The real question is not—is the Bible the book it claims to be; but is it possible for God to be God, and not to have made the book it claims to be. If, then, there must be somewhere a Word of God if there be a God, and if nature cannot reveal what it has no organic capacity either to possess or reveal; and if man's reason—finite, frail as any other part of him "is as nothing and vanity" compared to the infinite, ever-living God, where can the Bible, the word of God come from? From God; from him alone. Here it is. The Will of God toward man.

The way it came proves that. The things in it prove it. The power which it shows upon man, proves it. It gives no other account of itself. Nobody can give any other sensible, reasonable account of it. "Neither so did their witnesses agree," is seen in all contradictions of this origin. The mode God chose for revealing his will is a small matter; very small. A myriad methods may have been possible to him. A miraculous printing of every copy, or of an equal number to that now existing was possible. The fact of his will, in a form we can take into fullest mental and moral possession, is the one thing we need to know. Whether the inspiration is plenary, i. e., each word specially inspired to be as it is; or that of superintendence; or of suggestion—holy men moved—as to general theme and thought; the wording left to their peculiar style and choosing; the result of each mode is the same, the mind and will of God made known. We are then shut up to that.

If we distrust, doubt, depreciate the word, we do it to the God who is in the word. A stroke, a fling, a lisp against the word, is just that despite to God residing in the word.

Cavil, fault-finding, suspicion, disbelief, a divided mind, set against the Bible, are not against it, but against the holy, just and righteous God embodied in it. Can the reader safely meet his Bible at the judgment-bar of God? L. W.

Church Eaves.

We copy the foregoing from The Advance. It appears in that valuable paper without note or comment; we conclude, therefore, it approves the sentiments it contains. If we had written the first paragraph, such insinuations would have been attributed to a lack of faith, most likely. We do not say whether the sentiments therein are correct or not; but if correct, some very serious objections arise to the theology commonly called "orthodox."

1. The sentiment certainly implies that man is not accountable to God any further than his Creator has made known to him his will; and that such will is to be found nowhere except in the Bible. Now, but a very small portion of the human family have ever had the Bible at all; that is, they have had no part of the Creator's will made known to them; and this lack of the Bible is by no fault of their own. Hence according to the writer's own showing, to punish such persons, "God is a being without justice; is malevolent;" etc. . . . "for to punish men (as all the time he's doing) because they go against his will, when they do not know there is a will to be violated, or if there be one, what it is, is remorseless injustice."

How can it be possible, then, that any man can be punished by his Creator, who has never heard of the Bible, and knows nothing of the claims of that will? Certainly the God of the Bible is not a being of "remorseless injustice:" that cannot be. It follows, inevitably, that no man is punished who has not the Bible, or has not the means to know it, if he would. Death, itself is not a punishment to such an one, if this writer's premises are correct; it is only a natural result of a mortal state, the same as to any other animal. We are not positive but that may be true; but whether true or not, to assume, as orthodoxy does, that unnumbered millions, who never heard of the Bible, are to be punished, in unmitigated and eternal torments, is to accuse God of being guilty of "remorseless injustice," and "malevolent in his treatment of men." This is a heavy charge; we are glad we did not make it.

2. This writer says, "To have a will as to man, upon which all his destinies hang, and to keep it wholly out of his reach, is malevolence." But if the Bible is the only method of making known his will, does it not follow, either that God has no will concerning some men, or that all men, who, without their own fault, are deprived of the Bible, must be free from punishment, or God "is malevolent" in punishing them? especially, in a manner of which they never heard, such as eternally tormenting them in a theological hell? Would not such a punishment truly be an "abominable despotism?"

That the will of God is expressed in the Bible, we fully believe. But thousands and millions who had a part of the Bible, viz., the Old Testament, have never had the Bible, as a whole. And that part of the Bible they had, never once affirms that any man will be tormented beyond this life, for any sins he may commit here. If the theological hell, therefore, be a reality, no sinner can be sent into it who lived under the Old Testament; because God's will, therein expressed, never threatened any man with any punishment after death; all his punishment, by the terms of the Old Testament laws, related to judgments in this life, the extreme of which was death.

If a theological hell is a revelation from God, it is to be found in the New Testament, and nowhere else; and no one who has not the New Testament, or who is deprived of it without his own fault, can possibly be sent to eternal torments, for that would be an "abominable despotism" and "remorseless injustice," if the writer of the foregoing article is correct in his position.

If such are the facts, no wonder thousands of professors of the religion of the New Testament expend vast amounts of money on self-gratifications, building and adorning their church edifices, putting in organs, and making a show in various ways, spending millions of dollars on their sensual gratifications, rather than deny themselves and lay out their money to send the Bible, the New Testament especially, to such as are deprived of it. They are to be commended; for without the New Testament (this writer being correct) God could not send any man to eternal torments, or to any other punishment beyond this life, without "remorseless injustice" and "abominable despotism." We are not to blame for these strong expressions; they are only borrowed.

We think the article which has occasioned these remarks, has "annihilated" the theological hell—the hell of eternal torture—as effectually as anything we we could say;—at least, in relation to all men who have not had the Bible: and if none are exposed to the hell of orthodoxy except such, it is a mercy to keep the Bible where it is, and not let it circulate any further.

But we have not so learned Christ. The Bible is the proclamation of God's love to men, who, being mortal in their constitution, are going out of life—becoming utterly extinct—and proclaiming a future life, through a promised seed, a Life-giver, to all who will accept of the proffered mercy: and that, though they die, they shall live again, at the last day, by means of One whom God has appointed as "the resurrection and the life." All others go down hopelessly into the grave, and live no more forever. Such a gospel does the Bible contain: "Glad tidings of great joy," with authority to proclaim it to "all people," that their darkness in regard to the future may be dispelled, and the glorious light of God's love may be made known to all men; so "that the goodness of God" shall lead them to repentance; win them back to the service of God, and deliver them from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of "sons of God," and the enjoyment of eternal life.

Let these tidings be sent out to every living soul, to earth's remotest bounds, unmarred by the horrid notion of a hell of eternal torments in a world to come, which the Bible never taught, and its whole tenor opposes. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John iii., 16. Men were perishing through sin and a mortal nature. God's love provided a remedy, freely offered to all men. Believe and live; live from the dead; made immortal, to die no more; and joys unending shall be thy portion. "Why will ye die?" is the language of the God of love.

"Adventism."

We have before spoken of this work, but had not then examined it. It is divided into two parts: I. Its relation to Theology. II. Its relation to Prophecy. If we were to express an opinion, we should say, it is to be regretted that the two parts had not been published separately, or the first part greatly abridged. But every man must be his own judge as to the manner in which he will do his own work; so that we have no fault to find in this respect, only we think the work will not be as efficient united as in separate pamphlets. Of the second part we shall not now speak, only to say, in the main, it seems to be a fair presentation of prophecy.

Part I, in its general course, is clear, and the topics well presented; yet it is, in several respects, open to severe criticism.

1. It seems to represent, not only the resurrection of the wicked dead, but that they are raised "at the same time" as the saints. That may be, or may not be what the author intended to teach; but we can come to no other conclusion from what he has said.

2. He says, "The resurrection is a pre-requisite to the judgment, and must therefore precede the judgment," etc., p. 42. He adds, "There must be a resurrection before there can be a judgment."

Again he says, "The dead ones must come out of death's dark prison before being 'judged,' and they must be judged before being rewarded:" p. 43. He tells us, "A 'judgment to come' implies the arrival of a time when a sentence is to be passed upon saint and sinner; and a sentence cannot be executed before being passed," etc.: p. 92. He informs us the wicked will "be raised with mortal bodies," etc.: p. 110. Whether he believes the saints are also raised with mortal bodies, we cannot certainly tell; but his theory demands it; for, he maintains there can be no reward till after the judgment; and that the judgment is not till after the resurrection. But if the saints "are raised incorruptible," as Paul saith, then they must have been judged, in some way, before their resurrection; for such a resurrection must partake of the nature of a reward; which our author says cannot be bestowed till they have been judged.

If there has been no deciding judgment before the resurrection, why do sinners come up "with mortal bodies" and saints with "incorruptible" ones? Why did not the author of "Adventism" meet this difficulty? It seems to us, he has clearly evaded it. While the Bible never tells us, anywhere, that the dead are "raised with mortal bodies" (as our author asserts): but it does tell us, with an emphasis, "the dead are raised incorruptible," and "in glory." These testimonies he has overlooked, or passed by in silence. We desire to know whether this silence was with design or not? It seems to have been with design; for, when answering the question, "When will he [the Christian] obtain immortality?" he quotes Paul's language in the following manner: "At the last trump . . . . this mortality must put on immortality. So when this corruption shall have put on . . . . immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory:" p. 115. Now, why these omissions in quoting this language? Was it because the parts omitted would prove the saints were "raised incorruptible," and must therefore have been judged worthy of such a resurrection before being raised? Such is the appearance, whatever might have been the intention of the author. His theory demands that the saints be raised mortal. If he believes that, let him say so, frankly; for to this it must come with all the advocates of the revival into life of the wicked dead, to be judged and die again. The Bible knows nothing of a "mortal" resurrection, "at the last trump;" nor anything of a man's dying again after a resurrection "at the last day:" such a doctrine is as baseless as that of an inherent immortal soul; both are unknown to revelation, and are of human invention.

We wonder how the author of "Adventism" lost sight of the famous "thousand years between" the resurrection of the saints and sinners! We suppose it could not be wove into his theory of all the judgment being after the resurrection; for if the saints rise a thousand years before the others, they must have been judged before being raised, or else how was it known who was to be raised and who to be left behind? We judge the author's work wants straightening; but he will find it hard work to make it straight, with a mortal resurrection, and no judgment till after all the dead are raised.

We really regret that, with so much truth as his work contains, he should have marred it, as he has done. We ask him, and all others into whose hands his work may come, to read the sensible and convincing remarks of the Prophetic Times, in another column, under the heading, "THE LIGHT SHINING;" in which that periodical has set forth the true idea of the judgment. We hope when the author of "Adventism" has read those remarks he will amend his own, so as to clear it from just criticism. With such emendation his work would be a valuable contribution to the Life and Advent views. As it is, we could not help to circulate it, except under this protest. We may remark further on this work hereafter.

THE LIGHT SHINING:
OR, THE TRUE IDEA OF THE JUDGMENT.

WE have for years contended that the judgment which is to decide the character and destiny of every man is before the resurrection; and the resurrection and what follows is the carrying into execution the previous judgment decisions. Many of those who hold to man's natural mortality, and that immortality is the gift of God, bestowed on the righteous only, have adopted the same view we have so long held; while those among us, holding to man's natural mortality, and a resurrection of both the righteous and the wicked, have continued to maintain the entire process of judgment to be after the resurrection. Such a view, however, we believe to be entirely irreconcilable with the Scriptures. We were, therefore, surprised and pleased to find an article, editorial, in the Prophetic Times, for this month, which takes the same ground, substantially, for which we have contended for the last twenty years. The Prophetic Times is of the orthodox school, on the subject of the immortality of all men, and believes in the resurrection of both the righteous and the wicked. Its testimony therefore is the more valuable, if possible, on this question. The Scriptures compel it to take the position of an "antecedent judgment;" that is of a judgment preceding any resurrection of dead ones; a judgment which determines who are to "rise first;" or, in other words who the righteous are.

The article to which we refer in the Times is headed "THE QUICK AND THE DEAD. An important distinction touching the judgment." We give the largest portion of the article, that our friends may see that the truth is advancing even among the orthodox. It is as follows:

There is an important distinction noted in the Scriptures, and in all the creeds, between the judgment of "the quick" and the judgment of "the dead." The common idea is, that all men, those that have died, and those who are found living at the time, shall be judged alike, and in one and the same congregation. It is conceived that the dead will all be simultaneously resurrected, and all the living simultaneously changed, and that only then the judgment will sit for the adjudication of the eternal destiny of each. Painters and poets have outdone themselves in their efforts to portray the overwhelming majesty and terror of so grand and universal an assize. But it is not according to the plain letter of Scriptures or of the creed of the Church. If the day of judgment is ever to come, it must find people living upon the earth who are described as "the quick." They must therefore either be judged in the flesh, while still living in their natural life, or they must meet with some miraculous transformation equivalent to the resurrection, by which they lose the distinctive character of "quick." Such a change before the judgment has also been accepted and affirmed concerning all who shall be living when the day of judgment comes. Thus Bellarmin teaches that the breaking in of that day will instantaneously end the natural life of all the living; that they will all be suddenly be struck dead, and by the same stroke transformed into precisely the same state in which the resurrected shall be; and that then all distinction between "quick and dead" will have entirely and forever disappeared. And if we take the doctrine of the simultaneous judgment of all men, we are necessitated to accept some such explanation. But then, what becomes of the judgment of "the quick" as distinguished from the judgment of "the dead?" There is, in that case, no such judgment. All natural life in the flesh being ended and overpast before any judicial awards are made, the judgment becomes only a judgment of the dead, or rather of immortals; for there are then no subjects of it except those who have ceased from the natural life and passed into the post-resurrection state.

The distinction made by the Scriptures and the creeds between the judgment of "the quick" and the judgment of "the dead" is thus turned into a distinction without a difference—a mere matter of words, signifying nothing in particular. But the phraseology of Jesus and his inspired Apostles, so uniformly employed wherever the subject is touched, is not thus to be slurred over, and stripped of its proper and natural signification. If words have any meaning, "quick" does not mean "dead," and "dead" does not mean "quick;" and the judgment of the one cannot, therefore, be the judgment of the other. Two distinct classes are unmistakably intended, not only as to that state in which the day of judgment finds them, but also as to that state in which the day of judgment deals with them. If the natural life of "the quick" ends before they are judged, then theirs is not a judgment of the quick any more than of the dead, and one part of the sacred description utterly falls away. We must, therefore, allow a judgment which respects men still living their natural life in the flesh, the awards of which they receive and have visited upon them in their distinctive character as "quick."

And even as respects the judgment of "the dead," there lurks in the popular idea a mischievous and confusing error. People take the resurrection as a mere preliminary of the judgment, and view the judgment itself as something distinct from the resurrection, and coming after it. The language of the last trump they conceive to be, "Awake ye dead, and come to judgment." They consider that the dead are to be awakened for the purpose of being judged. It is also true that all the awards of the judgment do not go into full effect till after the resurrection; but the resurrection is itself a part of the judgment. . . The truth is, that the resurrection, and the changes which pass "in the twinkling of an eye" upon the living, are themselves the fruits and embodiments of antecedent judgment. They are the consequences of adjudications already made. Strictly speaking, men are neither raised nor translated in order to come to judgment. Resurrections and translations are products of judgments already passed upon the dead as dead, and upon the quick as quick. "The dead in Christ shall rise first," because they are already adjudged to be in Christ; and the living saints are caught up together with them to the clouds, because they are already adjudged to be saints, and worthy to attain that world.

Whatever, in the line of increased blessedness or enhanced damnation, may come after, is only the further carrying into effect of what has already been predecided before there could be either resurrection or translation. And what so irreversibly fixes the estates of the persons concerned must necessarily, in the very nature of things be their judgment. The judgment is not a sham formality, or a solemn farce; it is something real; and the substance of it is the award to every man according to his works. And when we see these awards in potent effect in the very life which the dead live again, it is absurd to be thinking of the judgment as only a grand assize, to which resurrection and cessation of natural life are only preliminary.

And if the true judgment thus precedes, or is already embodied in, the resurrection and translation, it must necessarily take hold of the dead as dead and the living as living. The language which the Scriptures and the creeds so carefully preserve, is thus found to possess a literal accuracy and depth too generally overlooked. We profess to believe that Christ "shall come to judge the quick and the dead." He does not come first to raise "the dead" and then to judge them, but he judges them as dead, that they may rise in their appointed lot, and share the resurrection of the just. He does not come first to change "the quick" in order to judge them; but to judge and discriminate between them while yet living, in order that those accounted worthy may be "changed," and caught up together with the resurrected ones, and that those adjudged unworthy of so high a portion may be cut off from it and made to suffer still other inflictions in this world. And it is only by observing this distinction between the living and the dead, and separating what relates to the judgment of the one, and what to the other, that we can form a correct idea of the judgment itself, or rightly understand statements of the Scriptural predictions concerning things to come. There are great wonders in the Scriptures latent under the most common expressions in them, which if rightly searched out, would relieve our religious conceptions of a vast amount vagueness, uncertainty, and save a world of trouble in our attempt to interpret the Word of God.

A QUESTION.

"How can the statement, 'No man can see God and live,' be reconciled with Jacob's declaration, that he had seen God face to face? MRS. E. BENNETT."

The first text referred to, taken with its connection, shows in what sense no man can see God and live. Moses had often talked with the LORD: but on this occasion he wished to have a manifestation such as humanity in this mortal state could not endure. He said, "I beseech thee, show me thy glory." Such a sight, as this request implied, God informed Moses it was impossible for a mortal to have; it would overpower him so as to cause life to become extinct.

That such is the fact might be shown by the case of Daniel or of John. When the latter saw his beloved Master, on whose bosom he leaned his head at the last supper, now glorified, on the isle of Patmos, the sight of the glory of God, as it now shone out in the glorified Jesus, so completely overpowered John that he fell at his feet as dead; nor did he recover till that glorious One laid his hand on him and said, "Fear not."

Daniel, when he had a similar manifestation, chap. x., says, "My comeliness was turned in me into corruption, and I retained no strength." Nor did he begin to recover till "a hand touched" him; and even then his return to strength was slow; for, at first he only rose to his "knees and the palms of his hands." A second word brought him to his feet; but he "stood trembling."

These exhibitions give us to see the correctness of what God said to Moses when he besought the LORD to show him his glory, and received this answer—"Thou canst not see my face; for there shall no man see me and live." Exo. xxxiii., 20; and added, "My face shall not be seen."

To see God's face, then, in the absolute sense, is impossible to men; and yet there is a sense in which men may, and have seen the face of God. In this sense it is used to denote the sensible presence of God, whether by some visible symbol, or a spiritual manifestation, without a symbol.

Jacob saw God's face, not in the absolute sense, but in a symbol; that symbol was a man—"there wrestled a man with him," etc. Gen. xxxii., 24, and on. The circumstances of that interview led him to say, "I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved;" and when he meets his brother Esau, and they were reconciled, Jacob said to Esau, "I have seen thy face, as though I had seen the face of God, and thou wast pleased with me." Esau's kindness, in forgiving his brother the great wrong he had inflicted on him, was Godlike; and Jacob acknowledged it as a reflection of the face, favor, or love of God. This does not look as if Esau was the fancied reprobate that some men would have him to be.

We understand there is a sense in which God never has been seen, and never can be; and Paul recognizes this when he saith of him, "Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see." 1 Timo. vi., 16. It is only symbols of his presence, or the Divine influence, or as veiled in the man, Christ Jesus, that men can be said to see the face of God.

JAMES W. SMITH, Upland, Pa., writes: "Send me 100 "CAN YOU BELIEVE?" If I had the means I would take 100 "LIFE FROM THE DEAD" and scatter them here. Send me 70 cents' worth, and a few extra if you can afford it, and I will be grateful. I have been sickly all winter, but am improving, and when the weather gets good, I want tracts in my pocket to take along with me. Accept my love in hope of eternal life.

ELD. BURR AND R. WENDELL.

FROM JACOB GRIM.

PHILADELPHIA, April 10, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I confess I was somewhat amused in reading Eld. F. Burr's letter, I am also interested in some portions of it; especially the following:

"But from a thorough investigation of the Scriptures she was forced to a different conclusion. Since then she has been what she was before, a firm believer in the resurrection of all the human race—but we were satisfied that all texts referring to the perpetual condition of the wicked, referred to their condition after a resurrection and judgment."

Now this is what we are interested in. I suppose the reason Eld. Burr gives no texts for for such a conclusion is, he says, "All texts refer to their condition after resurrection and judgment." I wonder if that is what Paul referred to in 2 Thess., i., 8, 9, when speaking of the coming of the Lord, "In flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power?" Think you this is after a resurrection of the wicked? And yet this is their everlasting doom. I am sorry the good Br. did not give us one text for the destruction of the wicked after the resurrection. For, I confess that, after nearly twenty-five years of study, I am unable to find one solitary passage that speaks of destruction or death after the resurrection. Suppose we try a few more of Paul's expressions. "Now, if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him; knowing that Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth he liveth unto God." Rom. vi., 8, 10. Does anybody live except those who are relieved from the dominion of sin? "For when ye were the servants to sin, ye were free from righteousness. What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death." When a man reaches the end, what is there after the end? "But now, being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." Here again is the end of another course of life. "For the wages" (something earned to be paid when the work is done) "of sin is death." When a man is dead, if a sinner, he has received all that God owes him, and he has no right to ask for any more; "but" (on the other side) "the gift of God is eternal life, through our Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. vi., 20–23.

Another expression I am interested in, "The doctrine of no life out of Christ." Let me state this more emphatic: No life by a resurrection from the dead except through Christ. "For certainly temporal life is not included in this expression," says Eld. Burr. Again, he says, "This is the case with the wicked to-day, and may be to-morrow, or next week, or next year, even though a suspension of that life take place for the time intervening." We think when a man is dead, he is dead. A man's life may be suspended, or sentence of execution may be suspended; but when the sinner is dead there is no suspension about it; he is dead. So says Jesus, "Your fathers ate manna in the wilderness, and are dead." Again, we are very much interested in the following:

"Present life is mortal, consequently future life is immortal. So the wicked may live to-morrow, or next year, and still not have a future life, even though their breathing were suspended for a space of time and then restored again."

Now all this looks very nice; but it lacks one thing, and that is, Bible proof. Jesus says, "I am the resurrection and the life." As it was in the days when Peter was speaking of Jesus and the resurrection, "The priests and the rulers and the Sadducees came upon them, being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead." Acts iv.

There is yet another passage I am interested in; in which I think Brother Rufus was very much misunderstood. I do not think he for one moment admitted that the change in feeling and behavior was on the part of the believers in the non-resurrection. We believe that any man who holds the resurrection is through Jesus Christ, and to believers only, can afford to keep in a good humor at all times. And from what I have seen and heard of the action of destructionists, Br. Wendell wished to convey the fact that our opposers manifested a better spirit toward us than ever before. And we confess we are glad to find such a spirit prevailing in some quarters; but alas, it is not true in all cases; for there is as much opposition to the doctrine of the non-living of the wicked dead, as there is to the immortal soul doctrine. But whatever we say or do, may it always be done in the true spirit of love. For "as I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." Amen.

ELD. BURR'S DISCLAIMER RECTIFIED.

DEAR EDITOR: The letter from Br. Frank Burr, in last week's paper, requires correcting, and you will give me room to set myself right by setting him right. You say in your "Note"—"We wish all our correspondents to be exceedingly careful in their statements of the position of others, and of all matters relating thereto." The carefulness you thus commend your present correspondent did employ in his references to New Rutland matters, in the H. of L. of January 1. Let us see. Br. Burr says:

Br. W., in his journal, speaks of me as "not yet" having fully indorsed the sentiments he preached, as though I had almost arrived at the point of indorsing the non-resurrection of the wicked. Now, while Br. W.'s statement in fact was correct, yet, like the definition of the perfect tense in Kirkham's Grammar, it "conveys an allusion," and it is that allusion I wish to set right.

The "allusion" of which Br. Burr here speaks is simply his own man of straw, and his readiest way to set it right would have been to refresh his memory by a re-perusal of so much of my Cincinnati letter as related to himself. In that letter, speaking of Br. Burr, I said: "He has not yet adopted the non-living of the wicked dead, but our intercourse was of the most fraternal character." Now, this statement was not only perfectly true, but it contained no untrue implication or "allusion" whatever. Had I used the word "fully," and in the way Br. B. represents, his disclaimer would have been seasonable; but I did not use the word at all, and so, of course, did not convey the idea that he "had almost arrived at the point of indorsing the non-resurrection of the wicked." Webster explains "not yet" to mean "not up to the present time;" and I am sure my use of the phrase did not warrant any of Br. B.'s "old acquaintances East" in concluding that in the future their prairie brother would probably change his ground on the wicked-dead question. If my remark contained any "allusion" whatever, it was to the fact that Br. Burr belongs to a class who ought, in logical consistency, to advance to the position of Life from the dead for the righteous alone. My friendly interchange of views with Br. B. made it plain enough to my mind that he will himself be a much stronger man against the endless torment theory than he now is, when he comes (if ever he does come) to see that a temporary life beyond the grave forms no part of the impenitent man's doom.

In my published journal notes I said: "Sister Burr, I was happy to find, has a strong leaning toward the Life views as held by us." I was certainly justified in making this reference by what Sr. Burr told me at the R. R. station, when I was leaving New Rutland, in the presence of a number of brethren and sisters. I think her very words to me were, "I more than half believe it now." But the approaching train would not allow time for much explaining and qualifying on Sister B.'s part, and I now accept her companion's statement as the correct version of her feeling on the Life question.

Br. Burr, referring to me, further says: "And I was glad also to hear from him that a different spirit pervaded the body of so-called Life-believers than that which was manifested at Wilbraham in 1863." Most decidedly has Br. B. misunderstood me on this point. I was most happy to be able to assure him of a growing union, here at the East, among the two branches of those holding to immortality for the righteous alone, but I never so much as dreamed of intimating to him or anybody else that I considered believers in the non-living of the wicked dead as responsible in any considerable degree for the alienations of former years. I know, as do multitudes of our Life brethren, that the facts greatly preponderate the other way. As a rule, the elbowing and disfellowshipping has been with those holding to the revival of the wicked, while believers in Life only in Christ have shown and felt a spirit of toleration. Our brethren on Br. Burr's side of the question are growing in this grace of toleration, and in this fact HERALD OF LIFE people do rejoice and will rejoice. The foregoing remarks are not designed to imply that past faults have been all on one side, for I believe no such thing; but I do know that on this subject the proscriptive and intolerant spirit has been in very much the larger measure with those who deem it perilous to the interests of men to teach them that torment after death is not threatened to the wicked. This spirit is not dead yet, but its vitality is, we think, growing less and less every year, and we shall welcome the day when it may be safely pronounced extinct. The influence of such brethren as Br. Burr will be on the side of such a result, and in that labor of love they shall have our sympathy even though we are "not yet" able to "see eye to eye" on the doom of the impenitent.

I am glad that Br. Burr does not let Prof. Mattison's work on Immortality pass unchallenged out West. May the Lord bless him in warring a good warfare against human traditions. There never was a greater willingness than now to hear on this grand question of man's nature and destiny. Let us all be at our post. R. W.

PLEDGES MADE TO THE HERALD.

OUR friends who made pledges to carry the HERALD OF LIFE through to our next anniversary will feel it a privilege, we have no doubt, to redeem them as early as possible; and we suggest it is now but little over four months to our anniversary, and we are quite sure none will, of choice, come there without having redeemed their pledges. We certainly shall need every dollar to carry us to that period free from debt. Will you all do the best you can, and as early as possible, in the matter? If any are really unable to meet their pledges, please let us know immediately, that we may look elsewhere for the necessary funds.

"DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE."

THIS work is now stereotyped, and will go to press immediately. We made a rough estimate, at the outset, of the probable cost of the first thousand copies, making it between $70 and $90. The actual cost will be very near the highest estimate; probably not $3 short. The amount received to this date is $62; so that we still lack $28 to complete the expenses of the first 1,000 copies. Nevertheless, we shall put them to subscribers to the fund, and purchasers, at $5 per 100, they paying the postage, or express charges if sent by express. You will see that you thus get them at a mere fraction over one-half the first cost. We do this in the belief that the remaining cost will be made up by donations, or that several thousands will be called for, so as ultimately to cover the whole cost in that way.

Let us hear from you all, who wish a supply of the work, immediately. The postage on 100 would be about 62 cents, as near as we can now calculate.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD.

The second thousand of this work will be ready for delivery to-morrow; and are largely spoken for already. The pledges are coming in for the third thousand. That is right; let the matter roll on till at least one hundred thousand are scattered. This business will pay well for the truth.

B. W. SCOTT, St. Paul, Minn., writes: I have been a believer in the "No life out of Christ" doctrine, since the year 1855, but I have not advocated the blessed truth publicly, but a short time. (So much the worse for me.) But I feel desirous, and have for some time past, of gaining all the information I can on this glorious subject of "Life from the dead only through Christ," from the word of God, also from books and papers treating on the subject, backed up, as I believe they are, by undisputable proof from the inspired word. To this end I am determined to labor, let my days be few or many; and, if faithful to God, I expect to have eternal life through Jesus Christ, our blessed Saviour. To him be praise and glory, forever and ever. Amen. I received the HERALDS sent. They give joy to the soul, and gladden the poor aching heart.

SAMUEL BROWN, Milwaukee, Wis., writes: I send you $5 to help publish "A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE." If this is not enough I will send more. I intend to put them in the hands of those who are trying to defend the natural immortality of the soul. I tell them they are making more infidels than ever Tom Paine has done with all his writings. May they see their mistake and return to the truth as it is in Jesus.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR—We shall need more funds than have yet been pledged to get out the first edition of the DEFENCE.

JACOB P. CHREST, St. Paul, Minn., writes: Please send me the HERALD OF LIFE. Living as I do, so far from those who preach the glorious doctrine of Life through Christ alone—belonging to a church that does not fellowship the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked and life to the righteous by the resurrection from the dead, I feel that I need your paper and books to help me secure this life through Christ; and not myself alone, but others who are grovelling in the dark. Yours, in hope of eternal life.

FLOWERS, "the poetry of nature," and the beauty of the sweet spring-time, are left us as mementoes of the ancient paradise. They speak a language, and that is the language of purity and love. They also serve to show us the vanity of all things terrestial. These beautiful emblems of purity act as so many finger-pointers, to point us back to Eden's lovely bowers, intimating to us the happiness of that place, and to point us to the flowery plains of the paradise yet to come.

IF those who sneer at practical religion would only seek it for themselves, and make a fair trial of it, their lips would be sealed to scoffs, and only opened in grateful praise. I never heard of a sincere Christian who pronounced Christianity an imposture or a failure. Have you?

"Pass on, Relentless World."

BY CHARLES LUNT.

Swifter and swifter, day by day,
Down Time's unquiet current hurled,
Thou passest on thy restless way,
Tumultuous and unstable world!
Thou passest on! Time hath not seen
Delay upon thy hurried path;
And prayers and tears alike have been
In vain to stay thy course of wrath.

Thou passest on, and with thee go
The loves of youth, the cares of age;
And smiles and tears, and joy and woe,
Are on thy history's troubled page.
There, every day, like yesterday,
Writes hopes that end in mockery;
But who shall tear the veil away
Before the abyss of things to be?

Thou passest on, and at thy side,
Even as a shade, Oblivion treads,
And o'er the dreams of human pride
His misty shroud forever spreads;
Where all thine iron hand hath traced
Upon that gloomy scroll to-day,
With records ages since effaced—
Like them shall live, like them decay.

* * * * * * *

Thou hast thy friends—I would have mine
Thou hast thy thoughts—leave me my own;
I kneel not at thy gilded shrine,
I bow not at thy slavish throne;
I see them pass without a sigh—
They wake no swelling raptures now,
The fierce delights that fire thine eye,
The triumphs of thy haughty brow.

Pass on, relentless world! I grieve
No more for all that thou hast riven;
Pass on, in God's name, only leave
The things thou never yet hast given.
A heart at ease, a mind at home,
Affections fixed above thy sway,
Faith set upon a world to come,
And patience through life's little day.

Snow-Drops—A Spring Story.

The winter in Prussia had been unusually long and severe, and when March came the ground was still covered by a shroud of snow and ice. It was only about the middle of the month that the warm sunbeams softened the surface of the ground. The larks sang the sweetest songs that they knew, the children began to trundle their hoops, and here and there you could see the sprouts of the hardiest plants springing out of the ground.

The beams of the warm spring sun also entered the open window of a splendid room in the castle of a count, which was built high up on a rock, and at whose feet there lay a fruitful valley and splendid gardens. A servant in the castle, who had lived there for a number of years, was cleaning out the parlor, and was just at that time dusting off the two marble statues standing near the fire-place. She had already dusted the gold clock and picture-frames, and had about half-finished everything in the room.

At this moment the parlor-door opened a little wider than it already was, and there appeared a girl scarcely fourteen years of age, who was dressed in neat and plain clothing.

"Good-morning!" said she, very much abashed by the splendor of the furniture which she saw, for she had never beheld anything so grand before. The woman who had been dusting was disposed to be haughty and impatient toward the one whom she regarded as an intruder, and she replied:

"Who gave you permission to come in here?"

"No one came to the front door," modestly answered the girl, "and as it stood slightly open I took the liberty to come in, especially as I heard some one say: 'Walk in! walk in!'"

"You foolish thing!" said the woman, "that was only the parrot; not a single person in the house ever told you to walk in."

The girl was very much astonished at this, for though she had seen a large bird with green feathers on it, she had not the slightest idea that such a bird could talk, and could play a joke on her.

"What is your business here, anyhow?" asked the woman. "The servant's room is below; you had better go and see the housekeeper, if you have any request to make."

The girl looked quite surprised at this harsh treatment, and then said, "I would like to see the countess, if she would be so kind as to permit me to see her."

"You foolish thing! Don't you know she don't get up this soon in the morning? Besides, she don't care anything about seeing you, anyhow."

Just then a lady entered the room and said: "The countess is up."

Behold, it was the countess herself, who gave her servant some very plain words of reproof for her impudence to a modest country girl. The countess was very kind to the girl, who soon made known her request.

She had brought from the country a little basket of beautiful snow-drops, the very first ones of the season. She asked the countess if she would have the kindness to see that the King of Prussia should receive that little basket of snow-drops.

The kind lady was very much pleased to see this plain peasant girl have such respect and love for the ruler of her country, and immediately promised her that the flowers should be placed in the hands of the King of Prussia himself, for her own brother was his chamberlain.

"But," said the countess, "where did you get these snow-drops so soon?"

The girl replied: "There is only one place in the whole forest where they grow so soon, and I cannot tell why it is they bloom two weeks sooner in that particular place than elsewhere. But such is the fact, for I have gathered snow-drops a fortnight earlier there than anywhere else, for three springs in succession. Strange to say, nobody else knows it but me—or, at least, nobody seems to know it, for I am always the first one to gather them."

"But," said the countess, "why do you send snow-drops to the king?"

"I send them to him because I know he likes them better than any other flower that grows. My brother is a student in the University of Berlin, and he is acquainted with the son of the King's gardener, and I have often heard him say that there is no flower which the king of Prussia loves so well as the snow-drop."

"Yes," said the countess in reply, "you are perfectly right. I have often seen the king wear a beautiful snow-drop in the botton-hole of his coat, and I have frequently heard him say myself that he regards it as the loveliest flower on earth. Your request shall be fulfilled, and I know it will please him. But who shall I say has sent it to him?"

Gertrude then thanked the countess very cordially for promising to see that the basket of snow-drops was placed in the king's hands, and bade her "good-morning." But the countess would not allow her to leave without putting a large piece of gold into her hand, which the peasant girl at first refused to accept.

Three months after the beautiful spring morning when this scene occurred in the count's castle, a great express-wagon stopped before the door where wood-chopper Alling, who was the father of Gertrude, the girl who sent the King of Prussia a basket of snow-drops, lived. Gertrude's mother did not have the slightest idea that the great box which the expressman was taking out of the wagon was for her, or for her husband. But in this she was very much mistaken, for not only did the box belong to her, but also another large one that was still in the wagon. One box contained several pieces of linen, a number of dresses, two pieces of woolen cloth, and many other articles useful for the family. The other box had in it a handsome sewing-machine, which was a special present to Gertrude's mother.

The great question now was, Who could have sent these splendid presents? It was only after many of the parcels had been unrolled that they came to a little box about a foot square, which was marked with Gertrude's name, and which revealed the name of the giver. The box was opened, and it contained a beautiful gilt-edged Bible, with this inscrption on the back of it, in large letters: "To Gertrude Alling, from the King of Prussia."

Had the two boxes fallen from the clouds they could scarcely have created more surprise in that little family than these did, when it was known that they were from the King of Prussia himself, as presents to an humble but patriotic and faithful family. In the inside of the Bible were these words, written in the king's own handwriting, and signed by his name.

"Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as 'snow;' though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." "My doctrines shall 'drop' as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as showers upon the grass."

Now, it was plain enough that this was the king's return for the basket of snow-drops, though the thought of receiving a present for them never once crossed Gertrude's pure mind.

How Jesus Loves.

The blessed Master in giving parting instructions to his disciples said, "If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love." The first feeling that would naturally arise in the minds of the simple-hearted disciples would be a desire to know their Teacher's commandments. He soon tells them; for he immediately says, "This is my commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you." A great deal seems to depend on that little word as; and like the faithful learners of old, we would like to follow our Jesus a little to know how he loved.

We ask, Did Jesus merely pour out an effusion or gush of love from his full heart in congenial affection among the people; or did he do something more tangible? Let us see. Let us examine his life a little.

In the first place he made himself of no reputation. His starting-point was to be born in a stable and laid in a manger. This lowly position his all-wise Father saw to be best for him and here he placed him. Thus starting in an humble way, did Jesus seek to rise to high estate in this world's goods and class himself with the rich and proud? No! He took upon him the form of a servant, and was oppressed and afflicted; not opening his mouth. Mark it—He opened not his mouth. He never went to man for redress, or to tell his troubles, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously. In following his footsteps through life, we see him, all along, a homeless wanderer, with no certain dwelling place. Did Jesus feel this lonely condition, or was he entirely above human feeling? Let us see. When one said to him, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest, he replied, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head. Here he shows that his heart naturally yearned for a resting place, and he watched the lower animals, how they had each one its own abode. Did Jesus then yield to the natural longings of his warm, congenial nature? No, he choose not to seek a home here, but was faithful to him that appointed him. As to his food, he was fed from the bounty of others; and sometimes blessed and multiplied the bread, so as to feed his followers. But we ask, Why did Jesus subject himself to all this? Was it necessary? We say yes, in order to fulfil his mission. The gospel was preached to the poor; the rich would not receive it; and in order to reach them he went right among them. This is the way Jesus loved. He went about continually doing good. He healed all that had need of healing.

O let us love one another as Jesus loved; and let us learn fresh lessons of the meek and lowly one, every day.

Letters and Extracts.

Bethel, Vt., March 23, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I feel to thank God that he has raised up a band of bold, earnest soldiers that are ready to stand in defence of the gospel truths as they are given us in the Scriptures of divine truth. While reading my paper of the 18th, and also those before it, I was pleased to see some statements tending to charity for others that do not see as we of the Herald do, in the doctrine of life; some of them made by the Editor, not merely because he was once a Methodist, but because I love the spirit of toleration in my brethren; and I will give you my reason for it.

I was brought up a Methodist, and was taught in their traditions, and of course believed them to be right. One thing was so; that was, the Bible is true. That I still believe to be correct; but for the correctness of their expositions I cannot vouch. Some say it is because I have read Geo. Storrs' works; but this was not what turned me against their doctrine. It was because I failed to see that the Bible taught their views when I came to examine for myself. I was refused the Bible Examiner to read as it was not a magazine that was fit for thinking men to read. But I heeded the injunction, "Search the Scriptures; for in them, ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they that testify of me." Jesus says, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Then I failed to see how man had an immortal soul; which they affirm to be a fact, although all Scripture testimony is against them. But there are some honest ones among them yet; and my prayer is, that they may see the light of truth. If I were able to do it, I would order papers and books to send some preaching friends, but as I have not funds I will pray God to move upon the hearts of some that have to use it to his glory, and he will do it; and the promised blessings of the Lord will be given those who do his will.

Milwaukee, Wis., March 30, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I have received your paper for a long time, and must be in your debt quite a sum; but I have not the money to send you, nor do I know when I can send it. I say this with sorrow and regret; for of all things I dislike indebtedness to any one. It may be best for you to discontinue your paper to me, as much as I dislike to say so. It is meat in due season, and it contains the gospel hope. Its truths are precious and comforting to the lonely traveller here. You have preached the gospel for many years; but trials and temptations are what we pass through here; and we bless God that there is a hope beyond this vale of tears; and those that sleep in Jesus will be remembered and raised to immortality and eternal life. It is these comforting promises that cheer me; for I know what our Saviour has said, he will perform. I often think of those that have not had the gospel light we have, and are not blessed with Christian parents and their pious examples, and prayers for them; and it is our prayer that God will so teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom and understanding. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and a good understanding have all they that keep thy law. Yours in Christian fellowship and love for the truth.

Note by the Editor.—Your paper will continue to be sent to you. May it be a blessing.

From Charles H. Robinson.

Greenwich, N. Y., April 5, 1868.

Br. Storrs: Permit me, though a stranger, to address you on the all-important theme of "Life only in Christ;" and more especially to add my personal experience in bursting the bonds of orthodoxy. Born and reared in its arms, of course I embraced its teachings as a "Thus saith the Lord," and the shibboleth of the true faith. Years passed on, and the inquiry forced itself upon my mind, Are these things consistent with God's character? I instinctively shrank from it; and, as is often the case, seized upon Universal salvation as the only hope of a fallen race. Still, my mind was not at ease; and, in the midst of conflicting theories, became almost an infidel. "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." These words came to me, like the sword of the Spirit; and, like Paul, I found it hard to "kick against the pricks."

One year since I found peace in believing on the Lord Jesus Christ, and received the right hand of fellowship in the Methodist E. Church. There was still a mystery in the orthodox idea of atonement which I could not solve or reconcile; and while my faith was still strong, I was in doubt. During the Fall of '67, a friend placed in my hand Elder Blain's "Death not Life:" and requested me to read it, think of the truths therein taught, and candidly judge of its merits. I read it, and laid it aside; but like Mary, "pondered these things in my heart." I read my Bible and compared it with the little book, and made up my mind to investigate the matter more fully. I obtained your "Six Sermons" from a believer in the Life views you advocate, and the scales began to fall from my eyes, and new beauties sprang forth; I could now harmonize what before seemed chaos to me. But ah, "the morning cometh." I read your tract on Atonement, and I assure you the veritable presence of the Lord seemed to illuminate my mind, and brought joy and peace; it all seemed clear to me now; and how easily could I appreciate our Saviour's words to Martha at the grave of Lazarus; "I am the resurrection and the life." How sublime seemed the words of the Master at the last supper, "Take, eat, this is my body which is given for you;" also, "This is my blood which is shed for you."

I am assailed on the right hand and on the left; but my faith is strong; and, though I am compelled to retire from the Orthodox church, I shall count it all joy. And now my aged brother, it must bring joy to your heart to know that your "labor is not in vain in the Lord;" for, I deem it through your efforts to benefit mankind that I can to-day see "the truth as it is in Christ Jesus." I am a subscriber for the Herald of Life, which is a welcome messenger in my household; and may you long be spared to lead on the flock.

Please send me 10 copies of "Life from the Dead;" also, the "Watch Tower." Enclosed find necessary funds.

Your brother in the faith.

Chillicothe, Mo., March 29, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I love the Herald, and love to see it prosper; that is, I love the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," but I am a stranger in a strange land, where the subject of "Inherent Immortality," even, has scarcely been questioned until I came here; and my weak voice can hardly be heard among so many worshippers of Baal. I am trying to lift up the standard of the gospel wherever I have opportunity; to show, and to prove that Jesus Christ is "King of the Jews," as well as the "Lamb of Calvary;" that the good news of the coming kingdom and reign of Christ, is primarily the gospel, rather than the death of Christ. That the death of Christ was necessary in the plan of salvation; but that the kingdom and glorious reign of Christ is the object of faith. That as life, eternal life is not promised to any one without belief in Jesus of Nazareth; so there is no promise of eternal life to any one except those who believe in the coming reign of Christ.

Br. Storrs: It does appear to me that some how or other there is, at the present day, a great shaking among the dry bones; men are waking up and beginning to rub their eyes in earnest; and if we could interpret their thoughts, I think their inquiry would be, "Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night?" Surely, it is high time to awake, for the night is far spent, and the day is at hand: and some are actually beginning to find out that there is light ahead; and in view of this fact, are moving forward. My prayer to God is, that they may keep on moving, until they get as thoroughly hemmed in as did the children of Israel on moving from their Egyptian bondage; and this they certainly will do if they proceed. Then the next thing will be, to prove God's high hand of deliverance.

This has been a good day to me: and I may say, to many others also, while listening to the precious truths of God's word as preached by Br. Wendell, at the Union street Methodist E. Church. It was a plain, simple, powerful presentation of the Bible argument for life hereafter to none but those who have been baptized into Christ; put on Christ; walk in Christ; live with Christ, and fall asleep in Christ. Surely it is a clear case; and we may add in the words of the preacher, Eccl. iv., 10, "But woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up." If we be dead with Christ, we shall also live with him: if we have no hope in him, and are living without God, and die without him, then have we no God; for he "is not the God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him." How? By virtue of their union with Christ, their living head; his life is the pledge of theirs; and because he lives, they shall live also. Faith in the promised seed secured life in the future, by promise, to those who possessed it back of the birth of Christ; faith in the seed manifested, secures life by promise to all this side of that event.

Now we understand the import of the words, "for all live unto him;" the body complete, with every member perfected from head to feet; all live in his divine purpose; and just so sure as he lives, when the time of the promise comes "I will raise him up at the last day," it will be fulfilled in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.

There are many of the members of that Methodist church who have been greatly blessed under the preaching of Br. Scott, who is a faithful minister of Christ, of that denomination; and not only they, but others also who are hungering for the bread of life have had a privilege, for the last two years, rarely found in this day of dearth. Alas, how few laborers in this vast harvest-field; how few to really feed the flock of God; how little digging down deep to find the rock foundation: and notwithstanding all the heaps of professed teachers, never was the language of our blessed Lord more appropriate than now, "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth more laborers into his harvest." I rejoice, however, that God has a light set here and there, and it is the privilege of all sects and parties, and of no sects or paries, to come within its blessed illuminating radius that they may try themselves by its sin-discovering and manifesting purity, and thus be rid of all the stains, the spots, the wrinkles, and be found as a bride adorned for her husband. Yours, in hope of life.

Br. Storrs: Br. Burbank mentioned, in an article of his, a few weeks ago, that I was expected to come and be Matron of the Dorcas Mission Home. I came three weeks ago today, not doubting but the Lord led me. It was not my own choice, but the Lord has led me in paths that I knew not; and I say, blessed be his holy name. His will, not mine, be done. When we give ourselves to the Lord unreservedly, we have at the same time to give up our own wills, and sit submissively at his feet, looking up and saying, "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" Sometimes the Lord has to deal a long time with his children, and exercise much patience toward them before they become entirely submissive; but when the will is all broken down, and they can pray from the heart, even in the most trying circumstances, "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done," then it is all easy. The yoke is easy and the burden light. Then we can learn of him who is meek and lowly in heart, and find rest to our soul. Sometimes we struggle hard before coming to this position, but when once attained, it is the most blessed of all states to be in.

Our work here we feel to be a very simple one. We live by faith, not by sight. Getting only day by day our daily bread. We feel our entire dependence on our heavenly Father, and he has hitherto supplied out of his abundant fullness. The promises are very precious to us, and we have many opportunities of pleading them. We often read Luke xii., 22, and on, with great satisfaction. Also many such promises, which teach us not to be careful about the things which perish with the using, but rather to seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and other things will be added.

You well know the object of this mission; that we, in every way, care for orphans and fatherless children. We feel as if the Lord would have us do so, and not having the means, we look to that same Father to feed us with food convenient for us: and we all cheerfully give our services, knowing that he who clothes the lilies of the field will also clothe us; and if we continue faithful to the end will give us the reward of the inheritance.

The tribulations of the last days seem to begin to press; and this pressure makes the Lord's children cry out, Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. It also seems as if the faith of all is being tried.

May the Lord help us all so to run that we may obtain. My address is 708 Lombard St.

How to Keep Poor.—The Detroit Union says there is no working man but would rejoice to have the way pointed out by which he might honestly attain riches. No one would thank us for a prescription to insure poverty, and yet there is many a man who keeps himself poor by indulging in the following: Two glasses of ale per day, at 10 cents, $73; three cigars, one after each meal, $109 50; board for a big dog, $30—all in one year $212 50; sufficient to buy six barrels of flour, one barrel of sugar, one sack of coffee, a good coat, a respectable dress, a frock for the baby, and half a dozen pairs of shoes. If you don't believe it, workingmen, figure for yourselves.

A sharp student was called up by the worthy professor of a celebrated college, and asked the question:

"Can a man see without eyes?"

"Yes, sir," was the prompt answer.

"How, sir," cried the amazed professor, "can a man see without eyes? Pray, sir, how do you make that out?"

"He can see with one, sir," replied the ready-witted youth, and the whole class shoutek with delight at the triumph over metaphysics.

The Unasked Good.—The prayer which Socrates taught his disciple Alcibiades deserves a place in the daily devotions of every Christian: "That he should beseech the Supreme God to give him what was good for him, though he should not ask it, and to withhold from him whatever would be hurtful, though he should be so foolish as to pray for it."

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not Heaven, is to be the Inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity; by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or, The Wicked Dead remain eternally under Death's Dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letters to a Clergyman; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburg, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for 2 cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our own expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22, 1868. VOLUME V.—NUMBER 29. WHOLE NUMBER 219.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 48 cents additional.

The Postage on the Herald of Life, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All Letters relating to the Herald of Life, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,058,
New York.

All names of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

The Coming of Christ.

The precise time no man can tell, and no man may presume to tell. For "of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven." Nevertheless his disciples are commanded to watch, and take heed to themselves, lest that day come upon them unawares. "For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."

Though we cannot fully ascertain the times and the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power, yet things revealed belong to us and our children. And we may approximate sufficiently near for all practical and useful purposes; for faith and hope, for the comfort of hope, and the full assurance of faith. A multitude of signs are given, which are to precede that day, so that no one need be taken by surprise; and they were given for the express purpose that the disciples of Christ may know when the time draweth near. Signs were given which clearly indicated the first coming of Christ, and the manner of it. For not understanding and appreciating them, the Jews were severely rebuked. To study the signs of the times is to compare passing events with the declarations of Scripture. This they did not, and hence rejected the boon of heaven, the best gift of God to man.

It is a merciful providence, which in all past ages has furnished signs of impending revolutions, and changes, both in the natural and moral word. Signs precede the gentle shower—signs indicate the tempest—signs portend the fearful tornado—signs foreshadow the terrible volcanic eruption—signs warn the nations of the approaching dreadful earthquake; and seldom a person dies who has not some premonition of his coming end. Even the animal creation seem endowed with an instinct forewarning them when danger is nigh. So perfect were the signs which Christ gave his disciples, that were to usher in the siege and destruction of the temple and city, and the dispersion of the remnant of Israel to the four winds of heaven, and so assiduously did they regard them that not a single Christian is said to have perished in that memorable visitation. Had they regarded the signs of the times as of little value, as many now do, they must have shared the fate of the unbelieving Jews, pent up within the walls of the doomed city.

If we would know where we stand in the world's history—I mean that history drawn by the pen of inspiration, declaring the end from the beginning—we must compare the sacred record with passing, as well as with past events. Signs have been constantly accumulating, and the light we now have is vastly superior to that enjoyed by Luther and his associates at the dawn of the Reformation. The providence of God has been steadily unfolding one scene after another before written in his word. We can see that, in their precursory fulfilment, six of the seals have been opened—that six of the trumpets have been blown, and six of the vials poured out, and that the events symbolized by them have nearly all come or are coming to pass. And we can see what Luther and his associate reformers could not, that the rainbow angel was an apt symbol of him and them. The angel held in his hand a little book, and the book was open, and the earth was lightened at his presence; and when taken and eaten up, though sweet to the taste, it proved in the end to be bitter indeed. He and they held in their hand the open Bible, and gave it to their people. It was received with gladness of heart, and valued above all price. But it became to them exceedingly bitter in the persecutions which they endured for the word's sake. How expressive the symbol, and wonderful the illustration! We are indebted to the light of that open book, yet within the dominions of the mother of harlots, the holding and reading of the Bible, though sweet as living waters, is still bitter in the sufferings endured for it. Even the possession of it is a crime.

What, then, are the present indications? What the signs that betoken the coming day? Watchman, tell us what thou seest. Oh, Daniel, a man greatly beloved, what understanding hast thou in the matter? When shall the great Prince who standeth for the children of thy people, deliver them? When are the sleepers to awake who are to shine as the brightness of the firmament, and as the stars forever and ever? In the time of the end "many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased. Many shall be purified and made white and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand."

The visible sign is obvious, and is in the mouth of all men. Since the invention of the mariners' compass and the printing art, how astonishing the increase of knowledge, especially for the last half century! In every department of human enterprise, what a mighty impulse. The whole earth seems agitated and in motion. Mind is in collision with mind, educing light, and men are in journeyings oft. Mountains are scaled, plains and deserts passed, lakes, seas and oceans traversed, and in the ordinary business of the day, and with lightning speed. Such facilities of communication have thrown open the nations to the rapid dissemination of knowledge. Accordingly, the Bible has been translated into almost every known tongue, and circulated more or less extensively among nearly every people. Tracts have been printed, and millions on millions of pages given to the four winds. Missionaries have gone to different heathen nations to publish the name of Christ, and announce his coming and kingdom. This running to and fro and increase of knowledge corresponds with the sign given by the Lord Jesus, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come. And the gospel must first be published among all nations for a testimony against them." The same sign is given in the symbolical representations of John, as immediately to precede the opening wonders of that day. "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come, and worship him that made heaven and earth, the sea, and the fountains of waters." That angel is on the wing, and hence the time draweth nigh.

But the wicked shall do wickedly: this sign demands special notice. It is indicated by Christ, fully expressed by Peter, and confirmed by Jude. It is a prominent sign of the near approach of that day. "And Jesus spake a parable unto them that men ought always to pray and not to faint." The widow obtained her cause by her continued coming. "And shall not God avenge his own elect who cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them?" He has borne with them for many ages. "I tell you that he will avenge them speedily;" when he shall arise to judgment, a short work will the Lord make upon the earth. "Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh" to do this work, "shall he find faith on the earth?" Taken in its connection, no stronger affirmation can be given that the vast world will be sunk in a state of total unbelief of his coming and kingdom. That faith in his appearing in the glory of the Father, with the holy angels, and in the clouds of heaven, will be confined to the remnant of faithful witnesses, who have prophesied in sackcloth for nearly twelve hundred and sixty years.

From the time of his ascension, till past the middle of the third century, not a dissenting voice is to be heard within the pale of the primitive churches. It was the universal belief that the Lord Jesus was to come and reign with his saints on earth. Origen was the first to reject the plain meaning of Scripture, and adopt the allegorical mode of interpretation. From that period the spiritual rule obtained. Large portions of the Bible were soon turned into fable, and its noblest teachings discarded from its pages. What now is the aspect of the great question? Vast multitudes reject that blessed hope, while few there be that cherish it. Peter in regard to this sign is more full and explicit. He describes clearly the prospect when the marvellous things of that day shall be near at hand. "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, damnable heresies, covetousness, uncleanness, presumptuous and self-willed, having eyes full of adultery, following the way of Balaam, speaking great swelling words of vanity, servants of corruption. Beloved, I write to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance. Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, impious persons, walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." How true to the life? Such is the position of the entire Papal world; of the Greek Church; of the English establishment, and of vast many in Protestant churches. So true it is, that the few who embrace the hope of Israel, even that blessed hope, are as the shaking of an olive tree, or as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done.

But this is not all. The coming and reign of Christ is made a matter of scoffing. Learned men disdain the idea, and the great men of earth, and your statesmen, laugh at it over their cups, and in discussing matters of state will tell you that such and such measures cannot be carried here, but may be "in kingdom come." In view of it, witticisms and sneering pleasantries have often been indulged. Jude fully confirms this representation. "Beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken by the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ. How that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts." In the midst of scenes like these, "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment." This sign, as well as the others, must be obvious to such as have eyes to see and ears to hear.

There are other signs clearly indicating the nearness of the grand consummation. How significant the wasting of the Mohammedan empire, the twofold woe of the Christian population of the East, the steady enlargement of Gog's dominion, and the augmentation of his power, despite the alliance of Protestant England, Papal France and other catholic states, to preserve and perpetuate the rule of that oppressive slaughtering race! But the Moslem must fall, and his dominion cease, for Gog's career will not end till he reaches the mountains of Israel.

When ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors. There soon will be heard a great voice of much people, "saying Allelulia; salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God. For true and righteous are his judgments. And a voice out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great; and the voice of a great multitude, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying Allelulia; let us be glad, and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her it will be granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white." And it is written, "Blessed are they who are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." Then will be seen the great multitude which no man can number, of all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues, standing before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes and palms in their hands; and the harpers standing on Mount Zion harping the new song of triumph, and proclaiming the kingdoms of this world to be the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, and his universal and everlasting reign. Then will be heard the thrilling announcement, "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men," . . . in "that great city, the holy Jerusalem;" . . . in the light of which the nations of them that are saved shall walk.—Selected.

Br. Storrs: I have received a copy of a new work called "Catechesis; or, Scriptural Instruction on Mortality, Immortality and Judgment."

The work evidently has been gotten up for the especial purpose of counteracting the influence of the doctrine of "Life only in Christ;" or, in other words, "The wicked dead will not live again." The object of this work is to show that men are raised mortal, and changed to immortality afterward. When I first glanced over the work I thought it was not worth noticing. But after reading it over carefully, I came to the conclusion that some persons might, possibly, be deceived by it, and therefore it might be well to give it a notice.

After some twenty years' opposition to the non-living of the wicked dead; and bringing all the talent they could find to bear against the doctrine, by this last effort, viz., "The Righteous as well as the wicked come up mortal," they acknowledge that the doctrine of the last twenty odd years, which they have been teaching, is wrong. And now, the last grand effort to evade the conclusion, that if the wicked dead come up in the resurrection, they come up immortal, incorruptible, and cannot die any more, they assume that all come up mortal, and the change takes place afterward. This reminds me of a conversation with a Br. some years ago, who wished me to purchase Hudson's work, as one well adapted to "enter all the metaphysical rat holes, and expose all the errors of the day." I remarked, then, that the doctrine of no resurrection to any except those in Christ, in time, would drive them all into the rat holes; and they would find hard work to get out again. And we are living to see this statement verified more and more every day. This Catechesis commences very well; and is well calculated to deceive.

"1. What was the 'first man, Adam?' and where did he come from? Ans.—He was dust 'formed into a living soul,' and came out of the ground. Gen. ii., 7; iii., 19.

"Ques. 6.—Does the fact of a body, or bodies, many or few, being created out of the dust some 6,000 years after the creation of the first man from dust, destroy the principle contained in Paul's words, 'out of the earth, earthy?' Ans.—Certainly not; time works no change in the principles of the Deity. Hence the new creations of dust, when they 'come forth' from the earth to judgment, are 'earthy,' and being earthy, their earthiness is corruptible, honorless, weak, and soulish, or sensual."

Now, four of the first six questions he backs up with quotations from Scripture; but question four and six, this last one, he has no Scripture text; for the very good reason there is none in the Bible. It is bogus. Why did he not quote 1 Cor. xv., "So also is the resurrection of the dead; it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption." No, they do not want Paul's resurrection. Hence the "new creation of dust come forth from the earth, earthy." What did Paul know away back eighteen hundred years ago!

"Ques. 7.—If all come forth from graves 'earthy bodies' do they come forth to one and the same end? Ans.—No: some come forth to justification of life, and others of them to condemnation. John v., 29."

John does not say one word of all coming forth from graves "earthy bodies." It is a direct, shall I say libel against John's or Jesus' whole teaching. We challenge any man to show that Jesus ever taught that any man will come from the grave an "earthy body." But Jesus did say, very emphatically, "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection of the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage;" [what is to hinder them if they are a new creation of dust, according to Ans. Art. 6?] "Neither can they die any more," [why not, if they are earthy, according to the same article?] "for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Luke xx., 35.

Now the angels are not earthy. But then Ans. to Art. 6, does not say anything about a resurrection; but a "new creation of dust." He ignores the resurrection in said article.

"Art. 9.—What is mortality? Ans.—An earthy body in living action; or life manifested through an earthy body; and therefore, from the constitution of the body, terminable life."

If so, how does this mortal body live again? No Scripture proof for this article.

"10.—Do mankind in particular stand related to any other kind or sort of body, or nature than to the earthy? If so, what is it? Ans.—Yes, a portion of mankind are related to what Paul terms the spiritual body; or, quickening spirit. 1 Cor. xv., 44, 45.

"11.—Where does the spiritual body come from? Ans.—Out of heaven; the second Man is the Lord from heaven. 1 Cor. xv., 47.

"12.—Does not the spiritual body come out of the grave? Ans.—How is it possible, in view of Paul's principle, that what comes 'out of the earth is earthy,' not spiritual; and that the spiritual body is our house which is from heaven? 2 Cor. v. 2."

Paul nowhere says any such thing. He says, the first man was of the earth, earthy: the second man is, or will be, the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly . . . and the dead shall be raised incorruptible."

One moment about this house which is from heaven. Mark, in Ques. 6, "Bodies created out of the dust 6,000 years after the first man was created from the dust, does not destroy the principle, 'out of the earth, earthy." The answer is, "Certainly not."

Now then, we have earthy bodies after the lapse of 6,000 years. "Hence the new creations of dust when they come forth from the earth to judgment, are earthy, and being earthy, their earthiness is corruptible, honorless, weak, and soulish, or sensual." (Ans. to 6.) Here he denies the resurrection of the dead, altogether; and calls it a new creation of dust; and without any distinction, calls them corruptible, honorless, weak, and soulish or sensual.

No wonder he makes no reference to any passage of Scripture on this article. I wonder if he had in his mind 1 Cor. xv., "So also, is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption." "It," what? Why the corruptible man. "It is raised in incorruption." "It," what? Why, the corruptible man. Not, it was raised, or made a "new creation of dust, sensual, and then changed afterward." No, Paul says, it was raised in incorruption. "It is sown in dishonor." "It," what? Why, the mortal, honorless man. "It," the same man, "is raised in glory." Not as Catechesis says—"A new creation of dust, weak, and soulish, or sensual." But in the language of the apostle, "It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. It is sown a natural, or animal body. "It," the same, "is raised a spiritual body."

But, asks Catechesis, "Does the spiritual body come out of the ground?" We answer, It comes just from where God has hid it with Christ; and "when he who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him;" and then it will be known where we come from. But, says Catechesis, "For in this (earthly house) we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven; 2 Cor. v., 2. Now that which comes out of the earth is earthy." Art. 12. In Phil. iii., 21, we read, "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself." Here, then, according to Catechesis, we have a house spiritual, "not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Now, we would ask the question, Who is going to inhabit this heavenly house? Is there some immortal soul substance, that orthodoxy speaks of, going to crawl into this spiritual house? Who is the "we" that Paul speaks of, when he says, "we know if this earthly house of our tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens?" Well, if this house has always been eternal in the heavens, waiting for some one to inhabit it, what will become of it when the time comes to change our vile body and fashion it like unto his glorious body? Will we need two houses? for, the promise to the newly fashioned body is, that it shall inherit the earth, and dwell therein forever; while this spiritual house which Catechesis speaks of, is eternal in the heavens.

These gospel menders are like the Murray Grammars; they have been mended so often, and so many patches put on that it is very hard to distinguish any of the old from the new.

"Men for the Times."

The following is the substance of a discourse, by Rev. Mr. Rowland, in one of the theatres, in Cincinnati, Ohio, Sunday, April 5th. We commend it to our readers, and hope it may be of lasting benefit to us all. It is for "those who believe something with their whole minds and hearts." Till we do thus believe, we can none of us be men for the times. Let all believers in "Life only in Christ" ponder well the sentiments contained in this discourse, and ask ourselves, Do we "believe, with all our minds and hearts" the grand and glorious truth of Life in Christ alone? Do we manifest our faith by our works in a manner that demonstrates our faith is real? Mr. Rowland spoke as follows:

There is a passage in the writings of the apostle Paul so germinal of what I have to say upon the subject selected for to-day's meeting that, although it may seem to you very much like perverting, I cannot help making it my text. That passage is in 1 Cor. xvi., 13–14, and reads: "Watch ye. Stand fast in the faith. Quit you like men. Be strong. Let all your things be done with charity."

These short and pithy expressions doubtless seem to you, as I read them, the warm but disconnected utterances of one who was solicitous concerning the activity of the Corinthian converts. If you will examine them closely, however, you will find them all circling about the central thought of a true life, and all adapted to bring that life to its highest development.

A true life is one which grows harmoniously outwardly and inwardly; or, in other words, a man must act right and believe right. No one can be a good and glorious man who does not keep himself unspotted from vice, who does not have his mind stored with right principles, and who does not act out these principles resolutely and lovingly before the world—men with earnest and intelligent convictions—men who guard themselves against all littleness and sin—men who will not be ashamed to live positive and brave lives in the face of their fellow men—these are the characters for whom the world is longing, men for this and all time; and just such men obedience to all of the precepts of this passage will be sure to produce. Assuming that this will appear, as we discuss the various precepts of the passage before us, let us begin with the first one.

"Watch ye." An army in an enemy's country always throw out strong lines of pickets. At every possible avenue of approach is stationed a little squad of men, who, with unceasing vigilance, watch for the appearance of the foe. Through the long winter night, when the sleet is coating musket and cap, and smiting the face with its stinging lash, and when the slightest spark of fire would only light the way to his heart for the foeman's bullet, the guard stands shivering with cold, but with eye ever peering into the darkness, and with ear ever open to catch the softest tread. This painful vigilance is the safety of the army. There can be no success without it. Were the barriers to be taken down, and the enemy suffered to steal into the camp, all would be lost.

Now, every man occupies precisely the position of an army in an enemy's country. Around him are swarms of foes eager to invade the camp of his will. Slothfulness, sin, false pride, and a host of other enemies to everything that is noble and good, stand ready, when the pickets are withdrawn, to rush in and overpower the better forces of the heart. But these once having entered, there is an end to true manhood. To be men for the times, then, you must watch. Standing firm on your guard, you must make each thought and wish bend over the bayonet of a determined resolve and give the password Holiness before you allow them to enter. Nor must you scruple, if they cannot give this password, to thrust them at once through the heart. Watchfulness is, then, the first step to a true manhood. The second is found in the words, "Stand fast in the faith."

The connection between what a man believes and what he does is closer than many seem to suppose. The fact is, no man can act very long what he does not thoroughly believe. All the heroes the world has ever seen have been men who have made themselves a political or religious formulary, wrote under this "credo," and then stood up against all odds to defend and die for it. There never was a grand epoch in the world's history, but that it was the birth-throe of some grand idea. There never was a leader in civil or moral reform who had not had the articles of some glorious creed burned into his heart. Paul, and Luther, and Bright, and Cromwell and Knox, and Garrison, and Lincoln, and all the other positive and heroic men of all time, have been those who believed something with their whole minds and hearts.

Of inestimable importance is it, then, if we would be men for the times, to stand fast in some true and grand faith. The great difficulty with this age is, men do not enough understand and fix themselves upon principles. Even Christian people have learned to snore and sleep under sermons and addresses which aim to expound some doctrine of that creed whose doctrines they profess to accept. We must take all our truth in homœopathic doses, and sugar-coated at that. But this will not, and cannot make strong characters. Positive men, since the world began, have had a set of principles wrought into their being, like the iron atoms of the blood, which gave their muscle and backbone. Would we be men for the times, we must be like them in this—fasten upon a faith (and you will find none better than the faith in Jesus), and stand fast in it, come what may.

Then, 3d, we must "Quit ourselves like men."

A very poor soldier would that be who should never get out from behind breastworks. To make men veterans you must give them the order Wellington gave at Waterloo, "Up, boys, and at them!" There must be the long marches in the enemy's country; the fording of deep rivers; the sleeping out in the field with no canopy but heaven; the standing up in line when shells are falling and bullets are shrieking, and men dying around you; the fixing of bayonets and kneeling to receive the impetuous onslaught, and then the fierce counter-charge up the hillside in the face of the belching volleys and over abatis and breastworks—all this year before you can be a complete soldier.

Just so, no man can be a complete man until he comes out into actual fight and struggle. The men for the times are these who, having watched and prepared themselves for struggle, and having fastened upon a good set of principles, do not fear to carry these into exercise everywhere about them; men who hear the call of duty and hesitate not a moment to go to whatever lengths she may lead; men who hear in this command, quit you like men, the shout of their Divine leader ring in their ears as they stand on the edge of battle, and who, in obedience to it, accept all sacrifices and wounds that the doing of his will and their duty may involve.

4th. We must "Be strong."

This precept I understand to refer mainly to the inner life. A man must not only have a creed, but he must be strong in it, ready to defend it in every possible way against his adversaries. A man will be good and generous always in proportion to the breadth and generosity of his faith. The hardshell Baptist, who believes only in the doctrine of election, can never be anything more than a narrow bigot. The lawyer who has read only the first chapter of Blackstone, will never be any thing more than a pettifogger. The merchant who knows no more of the laws of trade than is sufficient to enable him to sell a yard of calico, will never be more than a clerk; and so everywhere. To be real, good, strong men, the men for the times, we must study, we must grow in mental and spiritual stature day after day.

And then, to insure all, we must let every thing we do be done with love or kindness. Gentleman is a very hackneyed and misused word, but it is the only one term which expresses exactly what obedience to all these precepts of the apostle will produce. The men for the times are not merely those who will have intelligent convictions of truth, and be ready to maintain them, but those who while they act boldly and resolutely and without the least sacrifice of principle, attract all others to them by the display of a living and tender heart.

In a word, the men for the times are Christian gentlemen; men who guard themselves against every unholiness and littleness, and dishonor; who stand fast in a faith which grasps tight hold of the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour and leader, who quit themselves like men, in the struggle the times present between the right and the wrong, who are strong in all that belongs to a live conception of the wants of the age and the work to be done, and who, like their Master, do all things so kindly as well as so resolutely, that others feel constrained to respect them, and range themselves under their banners.

The Locomotive Argument.

While Eld. D. S. Clark, was preaching in Sparland this winter and sinners were being converted to the truth by scores, a pamphlet was circulated by the opposers, entitled, Bible Doctrine of Immortality. It was written by Hiram Mat'ison, a minister of the M.E. Church, a man who has had considerable experience in fighting against the truth, and who ought by this time to fully understand the position we take on the immortality question; but he wofully, and I think wilfully, mistakes our position in his pamphlet. Being sent for by Br. Clark to assist him in his arduous labors for a while, I had the pleasure of reviewing the aforesaid book one evening, and was so enabled to show up its sophistry, falsehoods, and weakness, that the book turned for a weapon in our favor. In this review I introduced what I call the locomotive argument with so good effect that I thought to transcribe it for The Voice. The position of Mr. M.'s argument is (1) Man has a spirit separate and distinct from his body; (2) The body cannot act without the spirit. It is the spirit that causes thought, emotion, action; (3) Therefore the spirit can think, feel, and act separate from the body, and is really the man. The locomotive argument is this. You look down upon the railway track and see a beautiful machine standing there motionless, yet complete in all its parts; and you inquire what it is, and what it is for. You are told it is a "locomotive," and its name indicates its use, namely: "loco," place and "motive," moving power. Therefore it is a power to move from place to place, and to draw with it heavy freights. A third person steps up and says that is a mistake. What you see before you is merely inert matter: iron, that has no power whatever, and it is not the "locomotive," because it does not move anything. The steam is the power which causes all the motion and does all the work, and consequently the steam is the locomotive. After a little you are convinced this is so, and you say immediately, "away with this inert mass of iron! The steam is the locomotive. Away with this useless engine, and hitch on the steam to the forward car, and move off." Will it do it? No more can the spirit of man do its work without the body. It takes the engine and steam together to do the work, and so it takes the body and spirit together to make a thinking man.

And still more than this, our opponent says that if the spirit ever means the breath, then man's spirit never leaves him, for the breath is mere air, and air is found in the nostrils and lungs of a dead man, and if breath, or air, is all that is wanting, the dead man has that. Now for the "locomotive" argument on this. Suppose a lad standing near during the discussion of the steam power question, and becoming convinced that the steam is the active agency for moving the machine, should say "I can move the whole thing and prove it true." In a trice he heats a kettle of water, and bringing it on, succeeds in filling the cylinders with steam; but there is no motion. What is the matter? Isn't the steam the same that the engineer admits into the engine? Precisely the same. Why don't it move? For the same reason that a dead man doesn't move, even though there may the same kind of spirit in him that God breathed into his nostrils in the first. Let the engineer take charge of the engine, and with a full head of steam open the throttle valves, and then comes the powers, and motion, and behold a thing of life. So let the Almighty breath into the nostrils of man the "breath of life" and man becomes a "living animal." Let him take "away their breath, they die and return to their dust." (Ps. civ., 29). Without the steam the locomotive has no power, and without the locomotive the steam has no power. So, without the spirit the body has no power, and without the body the spirit has no power.

One or two other comparisons might be drawn from the same illustrative argument; but I will close. Mr. Mattison's whole argument for immortality is based on the supposition that man has a spirit separate from the body, and therefore it can act when the body is dead, which is a conclusion utterly without foundation. This book abounds in misrepresentations, falsehood, and ridicule.

Self-Pleasing.

"And not please ourselves." This apostolic injunction should speak forcibly to every heart: for who is there among us that does not often transgress in this respect? Many who would shrink from the epithet selfish, may still be termed self-pleasers. Their very virtues are not free from this imputation. Those duties which they most faithfully perform are the ones for which they feel a natural inclination; not always those which in reality should demand their first attention. It is easy to talk of adaptation and diversity of gifts, and the like; but we usually find people selecting those spheres of action which seem most attractive to them, and not those which, though needful, are repulsive to their tastes. It is well for us duly to consider the motive from whence our actions spring. Let us strive to please the Lord, and not to please ourselves. The work that he calls us to do may seem very insignificant and menial. It may be mere household drudgery—some office without a particular honor. It may be the hardest of all things; waiting, keeping still, standing idle in the vineyard; and yet we may thereby glorify him; and what more could the most active laborer do? We must please him and not ourselves.

"And if some things I do not ask
In my cup of blessing be,
I would have my spirit filled the more
With grateful love to thee,
And carefulness to serve the more
And please thee perfectly."

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, APRIL 22, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"Adventism" Again.

We made some remarks last week on this new work, published by the "Western Advent Christian Association," and expressed our regret that the "Two Parts" had not been published separately, believing the separation would have increased the value of Part II., on the Relation of the Advent to Prophecy. The author, doubtless, thought the cause would be better promoted by coupling them together; but we are quite sure the result will prove he was mistaken; for while he has introduced much that is valuable in Part I., he has so interwoven untenable matters that its force is broken, and the whole will be a burden, instead of a help, to Adventism. We briefly noticed some difficulties of his "Theology" last week, but our time and space would not permit more then.

Of the "second coming of Christ," he says, "While this event shall bring salvation to God's people, it will, at the same time, bring destruction to the impenitent:" p. 5.

This expression implies a simultaneous decision in relation to both classes, to which we do not object with our belief of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead. But the author of "Adventism" maintains a universal resurrection, and that to witness the descent of Christ from heaven; for he says: "All will see the Saviour come in the clouds of heaven, and sinners will wail:" p. 4. By the term "all," in this expression, it is clear the author means all the dead made alive, and not merely all who are alive previous to Christ's coming in "the clouds." Hence it follows, inevitably, that he gives up the main text, Rev. xx., 5, heretofore relied on by the advocates of the resurrection of the wicked dead; for that text says, "The rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished." The 4th verse speaks of certain saints who were of "the first resurrection," who "lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years," and then follows verse 5, as above. But now "Adventism," it seems, has discovered that neither saints nor sinners can be judged till after the universal resurrection, hence Rev. xx., 4, 5, does not serve the purpose of proving the resurrection of the wicked at all, nor, indeed, of the righteous, either, because, whatever "the first resurrection" is, there is to be another after it; but as in the literal resurrection saints and sinners are to have their judgment and reward "at the same time," Rev. xx., 4, 5, cannot be speaking of a literal resurrection if "Adventism's" position is correct.

Thus one of their strongholds has been abandoned, and no appeal to that text is hereafter to be made by those who accept this author's theory. He says, "Neither the reward of the righteous nor the damnation of the sinner can be realized before the judgment:" p. 93.

In this statement we agree with him. But then he says, "The resurrection is a prerequisite to judgment, and must precede judgment:" p. 42. And again, "The judgment is at the coming of Christ:" p. 54. Yet in referring to the case of the Sodomites, who were destroyed by fire and brimstone, he quotes Macknight's translation, "Are set forth as an example, having undergone the punishment of an eternal fire:" p. 112.

Now, if the resurrection is a prerequisite to judgment, and must precede it, and punishment cannot take place till after it, and that does not take place till the second advent of Christ, how is it that the Sodomites have undergone the punishment of an eternal fire? Were they punished before the resurrection at the coming of Christ? If so, what becomes of our author's assumptions on all these points? What becomes of his affirmation, "The penalty death cannot precede the judgment; and the judgment is after death, and in the last day?" p. 100. The Sodomites, according to his own showing, "have undergone the punishment of eternal fire." Either their punishment was after they had been judged, and is eternal; or, it is not an "example" of the punishment of any other sinners' doom; but says our author, "The wicked will as really be consumed by everlasting fire as the Sodomites were by eternal fire:" p. 102. But if all dead sinners are to live again, the Sodomites will live again; so they have not undergone the punishment of eternal fire; and as the other wicked are only to be punished after their example, who knows that the everlasting fire will do any better in keeping other sinners in death? The Sodomites escape from under the eternal fire by a resurrection! Who knows but what all sinners will do the same? The Sodomites were the "example" of the end of others "who live ungodly;" they escape: so may others! Such is the logical conclusion from "Adventism's" premises.

The case of the Sodomites "reels to and fro, and staggers like a drunken man" by his logic: for he says, they "having undergone the punishment of eternal fire." Yet he says, "The penalty death is not visited upon the sinner in this life, nor at the close of this life:" p. 99. So the Sodomites have escaped "the penalty death," notwithstanding "the punishment of eternal fire." Surely such "theology" must have a tremendous burden on its shoulders, and it is easy to see what that burden is; the attempt to hoist Sodom and Gomorrah, all the sinners sunk in the flood in Noah's day, with all the multitudes that have perished since, under whatever judgments may have been inflicted on them, out of their graves and ashes into life, to kill them again; as if they are not now as dead as they ever can be. Such a load, we think, would make a Samson stagger, even if his hair were not cut off. "They are dead; they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise." Isa. xxvi., 14. "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi., 16.

We rather think "The penalty death" was inflicted on the Sodomites "at death" notwithstanding the staggering of "Adventism" under its load: and that it was their "eternal punishment," unless we can be made to believe God is to execute them twice in the same manner, for the same sins, like as if we were to hang a man twice for the same offence, which to human power would be impossible; but, possibly, to an *in*human power might be desirable. That power is not the God of the Bible.

Cain's Wife, Etc.

Genesis iv., 16, 17. As Adam and Eve and Cain appear to be all the living we have any account of at that time, who was Cain's wife?

To this inquiry he gets the following answer:

In relation to Cain's wife, it should be observed that the Bible does not give any account of Adam's daughters, but the line of male descendants that lead to Christ as the promised seed. It is estimated that, according to the laws of generation, there must have been not less than fifty thousand inhabitants upon the earth when Cain took a wife.

This is ingenious and curious. It is what a mariner might call, "Point no point." How came there to be "not less than fifty thousand inhabitants upon the earth when Cain took a wife," if Adam had no daughters? Where did those get wives, before Cain "took a wife," to produce 50,000 inhabitants? Where did they find daughters to make wives of? The ingenious Eld. Jacob Knapp, the so-called "Revivalist," once gave out, in Albany, N. Y., that he would tell the people the next evening where Cain got his wife. That was done, of course, to bring out a congregation. So a gaping crowd were on hand. He talked as he pleased, till on closing he said, "Now I suppose you all want to know where Cain got his wife. Why, he married his sister, of course." That was sensible, and was no evasion, though the manner of getting at it was anything but ministerial; especially in a "Revivalist." It produced roars of laughter!

Our exchange is more sober, but has put himself and others into a puzzle, or riddle, which would take a more ingenious woman than Samson's wife to find out what is meant. But our exchange's correspondent asks another question, which perhaps may solve the riddle when we see the answer:

Gen. vi., 1, 2. Who were the sons of God in contradistinction from the daughters of men?

We are not fully satisfied as to who are meant by "the sons of God," in Gen. vi., 2. There is some evidence to show that they were "the angels which kept not their first estate," (Jude 6) called also evil angels, demons, unclean spirits; and that from them came the giants, who are now extinct.

This suggestion is not original; for we saw it in an English work more than twenty years ago; but if admitted, we can possibly solve the riddle as to where Cain got his wife, if the "Bible gives no account of Adam's daughters." If the "sons of God" were "the angels," then it is likely they had sisters; so Cain might have taken one of them to wife! Why not; as well as the angels to take of the "daughters of men?" But this adds to the puzzle, for if the Bible gives no account of Adam's daughter's it may be he had none; then how came any of his sons to have daughters for the angels to fall in love with, and take for wives?

After all, we think a little sober thought may solve the whole matter; especially if a man can keep "fallen angels" out of his mind long enough to read his Bible. Did our Br. editor ever read Gen. v.? He says, "The Bible does not give any account of Adam's daughters." Now, reader, just turn to Gen. v., 4. It reads as follows: "And all the days of Adam, after he had begotten Seth, were eight hundred years; and he begat sons and daughters." That seems to prove our Br. Editor mistaken about the Bible's giving no "account of Adam's daughter's." However, we can forgive him, for we are all liable to make mistakes; especially if we have "fallen angels" "on the brain."

"The sons of God," spoken of in Gen. vi., 2, it is our opinion, were so called from Gen. iv. 26, where our translation reads, "Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord." The marginal reading is, "Then began men to call themselves by the name of the Lord;" so that, if they took the name of the Lord, it was natural to call them "the sons of God." This class of men were the posterity of Seth, who was accounted "another seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew." Gen. iv., 25. To Seth was born a son, who was called Enos, or Enosh. Then it was that men began to call themselves by the name of the Lord, or "sons of God," in distinction, probably, from the seed of Cain, who were mere worldlings, disregarding God and his service. Between this statement of the character of Seth's children and the account of the sons of God marrying the daughters of men, there is no other interruption than a genealogy from Adam to Noah; at which point, to account for the wickedness of men, that fact is introduced that "the sons of God" apostatized, or "kept not their first estate, drawn away from the service of God by the beauty of those who lived after the flesh. In other words, to use the language of Jude, "going after strange flesh;" that is "foreign flesh;" or wives without regard for God. Thus these "sons of God" abandoned their high position, and gave themselves up to sensualism. This brought on that state of wickedness which caused God to determine on the destruction of the inhabitants of the world by a flood.

As to the "giants," it is clear to our mind, men were not called so at that time, from their physical stature, but from the enormity their wickedness. The children of these intermarriages became "mighty men; men of renown." The next verse (chap. vi., 5,) tells us what they were mighty and renowned in; "God saw that the wickedness of man was great," etc. They were "giants" in wickedness as apostates often are. It is true, as our exchange says, they "are now extinct." Of course they did not survive the flood—that extinguished them; and that proves they were not children of "evil angels, demons, unclean spirits," in the sense our Br. Editor uses those terms; for he believes these fathers of those "giants" are living and acting now. If that is so their "giant" children must be also, as they must possess their fathers' nature; and hence are not "now extinct," as our Br. says. However, we are glad he is "not fully satisfied as to who are meant by 'the sons of God.'" If anything we have said will help him in the matter we shall be thankful.

There is one curious suggestion about the number of inhabitants on the earth at the time Cain took a wife. Only think, 50,000! Cain was the first-born of Adam and Eve; and we have no account of the marriage of any of their children before Cain; he is the first spoken of as having a wife; see Gen. iv. 17.

Yet our Br. Editor says, "It is estimated that, according to the laws of generation there must have been not less than fifty thousand inhabitants upon the earth when Cain took a wife." Really, any one who can seriously bring forward such an estimate to explain where Cain got his wife, must, have a large development of marvellousness. We should think, the more marvellous a subject is, the more readily he would accept it for truth. But we forget, that, possibly he was only testing his correspondent to see, whether he had any brain or power to reason soundly on Scripture matters. We confess that some men put questions to editors which must strongly tempt them to ironical answers. "Search the Scriptures," friends, for yourselves; and do not depend on editors nor ministers; for none of us are infallible.

There is one thing more that we may give a passing notice. We have said Cain was Adam's first born son. Abel is the next. After Cain kills Abel Seth is born. Gen. iv., 25. Adam was 130 years old when Seth was born. Gen. v., 3. Hence it is probable Cain and Abel had arrived at a mature age at the time of Abel's death; and it would seem that Cain was married at that time; for, after the Lord called him to account, immediately it is said, "Cain . . . . went and dwelt in the land of Nod; and Cain knew his wife, and . . . . she bare Enoch," etc. Gen. iv. 16, 17. There does not appear to be much probability that there were any "laws of generation" that would have produced "fifty thousand inhabitants on the earth when Cain took his wife." Certainly not, if we credit the record. This, however, is of small moment, only as indicating the acceptance of an improbable statement too hastily.

The Love of God.

BY ELD. J. PARRY.

The poverty of language to express our ideas is often a source of perplexity; a single word has frequently so many meanings, that it is difficult always to discover the precise meaning intended to be conveyed by the language used. For instance, the word love, in such common use, has such a variety of applications, many of them of very different significations, that it is often hard to discriminate between them. There is parental love, filial love, conjugal love, love of country, of enemies, etc. Above and beyond all these, is the love of God, our Creator and Redeemer. A few remarks on this supreme love will suffice for the present. Love must have an object worthy of itself; it is a voluntary act, cannot be coerced or forced against the will and inclination. We are, indeed, commended to love God with all our heart, soul, and strength; this is the first and great commandment. Can we keep this commandment unless God has revealed himself to us in such a manner as to make the command reasonable and possible? If the common, so-called, orthodox view is correct—that he is so implacable in his vengeance again the poor, weak creatures he has made, who do not obey his will, as to eternally torment them in a fiery hell, without any hope or possibility of rescue! If this is indeed the revealed character of God, how is it possible for us to love such a being? To demand our love, under such circumstances, would only aggravate the cruelty, by requiring an impossibility. I would a thousand times rather never have had a being than to be subject to the mere possibility of such a direful doom as is vividly painted by men who nevertheless profess to love such a God. Thankful I am, from my whole heart, to have escaped such a dilemma: the Being I love and adore is no such a Moloch as this. His name and attributes are love; he is long-suffering to us ward, not willing even that any should perish; has graciously offered eternal life to all who will accept it in his own appointed way. If they judge themselves unworthy of eternal life, the penalty is death; those who are unfit to live, mere cumberers of the ground, must die, return to the dust from whence they came. Is not this wise and good? What better could God do with impenitent sinners than put them out of the way? "The soul that sinneth it shall die:" all God's creatures can say amen to this: it is reasonable, wise and good. Look at the life and character of Jesus, as God manifest in the flesh; the express image of his Father's person and character; full of grace, truth and love; "he that hath seen me, hath seen the Father." Well may he say, my service is perfect freedom—it is not the service of a slave, but of a son. We love him because he first loved us; not because if we did not love him he would be our eternal tormentor. I have heard of a good pious lady who tied her little son to the bed-post one fine Sunday, while she went to church, with the injunction to learn the hymn,

"Thine earthly Sabbaths, Lord, we love."

This may be good, consistent, orthodox teaching, treading in the footprints of the God she has been taught to worship; but I question much the effect of such discipline on the subject of it. It is a great deal more likely to produce hatred and disgust to the day than love for it. Yet the sensation preaching of the present day is akin to it. "Sinner, if you do not repent, love and serve God, he will shut you up in hell, and torment you forever, and ever," etc. This is the way they manufacture Christians, and convert sinners, in the present day. No wonder they need to be converted over again long before the three months' probation comes to an end. These frequent conversions, however, answer one purpose; they do to count numbers by, and look well in print. But is there not a more excellent way? It may not be so popular, for it degrades human nature, that men delight to honor. Proving men to be mortal and perishing, without an interest in Christ, the resurrection and the life. That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life, at the resurrection of the just, in the kingdom of Christ. In the gospel God is revealed in love and mercy to all his creatures; he will not retain his anger forever, as modern Christianity teaches, in direct contradiction to his word, because he delighteth in mercy, not in wrath and in the misery of his creatures. Such a character as this, demands, encourages, sweetly draws, and constrains our love. The more we know and feel its constraining influence, the more will that love increase and abound. It will produce that fear of God which is the beginning of wisdom—not that slavish fear, that hath torment, and is produced by fear of torment; but that filial fear, the fruit of love, that dreads most of all to do any thing to grieve or bring repreach against so good and gracious a Father. This love casteth out fear; there is no place for it. With these views, how can we countenance or sustain a system that brings such discredit on the name and character of our Father in heaven? All we can say is, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. Those who have eyes to see the evil, cannot but say, O, my soul, be not thou with them united.

The Holy Spirit of Promise.

BY H. O. BILLINGS.

"Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." In this text we find the sealing is done by the Spirit of God; and in chap. i. 13, we read, "In whom ye also trusted after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation, in whom, also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise.

In this text we find the sealing is done by the Holy Spirit of promise. Now, if we can find the Spirit of promise, we have obtained that which will give us citizenship in the heavenly Canaan. In Eph. ii., 18, 19, we read, "For through him (that is, Christ) we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father. Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God."

We will now look for the promise of the Father, that makes us citizens. Isa. lix. 20, 21 reads, "And the redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord: my Spirit, that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and forever."

Now we will find when the Redeemer comes, and when this Spirit is given to him, John i. 33, we read, the Spirit descended and remained upon a person; and in verse 34, it reads, "This is the Son of God; which is the Redeemer spoken of by the prophet. Verse 33, says, "The same is he, which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost."

The baptism of the Holy Spirit, then, is the promise of the Father; and by it we are sealed unto the day of redemption; no longer strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints.

It will be difficult to those making tests of fellowship to keep any such out of the kingdom. Popery may condemn and punish as heretics all those that do not agree with them in all points; but shutting the kingdom is another business.

But we will return to the promise of the Father. In Acts i. 4, the Saviour tells his disciples not to depart from Jerusalem, "but wait for the promise of the Father which, saith he, ye have heard of me. For John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence."

The disciples, in obedience to the command, remained at Jerusalem; and on Pentecost they received the promise of the Father. There are some that tell us, the baptism of the Holy Spirit was only upon the apostles, (and "thereby overthrows the faith of some"). But Peter does not think so; for after he had preached to the Jews, and convinced them of their sins, and they ask the brethren what they shall do, he tells them to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; for, says he, the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all them that are afar off; even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

But, says one, "That is water baptism." I ask, Is water baptism the promise of the Father?

But they will answer, "The gift, and not the baptism, is the promise spoken of by Peter." I think both constitute the promise of the Father; for, if we have been baptized with the Holy Ghost, it (the Holy Ghost) will give us gifts that are necessary to make us wise unto salvation.

The apostle Paul, in 1 Cor. xii., 4, says, "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit:" and afterward mentions the different gifts of the Spirit, and winds up his argument by saying, "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." This shows conclusively, to my mind, that all that love God have been baptized by the Holy Spirit, and dwell in God, and he in them; and no one can dwell in God without being immersed in him, as John was when he was in the Spirit on the Lord's day. Living in the Spirit is our privilege. But some tell us the baptism spoken of by the apostle Paul, in 1 Cor. xii., is water. I should as soon try to attempt to prove white to be black; yes, rather; for then I should not dishonor my Saviour.

I think we have come to a time when the soldiers of the cross should stand up for Jesus. So we will return to the promise of the Father, and I think the best place to find it will be in "the commission." Matthew records the commission, and Mark does the same; both omitting a part, which Luke supplies, as found in chap. xxiv., 49, which reads, "And behold I send the promise of my Father upon you" (which was accomplished on the day of Pentecost); but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endowed with power from on high." With power to do what? to baptize with water? This cannot be the meaning of the Saviour, for they had this power already. It therefore must have been the power to preach the word "with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven (1 Pet. i., 12); which things the angels desired to look into." The Saviour says, "The words that I speak unto you, they are Spirit, and they are life." John vi., 63. The word, then, if preached with the Holy Ghost, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, will contain the power promised in "the commission."

Let us no longer say in our hearts, "Who shall descend into the deep; that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead. But the righteousness of faith speaketh in this wise, "The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved; for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Rom. x., 6-10. "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast." Eph. ii., 8, 9. Now the glory of our salvation belongs to God the Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ; and I am determined, by the grace of God, to make known nothing among the people, for their salvation, but Christ and him crucified, raised from the dead, glorified, and coming again to reign; for I have been made free from the law by the body of Christ, and shall stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made me free; believing that the law of ordinances was nailed to the cross. O how I love a principle that strips self-made priests of all power.

Dear brethren, the spiritual temple, for the dwelling of God's holy Spirit, is almost finished; and the builders are bringing forth the head-stone (which is Jesus Christ), shouting, "Grace, grace unto it." Zech. iii., 7. Glory to God, we are almost home; soon the LIFE-GIVER will take his place at the head of the church; and all this dispute, persecution, and hard names, such as "heretics," etc., will cease. Oh come, thou mighty King, whose right is to rule, and save thy waiting bride. Amen.

LAW AND SPIRIT.

BY ELD. A. GUTHRIE.

"There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit; for the law of the Spirit of life, in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Rom. viii., 1, 2.

This quotation shows that all who are out of Christ, and in the flesh, and have not the Spirit, are under the condemnation of death, without any reprieve.

Let us look at the law of type and antitype. At the time when the passover feast was instituted, the night before the Israelites' departure from Egypt, the Lord commanded them through Moses the typical Lawgiver, that they should take the blood of the slain lamb and sprinkle it on the lintel and door-posts of every dwelling occupied by God's chosen people; that when the angel smote the Egyptians he might pass over the houses of the Israelites and leave them secure from danger. This was to be kept annually for a perpetual memorial. Under this law it was, obey and live or disobey and die. This type looks directly to Christ, the antitypical Lawgiver. Paul says, "For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us; therefore let us keep the feast." 1 Cor. v., 7, 8. "Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi., 53, 54. If you will not obey, you are under God's law of death; and no mortal has any power to escape. But the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made us free.

Again, under the law of types, when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and goats, with water and scarlet wool and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book and all the people, saying, This is the blood of the Testament which God hath enjoined unto you.

Why was this required? Paul says, "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." Heb. ix., 22.

The Law of Moses was added to the covenant promise of the land to Abraham until his seed, the Christ should appear, to whom with himself the promise was made. It was a codicil or supplementary will, added to the covenant made with Abraham, to preserve the truth from entire extinction, and also to give the descendants of Abraham a limited possession of the land until the rightful heir should come. Blood in the type is therefore regarded as cleansing or purifying, because God had constituted it such, God also prohibited the eating of blood; for, said Jehovah, "The life of the flesh is in the blood. . . . and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement," or, an at-one-ment, "for the soul," or life. Lev. xvii., 11.

Let us now look at the law relating to making atonement by the high priest. Exodus. xxx., 6. After speaking of the altar, Moses says, "Thou shalt put it before the vail that is by the ark of the testimony before the mercy seat, that is over the testimony where I will meet with thee." So we see that God met with those only that lived in obedience to his Law. The blood of the slain beast, under the law, could not give any thing more than a yearly or hypothetical remission of sins; but it was the bringing in of a better hope. This better hope is brought to light in the new covenant, or testament; called new, because it was not cleansed or purified until Christ's blood was shed; although it was confirmed to Abraham four hundred and thirty years before the law was given by Moses. Called new, too, because the old tabernacle service of the high priest, under the law, was about to vanish away. "But Christ being come a high priest, not under the old tabernacle, which was only a figure of the true, not by the blood of goats, which only purified the flesh, but "by the precious blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God." Heb. ix., 14. Then the blood of Christ is applied to every believing Jew or Gentile, by the witness of the Spirit. For Paul saith—"The Holy Ghost also is a witness to us." Heb. x., 15. Peter says "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." 1 Peter, i., 2. Therefore we see that the blood of Christ is applied to every obedient subject by the sanctifying power of the Spirit. Then we become the elect. Then we receive the Spirit of adoption. Then we become "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise," or covenant made with Abraham. Where is there any "better hope," or hope of future life to any one who has not "conformed to the image of His Son," and been "baptized by one Spirit into one body;" so that "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii., 11

Yours, looking for the coming kingdom.

"OUR CRAFT IN DANGER."

IT seems that the conventions of the evangelical churches in different parts of the country are not the most harmonious, so far as the D. D.s are concerned. In Springfield you speak of the Rev. Dr. Ide as saying, with great earnestness and eloquence, "That the divinely-appointed clergy, through whom the people, less versed than they in theology and the 'original tongues,' should receive spiritual light and direction." Now there are two or three points in this paragraph that will bear looking at. First: The divinely-appointed clergy; who are they? In the evangelical convention held in Philadelphia, the Rev. Dr. Bomberger, of the German Reformed church, also spoke upon the important work in the hands of the laymen; and in conclusion called attention to the passages in the eleventh chapter of Acts, to prove that laymen had authority to preach; also, from a work of Dr. Lathrop, on the Acts of the apostles, to prove his position, the second chapter of the Epistle of Peter was also named as "authority for lay effort." After the discussions were over, and the time arrived for doing something, the following advertisement was made in the midst of the convention by the president, Geo. H. Stuart:

"WANTED—Five hundred Christian laymen to advocate the gospel in this city between the 1st of May and the 1st of October."

Judge Smith, of Boston, made the following remarks: "As Christians they must be awake to a sense of the duty incumbent on them; the lay element of the church should co-operate with the ministry in carrying forward the gospel, and in their endeavors to bring under the power of the gospel the neglected in our cities they would have the smiles of the ministry. The fault is not with the ministers, but it is with the membership of the church that the responsibility rests; they (the church) cannot all enter the pulpit and in this way preach to the people, but they can go out among the masses and proclaim the riches of Christ."

Here we have a discord. Dr. Ide says only the divinely-appointed ministers should dispense spiritual light, and the people, the laity, should learn through them. Dr. Bomberger says "Nay, Dr. Ide; but all the laity are called upon to preach the gospel, and they did it in the early days of the church, according to Acts xi." But, says Judge Smith, of Boston, You are mistaken, Dr. Bomberger; it is not to be expected that all these lay members can go into the pulpit and preach the gospel; no, no; that is too sacred, and besides all that, there is certain pay connected with the pulpit. Why, if you allow that lay brethren can preach, where will our gains come from? No, no! "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." But just set these anxious laymen to work, and then tell them they will receive your smiles; and just put in the following advertisement: "WANTED, five hundred laymen to do the dirty work of gathering men and women from the hovels of our city, and this without money and without pay, while we enter our fine pulpits for our fine pay and preach to the rich who are gathered there."

One more feature in our Evangelical convention was no mixture of rich and poor. "Rev. A. Atwood thought suitable churches should be erected for the poor, where seats would be free. He did not think that the labor for the salvation of the souls of the people would be very effective unless small churches are erected for them."

But to come back to Dr. Ide's "ancient view of a divinely-appointed clergy." The oldest appointment, that we can find in the Scriptures, is the one Peter speaks of, 1 Pet. ii., 9: "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light." Now, if Dr. Ide has any other call than this, for one, I should like to know it. Paul speaks of a call in 1 Cor. xii., 13. "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body," (Christ.)

There is yet another call spoken of in the Scriptures found in Acts i., 20-26. The apostles were commanded to wait for further advice until they were endowed by the Holy Spirit from on high; but being in a hurry to do something, they commenced the work of making a minister, and they went through all the solemn farce that is gone through with at the present day. The number present was about 120; but instead of asking the Lord to choose out of the whole number, they selected two of their own choice, and then prayed the Lord to choose which he would have; and then they organized a lottery to find out which of the two he would have, and the lot fell upon Matthias, and it appears that (the lot) was all that ever did fall upon him, for what he ever did history saith not. Now, this is the first man-made minister we have ever read of, and to us the whole thing was a solemn farce, for when God was ready to call one to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Judas, he did it in the person of Paul, and he made no mistake. Paul knew it without casting lots. Well, we have the preaching of Jesus, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, Peter, and the worthy patriarchs and prophets, all tending to the one and the same end, and yet, forsooth, we must have Dr. Ide, or some other "divinely-appointed clergy," to inform us what the above named brethren mean: those members of the "royal priesthood" were not able to make themselves understood, and therefore God has oppointed Dr. Ide, or some other D. D., to lead us into the paths of truth. Which one shall we take? Dr. Ide, Dr. Eddy, Dr. Bomberger, or Albert Barnes? Ask Albert Barnes for light on the punishment of the wicked, or the immortality question, and what answer does he give? "I have met with nothing which would convince my anxious mind or give consolation upon the subject." Such is his answer. Shall we ask "the divinely-appointed clergy," through whom the people, less versed than they in theology and the "original tongues?" Then, according to Dr. Ide, a divinely-appointed clergyman must understand the original tongues. Draw that line, and many will lose their divine appointment. We have gone to some of these divinely-appointed clergy for information. We will name one instance. About 1841 a "divinely-appointed" clergyman felt it his call to give the laymen, those less versed in theology, a true translation from the original Scriptures; just the thing we wanted, and we subscribed for his Bible. In the introduction we find these remarks: "Yet it is obvious . . . . that a more scrupulous exactness may be justly required in a translation of the Scriptures than in any other translation, and yet . . . . the translators (King James's) have actually transcended all reasonable allowance." "The justice of this criticism will be evident from the following specimens." He then gives a number to show the absurdity: we will only give a few. "Tzaniph is translated Diadem, Job xxix., 14; Hood, Isaiah iii., 23; Mitre, Zech. iii., 5. The word Rosh is translated wormwood, Deut. xxix., 18; Hemlock, in Hosea x., 4." So saith our "divinely-appointed clergy." "Other instances might be adduced, but these are sufficient to show that the translators have varied the rendering of terms so as to make them express different things, where they are used by the inspired writers to mean the same things. Such a blemish in the translation of the Bible is justly reprehensible, and demands amendment."

Now, as our "divinely-appointed clergy" condemns his "divinely-appointed brethren," and he says justly, we may look out for something that the laymen may rely upon; for are they not the ones from whom they "should receive spiritual light and direction?" so says Dr. Ide. In the translation of the word sheoul, we, as one of the unlearned laymen, wish to know the meaning. We turn to our "perfect Bible," and lo, we find in Gen. xxxvii., 35; xlii., 38; xliv., 29, in the margin, sheoul; in the text grave. We turn to Numb. xvi., 30, 33, and we find in the margin sheoul, in the text pit. We turn again to Deut. xxii., 22, and we find in the margin, sheoul, in the text hell, and we apply this doctor's own rule, "Such a blemish in the translation of the Bible is justly reprehensible." We have followed this word through the whole of this new translation, this perfect Bible, and we have given a fair specimen. On one word he has been uniform, and that word is immerse, instead of baptize. And as he was a Baptist, that was the lever that moved the whole. Thank God, we have found one who could give an unbiased translation. But we suppose in the eyes of these divinely-appointed clergy we have no right to receive it, as he was not divinely appointed. I refer to Judge Halsted's "THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE."

We have been following a very simple rule found in our Bible, which we have found to answer our purpose for more than thirty years. It is plain and simple; and can be found in James i. 5: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask" [the "divinely-appointed" clergy? No.] "God; that giveth to [the divinely-appointed clergy? no,] all liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." This is my rule, and I have always found it to answer my purpose. We have one unerring preacher left us, where we can always find aid. Jesus said, in John xvi., 13, "Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come." "Cease ye from man, for wherein is he to be accounted of," these men-made ministers, lording it over God's heritage. "Call no man master," says Jesus, "for one is your Master: but all ye are brethren." So may we always be found.

A QUESTION.

IF Moses did not die, how is it his death is so often mentioned as about to occur, in the last of Deuteronomy? E. BENNETT.

We think Moses did die. Dr. McCulloh doubts it; but on the whole, it seems a plain case that his death was an actual occurrence. We are not in favor of expunging texts to get over a difficulty: better let it remain than readily suggest expunging to help out of it.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM ELD. JOHN CRAIG.

WESTFORD, MASS., April 10, 1868.

BR. STORRS: May grace be multiplied to you. I am glad that we have a free paper, whereby we may communicate the glad tidings of "No life out of Christ," and its kindred doctrines. It does seem to me, that this blessed God-honoring, Christ-exalting, and saint-comforting doctrine is destined to prevail and triumph over the God-dishonoring theology of these last days of fables.

I attended the late conference in Boston, and heard a great many good things said; among the rest, trusting in the Lord was much spoken of, and by many whom I personally knew, whose pockets were well filled with greenbacks, and whose homes doubtless lacked none of the comforts and good things of this life. They could tell their poorer brethren and sisters to trust in the Lord, and help onward the cause by casting in the widow's mite. Now, for my part, if this is trusting in the Lord, I confess have not trusted in him for the last few years; because I have not been in this situation of well filled stores of the things of this life; neither have I been over burthened with a heavy purse. But, thanks be to God, I have been sustained by the good hand of my Father all through my late trials and deep afflictions.

Let me say to all my good brethren and sisters, who have administered to me and mine, in my late afflictions, that my grateful thanks and fervent prayers are returned for the same; hoping to hear the "well done." Let me tell you how I have learned to trust in the Lord, these many years. Sickness and death have paved my path for over thirty-four years. In that time I have buried two wives and six children; also, the late war has left almost all my older sons cripples for life, and of all my own bodily afflictions for years past, my latest one is the most severe, because it unfits me for doing any hard or heavy work in the future. Well, thank the Lord, I know one thing, he will fulfil his promises. Now it is for me to do as he has commanded; viz., "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." Yes, my brothers and sisters, I can and will trust myself, and my three little motherless children to the care and keeping of my good, kind, loving Father, who has in the past kept and sustained me, while I have been very unworthy indeed. But now, through his rich grace, I am wholly given up to him and to his blessed cause.

In closing, I can truly say, I am a lonely pilgrim here. Yes, out here in this isolated place, and but few to sympathize with me. But, thank the Lord, he comforts me daily; and by his word, and the help of the HERALD OF LIFE, the Crisis, and lately the good Voice of the West, I am comforted. Brethren and sisters let me hear from you all through our speaking organs; and remember unworthy me in your approach to God.

FROM MRS. E. C. M. BOYD.

BR. STORRS: On Tuesday evening, April 7th, according to appointment a few of the Brethren and sisters met at our house to commemorate the Last Supper of our Lord.

The storm which had not fully cleared till in the evening prevented some from coming, others were detained by sickness; but those who had the privilege to be here enjoyed the the interview, and we trust that the hearts of all were comforted.

One—our dear sister Stinebeck—who was with us at the last anniversary, now sleeps in hope, waiting to partake anew with us "in the Father's kingdom;" and often, as during the evening I thought of her, my heart was glad that through "Christ our Passover," slain for us, we have the privilege to hope for Life; through Him, those who sleep hoped for a resurrection, and at his coming, we expect to meet, "and so be forever with the Lord."

"Oh, what a blessed hope is ours!" for pleasant as our surroundings may be, the wintry cold will fade the flowers and destroy all trace of vegetable life; the power of disease will turn to currents of anguish all the pulses which beat so joyously now; we must be separated from the most beloved of friends: but there cometh a time when the Earth shall bloom eternally; when there shall be no more sickness nor death; when there will be never any trying separation from loved ones; and all this in that "world to come" to which we attain by a resurrection from the dead. Oh blessed hope!

What can be more cheering in all our trials than this hope of Life? And those who have it, oh, how closely they are allied; how their hearts beat in harmony, responsive to one key note of "Life from the Dead through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Philadelphia.

BEGOTTEN AND BORN.

THE Christian is begotten at conversion, and born at the resurrection. How is it, Br. Storrs, do those who believe in the resurrection to life of the wicked dead, believe that there will be birth without first being begotten?

With me, Bible truths have their analogies in nature. Is there an analogy in all nature to illustrate the doctrine of the resurrection to life of the wicked dead? Men die. This is a Bible doctrine, nature illustrates it; all fruit falls and returns to dust.

The resurrection is a Bible doctrine. Nature illustrates it; some of the fruit that falls in autumn, revives and springs forth in the spring.

The resurrection of all men is not a Bible doctrine. Nature furnishes no analogy; a part only of what falls and decays arises to perpetuate their species.

The greater part of mankind forever remain in dust. Again, nature furnishes an analogy. But a very small part of what falls in autumn springs up again.

Nature is first. Revelation afterward. Revealed truth is based in natural truth.

Revelation and nature should not be divorced. TIMOTHY WHEELER.

Waterbury Centre, Vt., April 12, 1868.

THOMAS MCCLARY, Wilmington, Delaware, writes: I pray the Master may continue your usefulness to the church until he comes; then shall all his people be rewarded with immortality, incorruptibility, eternal life. There is more truth embodied in the HERALD OF LIFE than any other religious paper I have ever seen, or ever expect to see. Prejudice is so strong, and time so short, that I fear but few will receive the precious truth of life only in Christ; and yet I feel encouraged by what has already been accomplished in this city, and endeavor with the divine aid and blessing, to let the people know the truth on this glorious subject of eternal life by the Giver thereof, Jesus Christ.

AN AFFECTING PICTURE.

IN still another picture by a later hand, of Christ, the good Shepherd, I found almost the only figure that seemed to me Christ-like among the countless number that have been drawn and painted—a figure on its knees, and bending to free a lost sheep caught in the thicket. There is all the firmness and repose of a statue in its attitude, and yet such pity and tenderness in its face, and such tact and power in the hand, that while they part the briars, they seem equally in the act of benediction. A crown of thorns is on the Saviour's forehead, and the thorns of the briars pierce his hands; but he forgets his own sorrow in his care for the sheep.

And what is this one stray sheep, perverse and wandering, to win such love? See her, helpless among the thorns; no green pastures, no still waters nigh—and as if to hint a further truth, and the one most significant of all, the poor sheep was represented as caught on the verge of a precipice. Yes, one step more of that dangerous freedom she had preferred—the freedom to go without guide or company—without the tender Shepherd's care would have thrown her, broken and dying at the foot of the cliff. But these very thorns that held and pierced her, these very briars that teased and imprisoned her, were till Jesus came to set her free, her salvation from death.

So it seems to me, that those daring and ambitious souls that choose to wander from the tried paths and approved methods, and leave the safe and pleasant pasture-land wherein so many have been fed and defended, are most indebted to the thorns that seem to impede and hinder them.—Selected.

A GOOD PRICE FOR PREACHING.

THE REV. HENRY DAVIES began his labors in Pembrokeshire, but was soon dismissed from his station on account of his faithfulness; afterward he frequently preached in the open air. An anecdote is related of him, that as he was walking early one Sabbath morning to a place where he was going to preach, he was overtaken by a clergyman on horseback, who complained that he could never get above half a guinea for a discourse.

"Oh, sir," said Mr. Davies, "I preach for a crown."

"Do you?" replied the stranger; "then you are a disgrace to the cloth."

To this rude observation he meekly replied, "Perhaps I shall be held in greater disgrace in your estimation, when I inform you that I am going nine miles to preach and have but sevenpence in my pocket to bear my expenses out and in, and do not expect to bring home the poor pittance that I am now in possession of; but I look forward to that crown of glory which my Lord and Saviour will bestow on me, when he appears before an assembled world."

SUNDAY SHOES AND UMBRELLAS.

FOR FAIR-WEATHER CHRISTIANS.

WANTED—A species of Gum Shoes and Umbrellas that will stand the Sunday rain and mud of this latitude.

Here then is a preparation that will fully answer the purpose; as no patent has been taken (the demand being very small), every one is at liberty to try the experiment.

Place in a common gum shoe a soul thoroughly saturated with Divine love, and they will stand any mud that can lie in the path of duty.

An excellent umbrella may be prepared in the following manner:

Take for the stick a firm determination to hold on, to this and radiating from it on all sides, attach strong desire to do good; these must be braced and kept in their proper place by many short, unyielding prayers, well secured by rivets of faith.

Over the whole spread covering of grace, well oiled with self denial. With the last mentioned use a little of the spirit of impulse. This umbrella will not only stand heavy rains, but will also answer during the heat of summer for a parasol. Those desirous of supplying themselves with these invaluable articles would do well to make immediate application to him "who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not."—Methodist Home Journal.

PEACE PRESERVED BY PRAYER.

MR. Johnston, of West Africa, in one of his journals, relates the following of a very poor but pious native of that benighted country. Well, indeed, would it be if more enlightened and more favorably-circumstanced Christians would learn a lesson from this godly member of a despised race, and all do likewise. Such a practice faithfully observed would certainly lessen the number of family difficulties which are such fruitful sources of reproach and dishonor to the church. He says:

"In visiting a sick communicant, his wife, who was formerly in our school, was present, I asked several questions, viz., if they prayed together, read the Scriptures (the woman can read), constantly attended public worship, and lived in peace with their neighbors? All these questions were answered in the affirmative. I then asked if they lived in peace together. The man answered, 'Sometimes I say a word my wife no like, or my wife talk or do what I no like; but when we want to quarrel, we shake hands together, shut the door, and go to prayer, and so we get peace again.'"

"This method of 'keeping peace,'" writes Mr. Johnston, "quite delighted me."

THE philosopher Anaximander effectually provided for his not being forgotten, when, being asked by the magistrates at Lampsacum, where he had resided, what they should do to honor his memory, he made the seemingly small and simple request that the boys might have leave to play on the anniversary of his death.

Shipman & Son, will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. Halsted, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J.;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The work can also be had of W. S. OLMSTED, Hartford, Conn.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Professor Wilson, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we endorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage, six cents.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton avenue and Jay street, at 7½ o'clock. Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "SAWYER'S PIANOFORTE ROOMS." The main subject is, The Scripture Doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

Poetry.

Be not Afraid.

BY W. BENNETT.

Mark vi., 45–50.

As up the dusky mountain side
The shadows creep at eventide,
And darkness, deep'ning in the vale,
Shuts out from view the distant sail,
The Saviour, wearied with his toil,
And glad to escape the wild turmoil,
Sends the vast multitude away,
And seeks alone a place to pray.

Far up the steep ascent he kneels,
And there with heaven communion feels,
While far below upon the deep
His followers anxious vigils keep:
They toil and row, 'mid tossing waves,
'Gainst adverse winds that round them rave:
'Mid darkness, solitude and fear,
They strive to gain the distant shore.

But now strange fear doth chill each heart,
And from the deck they trembling start,
And wildly scan the distant sea,
Much wondering what the scene can be,
For there, upborne upon the tide,
While billows dash on every side,
A Being nears the foundering bark,
A spirit, seeming, in the dark.

In likeness to a human form,
Devoid of fear despite the storm,
While scarce his feet the waters lave,
He walks erect upon the wave:
Toward the ship his footsteps tend,
Whence fearful cries to heaven ascend;
And, terror-struck, the frightened crew
Shrink from the vision strange and new.

A sweet voice, soothing all their fear,
And thus, in accents mild, it said,
"Fear not, 'tis I, be not afraid."
'Tis Jesus, come his friends to save,
And pluck them from a watery grave,
To guide them with unerring hand,
And bring them back all safe to land.

Thus, on the stormy voyage of life,
'Mid conflicts, dangers, toils and strife,
'Mid disappointments, doubts and fears,
And all the multitude of cares—
When Christ draws near, and says "'Tis I,"
'Tis then our doubts and terrors fly;
Our wildest fears are soon allayed,
When Jesus says, "Be not afraid."

Boy-Work.

"Well, Isaac," said his father, as Isaac put up his slate and looked up to his father's face, expecting some pleasant words from him, "you have really done some work this fall, haven't you?"

"Yes, sir," said Isaac, "there's the hen-house, I built nearly all myself. The wood-pile speaks for itself: and then, you know, my crops."

"Yes," said his father, "your corn looks very well: but the best of it is your own improvement. You are really getting over some of the faults of boy-work."

"What are the faults of boy-work?" asked Isaac.

"One of the faults is confounding work with play; or rather, expecting the pleasure of play while they are doing work. There is great enjoyment in doing work, when it is well and properly done; but it is very different from the pleasure of play. It comes later; generally after the work is done. While you are doing your work, it requires exertion and self-denial, and sometimes the sameness is tiresome. You showed your wish to make play of your work when you were getting in your chips, by wanting to have just such a basket as you took a notion to; and then, when you get tired of that, going for the wheelbarrow; and then leaving the chips altogether, and going to pile wood."

"But do not men try to make work as pleasant as they can?" asked Isaac.

"Yes, but they do not keep changing from one thing to another, in hopes of making it amusing. They expect it will be laborious and tiresome, and they go steadily forward, notwithstanding. This you are beginning to do.

"Another fault boys are liable to fall into is impatience. This comes from the first fault; because you expect when you go to work, to have the same kind of pleasure you have in play; and when you do not find it, or meet with difficulties, you get impatient and grow tired of it.

"From this follows the third fault—changeableness."

"Yes," said Isaac, who had been listening very attentively, "I think boys are changeable. They begin this and that, and try this way and another."

"And so accomplish very little in anything," said his father.

"Do you think I have overcome any of these?" asked Isaac.

"You are beginning to understand them, Isaac," said his father, "and, I think, guarding against them."

"Only beginning, father?" asked Isaac, in a disappointed tone.

"You are only a boy yet," said his father, "and have a great deal to learn before you get to be a man."

The Beggar-Boy and the Flowers.

The following story, the origin of which we cannot trace, beautifully illustrates the power of kindness:

"Go away from there, you old beggar-boy, you've no right to be looking at our flowers," shouted a little fellow from the garden where he was standing. The poor boy, who was pale, dirty, and ragged, was leaning against the fence, admiring the splendid show of roses and tulips within. His face reddened with anger at the rude language, and he was about to answer defiantly, when a little girl sprang out from an arbor near, and looking at both, said to her brother:

"How could you speak so, Herbert? I'm sure his looking at the flowers don't hurt us." And then to soothe the wounded feelings of the stranger, she added, "Little boy, I'll pick you some flowers if you'll wait a moment;" and she immediately gathered a pretty bouquet and handed it through the fence. His face brightened with surprise and pleasure, and he earnestly thanked her.

Twelve years after this occurrence, the girl had grown to a woman. One bright afternoon she was walking with her husband in the garden, when she observed a young man in workman's dress leaning over the fence, and looking attentively at her and at the flowers. Turning to her husband, she said:

"It does me good to see people admiring the garden; I'll give that young man some of the flowers;" and approaching him she said:

"Are you fond of flowers, sir? It will give me great pleasure to gather you some."

The young workman looked into her fair face, and then said, in a voice tremulous with feeling

"Twelve years ago I stood here a ragged boy, and you showed me the same kindness. The bright flowers and your pleasant words made a new boy of me—ay, and they made a man of me, too. Your face, madam, has been a light to me in many dark hours of life, and now, thank God, though that boy is still an humble, hard-working man, he is an honest and a grateful one."

Tears stood in the eyes of the lady as, turning to her husband, she said,

"God put it into my young heart to do that little kindness, and see how great a reward it has brought.—Selected.

A little thirteen years old girl in Stafford, since the death of her mother, about three months ago has assumed the cares and responsibilities of housekeeping for her father, doing all the housework, including washing, and baking, and taking care of three little brothers and sisters, the youngest about three years old, and the neighbors say that many older housekeepers might learn a lesson from her method and neatness.

Letters and Extracts.

From S. J. Brimhall.

Mapleton, Kansas, April 1, 1868.

Br. Storrs: A very highly educated and respectable preacher has been among us, preaching his views of gospel truth and gospel duties among christian converts. His series of meetings were held in the community of a church of Christian Campbellites; and, unfortunate for him, some of the church, in regard to the truth, can see men as trees walking; but can't tell whether they are trees or men; therefore his views were not fully received.

During the meetings I told the church he was a follower of one Dr. John Thomas, and cautioned them to move slow and not to be deluded. Before the meetings closed, he told the congregation he adopted the views of that personage to the fullest extent.

Among other things which I could not indorse, were, he required, as a prerequisite to water baptism, a clear, full, and scientific knowledge of the things concerning Christ and his kingdom; and any individual baptized previous to that, should be rebaptized; also, that the Holy Spirit has been withdrawn from the church since the days of the Apostles: also, that the earth would not be cleansed or purified by fire; and that the immortal saints would inherit the earth with the curse on it: also, the doctrine of a mortal resurrection, and of a protracted judgment, to continue through an unlimited space of time, and other views which I forbear to mention.

The present state of things waked up a spirit of investigation, and it is a good time to introduce the crowning truth of "No Life out of Christ." I had a friendly, social interview with the pastor of the church, above referred to, some two weeks before the meeting. He has indorsed all the light of truth he has, and is open to conviction, and requested me to send to some press that was alive, and obtain some tracts for him. He said, his entire circuit (and it embraces two counties, and he is preaching all the time) were crazy for more truth than he could give them. I wish to spread the Life views among this people, and I don't see any use in going round by the way of Arminianism, Calvinism, Universalism, and finally Sectarianism, to get to the right of Life; but go direct from the first Adam to the second. The first Adam is the representative, or head of a mortal, dying race. The second is the representative, or head of an immortal, undying race. May the God of truth support the hands of those who have received the truth, and enable them to communicate it to those yet in need.

From Charles A. Hastings.

Springfield, Mass., April, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I wish to present to you and and the readers of the Herald a thought on the text in 1 Cor. xv., where the word all is used. It may not, and probably is not, particularly new; but at this word many here seem to stumble. The word all, to them, applies to every body, good, bad, and indifferent. If so, I cannot see why universal salvation to immortality and incorruptibility is not true: for in the text preceding this, we read "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead." By what man came death? By Adam, the first man, of course. On whom did it come? On all; "for, as in Adam all die;" or, by Adam, as some would have it. By what man came the resurrection of the dead? Christ, the second Adam; "for in (or by) Christ shall all be made alive."

Now if the term in the 21st verse, "the resurrection of the dead," applies to all, to every body, does it not have the same application to all in verse 29? which reads, "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead? Also in verse 42, "So also is the resurrection of the dead; it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption;" and so on; also in verse 52, "For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible." Now the apostle does not tell us anywhere but what this phrase "the dead" applies to just as many in these last verses as it does in verse 21, where "by man came also the resurrection of the dead;" therefore if "the dead," in verse 21 means all, everybody, it has the same meaning in verse 29; the same application in verse 42; also in verse 52; and thus universal salvation is established beyond cavil.

Now we will turn back and give it another thought. First, the apostle is writing to the brethren who had believed the gospel he had before preached unto them; predicating their salvation on the faith of this gospel; the resurrection of Christ and the resurrection of the dead; "For if Christ be not raised their faith is vain; they were yet in their sins." After asserting the fact that Christ is risen from the dead, he says, "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead; for as in Adam all die, even so," etc. Here is the double hinge on which the whole matter turns, "as in, or by Adam all die." How die in or by Adam? Why, by partaking Adam's nature; being generated from Adam; being partakers of the same corruptible flesh and blood; resting under the same condemnation; because of sin, death passed upon all; therefore in, or by Adam all die; "even so"—How? "even so"—in like manner, having our connection in Christ (how important for any hope of a future life) "as" we have our connection in Adam; partaking of Christ's nature which is spiritual; being begotten of the Spirit; being re-generated; having this connection, "even so all in Christ," or by Christ—(by virtue of this connection) "shall all be made alive," "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature."

This seems to me to be the plain meaning of this controverted text; and that it has no more reference to all mankind, irrespective of character, than it does to all the beasts of the field, or all the creeping things that creep on the earth.

What is the gospel? And what does it design to do for man? The gospel is good news. Good news of what? Of life. Men are dying. "It is the power of God unto life." "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." What effect does it have on men to die in their sins? They are like the beasts that perish; like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; the grave being the habitation of every one of them; they go to the generation of their fathers; they shall never see light. Thus the principle of the gospel which gives the believer a hope of a future life from the dead, condemns the unbeliever not to see life.

From Wm. H. Whitman.

Cameron, Ill., April 10, 1868.

Br. Storrs: A man from Abingdon, Ill., stopped with us last night. He took the Herald once. He was looked upon as among the best men in the Campbellite church at Abingdon, but his taking the Herald and talking a little truth to his brethren, turned them against him. He is now not very popular among them, and I fear he is trying to turn and gain their confidence again. He says now, that he is fearful we are trying to establish another sect. I claimed that his fears were unfounded. We only claim to follow and hold connection with the living Head of the only true church ever established that will give us life from the dead. The above is a specimen of what is going on here. If any individual is suspected of believing our views, he is attacked by the preachers and private members everywhere with slurs and slang, telling it in crowds, "that fellow believes in a hog heaven, and no hereafter," etc. Such things create a prejudice among the mass that seems impossible to overcome. To see such things (and I could fill a quire of paper giving incidents) going on, strengthens my faith that we hold Bible truth. For all God's servants have had to suffer for their faith. This is a truth that no intelligent Bible scholar will deny, although the mass of the Campbellites now believe different, but it is owing to their ignorance of the Scriptures.

My labor trying to spread the truth must tell for itself in after days. We can only present the truth as we understand it, then leave them to reject or receive it, as they please. Yours, striving to live in obedience to our living head, and obtain life in the age to come.

New Rutland, Ill., April 10, 1868.

Br. Storrs: It is with pleasure I write. It is a matter which interests all who love truth. I wish all God's children could see the truth as it appears to me. I love to search the Scriptures for light on this blessed life theme. When I see the truth so plain, it makes me rejoice in hope. Men tell us that there is a resurrection for both just and unjust; but if there is a resurrection for both classes, none can prove it from the Bible. Why? Because God has never taught it. The preacher says, speaking of what happens to the sons of men, both good and bad, Eccl. ix., 3, "This is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all; yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live; and after that they go to the dead; for to him" [mark this] "that is joined to all the living there is hope." Then you see those who are not joined to all the living have no hope. Hope of what? death or life? Hope of life, or anything else that is done under the sun; as we shall see before we get through; for, "to him that is joined to all the living there is hope; for a living dog is better than a dead lion." Here we are, as Paul says, counted as "the off-scouring of all things;" no better in the world's estimation than a living dog; while the great king of the forest remains in the hands of death forevermore.

"For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything; neither have they any more a reward." Why? Let the text answer. "Neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten." Who is it that has forgotten them? I answer that question by asking another. Who did Job pray to set him an appointed time, and remember me? He prayed to God. Seeing that this is true, it is God who has forgotten these dead "lions." "Also, their love and their hatred, and their envy is now perished." Is what? Is now perished. If they are now perished, they will not have to live and perish again. "Neither have they any more a portion forever in anything that is done under the sun." That "forever" settles controversy and it also harmonizes with Jesus' teachings, Luke xx., 34–38, where the Sadducees attacked him, to see how they might entangle him in his talk and in his teaching. They introduced the subject on this wise, "Master, Moses wrote unto us, if any man's brother die, having a wife, and without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother," etc., seven brethren had this woman; therefore, in the resurrection whose wife of them is she (will she be) for seven had her to wife?" These Sadducees asked a pretty fair question, notwithstanding their unbelief I believe there are a great many just such Sadducees in our days. "Jesus answered and said unto them; the children of this world marry and are given in marriage, but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection; neither can they die any more." "They," who? They that are of the resurrection. If saints and sinners are both to be resurrected, that will make orthodoxy's claim of immortality true: sinners cannot die again; hence, "the soul that sinneth" will not "die" as God has declared they shall, and Jesus was mistaken.

Jesus says, those of the resurrection cannot die any more. Men say some do die again.

I have never found a passage of scripture yet, that teaches Jesus Christ has promised any other life than eternal life; and that life is hid with Christ in God. Jesus says, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." The language used here, plainly explains itself. Speaking of those that have fallen asleep in Christ, (John ii. 25, 26), he adds: Whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never never die." Speaking of his living disciples on the earth at this day. What a word of cheer and peace this is to the believer's heart. Let me say to all, let us be faithful or full of faith, and endeavor to follow Jesus through evil as well as through good report. He had many frowns to bear, and if we suffer with him, we have the promise of reigning with him in his kingdom. Seeing that this is true, let us pray the more earnest, as we see the day approaching.

Elder J. Lewis, in Illinois, writes: We have preached in many new places and scattered not a few tracts and found people generally anxious to hear and desirous that we should visit them again. Nothwithstanding our labor is more severe than any of our brethren east can imagine, except such as have tried it, we would not give it up for any earthly comfort. We will preach the word in hope of bringing men to the knowledge of the truth; and we give glory to God that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. We find the seed springing up all around, and soon we shall reap if we faint not. Pray for us, that our faith fail not. We go to Mode in a few days, where we expect to get those "two packages" of "Life from the Dead" you sent us, and then away we go in the strength of the Lord, singing as we go,

"O to grace how great a debtor
Daily I'm constrained to be," etc.

Brethren cheer up; the battle is sure to turn on our side, for God is with us. My faith was never stronger than now. The tract operation is just the thing with the "Battering Ram" to do its work. Brethren, you are doing nobly; so keep on and the Lord will bless you. I send 50 cents to help the tract cause.

Dr. Bellows writes from Berlin to the Liberal Christian: "The education to cleanliness, decent manners, good carriage and respectful behavior, which this great camp called Prussia secures, is something most instructive to see. The soldiers do not look brutal, coarse, or sensual. There is some secret about their training which neither the French nor English have caught."

Lily of the Field.

Nothing can be more striking to even a casual observer of nature than the contrast between the handiworks of God and the productions of man. Of the latter, none are so skilfully executed that scrutiny will not expose manifold imperfections, while the closest examinations of the former that can be made, with the assistance of scientific appliances, reveal only beauty and perfection. The following from an old number of the New York Observer, on this subject, can scarcely fail to interest all readers. L. C. T.

"In the reign of Solomon, the kingdom of Judah reached the acme of its splendor. He was the wisest, the richest, and the most powerful of kings.

"So widely extended was the fame of his character and magnificence, that distant nations came to add their portion to the sum of his glory. The grandest manifestations of his prosperity and power were, when the king appeared, arrayed in robes of finest texture, sitting upon the throne of ivory overlaid with pure gold. It was no mere display of barbaric magnificence, dazzling to the eye of sense, with the glitter of gold, and the glare of brilliant colors. It was the suitable expression of that blessing which crowned the kingdom and its king. All that earth could furnish, and art apply, was centred upon him, who set forth in his own person the glory of the state. When our Saviour desired to impress his disciples with the superiority of the least of the works of God to the greatest of the works of man, he compared the humble beauty of the flowers at their feet with the utmost that could be accomplished by human taste and skill.

"'Consider,' said he, 'the lilies of the field, they toil not, neither do they spin, and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.' We need not make a garland of these lilies, nor seek a meadow covered with their varied brightness, in order to find what surpasses the brilliant costume of the richest king. A single one of these frail flowers is clothed with finer texture, adorned with richer hues, and expresses more of that perfection in form and color which delights the eye and heart. As he stood before the altar, the royal robes of Solomon hung in graceful folds and shone with the purple blush of Tyre, but no angel's wings swept in more graceful curves than that in which this lily of the field upturns its blushing face to the light and dews of heaven.

"In these lilies of the field there is brightness not of materials prepared and arranged by human hands, but the living brightness that flows directly from the hand of God. There is life in these flowers: every tint glows with the warmth of the unseen love which gives it being. It is not like the beaming stars, nor the glory of western cloudiness, for it shines with the mysterious power of the living principle; it has a breathing and growth toward the source of all true loveliness in this world, and that which is to come.

"Let us learn another lesson from the lily of the field. How small a portion of its exquisite beauty is within the reach of our vision. Look with a true heart and loving spirit, study its wondrous mechanism, its faultless form, seek for the secret of its 'tender grace,' and when you have read all that eye can see, and have felt all that heart can receive, remember that you know but in part, that you see the beauty of this flower only through a glass darkly. It has a wealth of beauty that to you is entirely imperceptible. Scientific aids, increasing wonderfully your natural powers of observation, only reveal the fact that there is an infinity of beauty concealed within the compass of these leafy walls.

"Now, if the God of love, the Father of glory, has concealed such beauty, when he reveals himself in the light of a single flower, how much has he treasured up beyond the reach of mortal vision within those foundations of precious stones; how much has he concealed in the buds of precious promise, in the flowers of living hope that rise with heavenly fragrance, beside still waters, in those green pastures where he makes his flock to rest at noon.

"Is there a joy unspeakable in the humblest flower that springs up beneath the touch of his finger? What must be the fulness of joy when he reveals the fashion of his own glorious body, according to his mighty power? Let us learn from one of these lilies of the field that we know but in part; but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. Then shall we know even as we are known."

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity; by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or, The Wicked Dead remain eternally under death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letters to a Clergyman; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburg, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for 2 cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our own expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

THE INHERITANCE OF THE SAINTS.

A SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

TEXT.—"The meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Psa. xxxvii., 11.

The previous two verses are as follow: "Evil doers shall be cut off, but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth. For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." Here come in the words of our text. Our Lord Jesus Christ taught the same truth in these words—"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. v., 5.

These texts have given theologians and speculators a vast deal of trouble. Some undertake to explain away their obvious meaning by insisting that the truly meek enjoy more of the earth while they are in it, in their present state, than other men. We do not wish to detract from the enjoyment of the good, yet we know it not unfrequently happens that the most meek are those who are subjected to the greatest amount of trial and suffering: and, morever, Paul, who we presume was a good judge in such matters, once said, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable," a declaration which clearly implies that the miseries of the life of the true believer here are only to be endured by the help of the hope which we have in Christ of the life hereafter. The present life of Christians is appointed to be one of trial: "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," and "scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."

We are free to say that all speculation about this simple statement of the meek inheriting the earth, has furnished no satisfactory explanation that would militate against the plainly declared fact that "earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints." If this great truth could be established in the hearts of men, what an immense amount of unnecessary talk about "going to heaven" it would save.

We have read the Bible carefully, and prayerfully, and have yet to find one single passage which says anything about men going to heaven, either immediately after death or at any other time. These preachers "about going to heaven" talk much about a happy place off, somewhere, "beyond the bounds of time and space," which simply means nowhere. Such language we do not find in the Bible, but that the meek shall inherit the earth is unequivocally reiterated.

We shall now endeavor to show by the Scriptures of truth that the earth, not heaven, is the inheritance God has designed for his saints, conditioned on a moral development in harmony with himself. We shall argue this from

THE ACCOUNT OF MAN'S CREATION, AND FROM VARIOUS PROPHECIES.

"And God said, let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them; and God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth." Gen. i., 26–28.

The second chapter speaks on this wise—"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground" . . . . "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there he put the man he had formed: and out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil." . . . . "The Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden, to dress it, and to keep it: and the Lord God commanded the man, saying, "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

What does all this teach? Is there anything in this narrative which once intimates that God formed man for any other sphere than this earth? Men may fancy this; they may fancy they have immortal souls, that cannot live on earth after leaving the body. But fancy is one thing, and the proof of its being true is another. In Psalm cxv., 16, we read, "The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men." From the statement already referred to, we learn that man was formed to have dominion over the earth, not over things in heaven.

Again, Psa. viii., 3–8, we have a most concise explanation of what was implied by "man's dominion"—that it was over the works pertaining to this earth and its animate inhabitants inferior to himself. Thus, "Thou hast made him" [man] "a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet; all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field, the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the sea."

Man had been fitted for this position by his Creator, in endowing him with the capacity to obtain knowledge, in which particular, we think, consisted the likeness which man bore to the image of his Maker. But the objector would say, this confinement of man to earth, with all his wonderful endowments and aspirations, looks like "small business." Not so, however, thought the Psalmist, when he exclaimed, with rapture, "O LORD, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth."

We do not affirm, however, that the saints will be "confined" to the earth. It is to be their inheritance—their home. If they travel to other worlds—as they may for aught we can tell—still their home is here. It is pleasant to a traveller to know he has a home, and that it is a delightful one. But to resume our argument:

Man was directed to "multiply and replenish the earth," i. e., to fill the earth with inhabitants, not to provide them for heaven. "What!" says the astonished inquirer, "was he not rather intended to generate souls to fill heaven, or some place outside of earth?" If he was, there was nothing revealed about it, and it is remarkable that no hint is anywhere given of such design in the account of his creation, or in that of his trial for the development of a moral character. Again, man was commanded to subdue the earth—not to multiply and replenish the earth, and gain heaven, but to "subdue the earth." "But what subduing did the earth want," it may be asked, "seeing that it was pronounced very good?" The answer to this is, that "very good" did not imply a perfection that could not be improved or increased. The earth, doubtless, was made "very good" for the purpose for which it was designed; but there is evidently a great propensity among theologians to exaggerate about the perfections of the work of creation. Thus, it is gravely asserted that Adam was not only physically perfect, but equally so in all his moral qualities. This is an absurdity, as these qualities could only be made manifest by trial. A moral element in man's nature, could, in fact, only be developed by trial; and until such trial there could, of course, be no holiness, a term which means neither more nor less than harmony with God. Men talk loudly about "holiness" who, it is to be feared, in many cases, know as little about it as a blind man knows about colors.

From the divine record it is evident that God did not make man to be an idle being. He was designed to improve himself and the things around him, as the scene of his glory and future reward.

The Creator did not carry his own work to its highest perfection, but only so far as to furnish the new-made being, man, with everything needful for perfecting himself and multiplying his own happiness without limit, except as all was to be conducted in harmony with the will of his Creator.

Thus was an ample field opened for man's cultivation, improvement, and continually advancing enjoyment. No wonder it is said—when the LORD had thus produced man, and spread out his work for him—"And GOD saw everything he had made, and behold, it was very good." Gen. i., 31.

The denial of perfection to our progenitor, and the whole physical creation, we know is unpalatable to many, and by such, the question is asked, with an air of triumph, "Was not the garden which the LORD God planted eastward in Eden perfect?" Certainly it was; but if all the world outside of it was as perfect, we would ask, in return, in what respect this garden differed from the rest of earth? And yet, perfect as was this garden, man was commanded to "dress and to keep it;" and, besides this, to multiply and replenish the earth. There is reason to infer from the history that God had left all the world outside of Eden in a comparatively uncultivated state, with Eden in its perfection to stand as a copy for man to keep before him in his efforts to "subdue" the whole into conformity to the pattern thus given him. We fancy we hear some exclaiming, What a delightful place the earth will be if it is ever made a universal Eden! Yes, one would think, almost good enough for man to live in without going off to heaven, or some other place, the invention of his imagination.

But this work of subduing the whole earth to a paradisiacal state has suffered a serious interruption by man's fall. In consequence of man's disobedience, by showing an unlawful desire to obtain knowledge from a forbidden source, he was driven forth from Eden, to subdue the earth by the aid of his own inventions; as if the Almighty had said, "You have sought knowledge in a way forbidden; now, then, go forth and perform the task allotted unto you, without the advantage of the copy which I gave you to work by; you have preferred your own way, and henceforth you must rely solely upon your own inventions."

We have not introduced this, however, as proving in itself God's design to make the earth the inheritance of the saints. By Adam's transgression evil came into the world. Man was overcome, lost his independence and dominion. Sorrow, pain and death followed. It is in consequence of this result, we suppose, that under the common teaching of the day the Christian so often expresses himself as "sighing for heaven." And yet with all this sighing, we have not found a single individual—not even the most eminent minister—who was willing to go without first securing the best medical aid to keep him from it. The most skilful physicians are employed by these men—virtually to keep them from going to that heaven for which they profess to be sighing! After all, it would seem this willingness to go to heaven is but a last alternative when they find they must die. Now, the error of all this is, men do not look at the promises as they are given. If they were to look out over the earth as it is to be made by the "Second Adam"—Jesus, the Messiah, to whom has been given authority to deliver the earth from the dominion of evil—the future earth would have a very different aspect.

Do any suppose GOD will suffer evil to retain its dominion forever? JEHOVAH'S wisdom, honor and power, to say nothing of his other perfections, are all involved in this matter. How then is the evil to be remedied? or its power to be destroyed? Is it by removing the posterity of Adam, who return to allegiance to God, to another orb, sphere, or to heaven, and at last destroying the territory, or earth, over which evil has held sway? That would not be a conquest, and would seem not to honor the Creator's wisdom or power. It would seem more in accordance with his wisdom and power that there should be a conquest and destruction of all evil on the territory where the evil exists, and a recovery of the territory itself, and of the lost dominion. But as these were lost by a voluntary giving up, by man, to the evil, that power must be overcome by man, if rightfully overthrown.

Adam by sin relinquished, or forfeited his claim to the dominion over the earth, but he could not invalidate the Creator's right to it; for though, as a free and responsible agent, he could and did relinquish his own authority, God had given him no right or power to transfer or render void his Maker's dominion. But if redeemed to man, it must be done by manhood: it must be regained by a fair and open contest against evil.

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things." "For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world" [oikoumeneen, the habitable earth] "to come, whereof we speak." Heb. i., 1, 2, and ii., 5. Compare this with the following—"Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High." "And in the days of these kings" [the iron and clay divisions of the "fourth," or Roman kingdom], "the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed" . . . . "it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Matt. vi., 10; Dan. vii., 27., and ii., 44. See, also, Dan. vii., 13, 14—"One like the Son of man," . . . . "and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him."

Thus we see who is to have the dominion, and that it is to be "under the whole heaven" and "on earth"—"the habitable earth." Does all this look as if God had determined to remove his people off the territory originally given to men, to some other distant and unknown sphere, or place?

The four great empires typified by the image in Daniel's prophecy, chapter ii., are to be succeeded by another "kingdom" which shall never be destroyed." Where is this indestructible kingdom to be established? The Scriptures answer, "Under the whole heaven." Surely this does not look like taking the saints away to heaven and then destroying the earth. In Prov. xi. we read "Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the wicked and the sinner." A minister once undertook to tell his congregation where hell is and after a great amount of unintelligible speculation, he said it was somewhere outside of God's creation! In this he hit upon the truth, as certainly, the hell popularly believed in, God has never created. "The righteous shall never be removed," is the promise of the Bible. In Prov. ii. we read, "The upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it; but the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." The wicked, then, according to God's word, are to be "rooted out;" they are to be made an end of; in other words, to use a still plainer expression, the wicked are to be annihilated; and then it is that the whole earth shall be brought into a paradisiacal state.

Here we see that both the righteous and wicked are to receive their recompense on the earth. The righteous are never to be removed from it, but the wicked shall not inhabit it. The Scriptures represent the wicked as being removed, or rather destroyed, but the righteous are "to remain." The wicked are to be gathered out of his kingdom (see Matt. xiii., 41, 42,) not the righteous taken out of the territory, or off the earth. So far from the righteous being removed, we are expressly told there is to be a "restitution;" and at that time, instead of the saints being taken up to heaven, Christ the Lord is to come "from heaven," or return to the earth. Let the following texts be read and compared together: "And he shall send Jesus Christ, whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began." Acts iii., 20, 21. "And when he (Jesus) had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel, which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts i., 9–11. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, ... and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee . . . . and the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one LORD, and his name one." Zech. xiv., 4, 5, 9. "Behold the days come, saith the LORD, that I will raise unto David a righteous branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." Jer. xxiii., 5. "Say among the heathen, the LORD reigneth; the world also shall be established that it shall not be moved: he shall judge the people righteously; . . . . he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth." Psa. xciv., 10, 13. "He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and the poor with judgment," [equity.] In his days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace, so long as the moon endureth: he shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth." Psa. lxxii. See the whole Psalm.

We have given a sample, only, of what things "God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets," and which are embraced in the "restitution," when "God shall send Jesus" as the RESTORER.

We shall see in "the restitution" that God made this "world to be inhabited," (Isa. xlv., 18), not to be destroyed. He will claim it from under the dominion of all evil; and with the "Son of God," who is the "Son of man," in possession of the dominion which Adam lost, the earth will be renewed, "subdued," and become the garden of God, or as the garden of Eden.

Thus restored, renewed, and governed, the power of evil destroyed, sin, sorrow, pain and death annihilated, if the earth is not an inheritance that will fully meet the wants and aspirations of those in harmony with God, heaven itself cannot be supposed to afford the means of their gratification. Indeed, such dissatisfied ones must be of the number not possessed of the meekness to whom the "earth inheritance" is promised.

The day of triumph is to be ushered in by exulting "voices in heaven," mighty and "great, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our LORD and of his CHRIST; and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. xi., 15.

Such is to be the consummation of the present conflict with the power of evil, or evil power. The Christ—the anointed of God—the second Adam—is to regain the lost dominion, and to retain it forevermore; and to all the race of Adam who "overcome" the evil power, in their own proper personality, the anointed RESTORER hath said—"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii., 21. Thus, earth delivered, the dominion restored, Christ on his throne, "the throne of his father David," (Lk. ii., 22) which God has "sworn with an oath" to give unto him (Acts ii., 30)—the evil overthrown, the earth reclaimed, and all its arrangements in harmony with the mind of God, war at an end, love everywhere triumphant, peace universal, Paradise revived and enlarged, filling the whole earth, man's inheritance will be perfect, complete, and joyous beyond all present human conception. Glory be to God and the Lamb for such a prospect and such an inheritance.

But, says an objector, "I do not believe Christ is ever coming again at all." Well, we do not suppose you believe that he ever did come. Objector: "O yes I do, but that's no proof that he will ever come again." So, then, you "swallow the camel" that the Son of God really became incarnate, came down to earth, and was found in fashion as a man, suffered the pains of death, rose again, and ascended to his Father, and all in fulfilment of prophecy, while at the same time you "strain at the gnat" that his promise to come again in his glory, and receive his saints, will ever be fulfilled!

"But," says another, "would it not be degrading for immortal saints to be confined to this earth and its employments forever?" We would ask such whether they think it was degrading to God, for him to bring out of chaos the present earth, with all its acknowledged beauty? And is the "disciple above his Lord?" If its creation did not pollute the hand of its Maker, surely dwelling in it, when rescued by the redeeming power of his Son Jesus Christ, ought not to pollute the saints.

As to the probable occupation of the saints on the renewed earth, we have met men in the highest walks of life who took great pleasure in conducting their guests over a handsomely improved rural residence, and pointing out to them the trees and shrubbery planted by their own hands. There is nothing derogatory in such earthly employments now, and why should there be in the new order of things, which will be introduced under the dominion of the second Adam?

We believe the great amount of error existing in the world with regard to this matter is because men have gone off after some intangible things, instead of believing the plain truth, that "the meek shall inherit the earth."

Men are in the habit of spending years of toil and mental anxiety, with the sole object of, at some future time, securing an estate. They subject themselves to privations and exposure to accomplish this, and yet, when secured, it will be possessed but for a short season. How much more willing should they be to labor for that inheritance in the renewed earth, which they may enjoy forever!

"Ah!" says another, "I can't believe that the earth will ever present the delightful appearance of which you speak." You cannot, indeed! and do you believe God can lie? "O no!" rejoins the objector. Well, then, surely the earth will yet become glorious, for the LORD has said, "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the LORD." Now, if you admit that God would not declare an untruth, you would certainly not suspect his doing so and confirming the same with an oath!

Verily, the inheritance promised to the meek is a glorious inheritance, and one for which believers should willingly live, labor, and, if need be, suffer.

WHY ARE YE FEARFUL?

JESUS was reposing. The disciples watched with augmenting anxiety the progress of the boisterous gale that suddenly came sweeping over Galilee. The sea, which only a few moments before softly rocked the little vessel and bore it gently on, was lashed by tempestuous winds until in fury its waves had swelled into gigantic proportions, tossing the ship hither and thither like a toy, and threatening to bury it beneath the angry, violent upheavings of the deep. The anxiety of the disciples became fear, and fear intensified until at last they awoke the Master, eagerly inquiring of him, "Carest thou not that we perish?" "Why," said he, "are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?" "And he rebuked the winds" and commanded the sea to be still, and all was again calm. Had Jesus ever manifested to his disciples his wonderful power? Yes, his first great miracles had just been wrought. From the Mount he had delivered a discourse setting forth the nature and principles of the dispensation just being introduced. So full of heavenly wisdom were his words; so deep, searching, and radical the truths he proclaimed; so clear his statements; so forcible and persuasive his exhortations; so sound his doctrines and irresistible his arguments; so unquestionably did his remarks bear the impress of divine emanation, that the people were astonished; for unlike the scribes, "he taught them as one having authority." At his word of command that foul, loathsome, dreadful disorder, leprosy, had shrunk back, loosed its hold and fled, leaving the dry scales to fall from the suffering victim, the parched skin to receive back its accustomed moisture, and the blood to flow again in delightful coolness. Warmly eulogizing the implicit faith of the centurion whose servant lay sick with palsy, he said unto him, "As thou hast believed, so be it unto thee," and immediately that servant's impotence became strength, his languid nerves were quickened into obedience to will, and his grievously tormenting malady chased away.

To the mother of Peter's wife, his touch had given buoyancy for heaviness, vigor for enervation, had arrested the excited throbbings of her accelerated pulse, put consuming, wasting fever to flight, raised her from a bed of languishing and pain, and flushed her cheek with health. To the display of a heathen soldier's faith, and to very many exhibitions of superhuman power had the disciples been witnesses. Why, then, were they now so fearful? Was not Jesus with them? Had he not chosen them? And would he not protect them? Yes, this was all so; yet the first hour of trial had proved their lack of faith. They had not yet learned to trust the Master.

How strange, passing strange, says the Christian of to-day, that the disciples, so constantly and intimately associated with our Lord, were thus slow to learn. A glance at the circumstances may thus impress some minds, but is the conclusion wholly warranted? As yet it could scarcely be said of the disciples that they had begun to comprehend the character of Christ's mission; much less have understood the conspicuous part it remained for them to take in establishing the new faith. Faith is developed by trial, and until now their experience had not been such as to specially require its exercise. While the religion in which they were being indoctrinated was essentially an inward one, a religion of the heart, one of its vital elements, that grand manifestation and finishing up of the system, the gift of the Holy Spirit, had not yet transpired. So that though the light of truth began to blaze around them, daily associated though they were with the great head of the church, they had as yet recognized but the faintest gleams of truth compared with the fulness thereof soon to be revealed and demonstrated.

If, under the circumstances, the disciples were chargeable at the hands of the Master with too little exercise of faith, what must be said of us in this enlightened age of gospel light and power? We who have access both to the "law and the prophets," and that higher and more perfect covenant, wherein that made with Moses on behalf of the children of Israel, met its accomplishment. We who are not only permitted to behold the Christian dispensation in its perfection, as a system, but have before us for our encouragement and instruction the recorded testimonies of myriads of faithful servants, sanctified by gospel truth, whose experiences unanimously attest the efficacy and substantiability of that wherein they trusted. If we are not deceiving ourselves, we may know of a surety, by "this spirit" bearing witness with our spirit" that we are the children of God. This being so, we but dishonor him and the truth by yielding to doubt and distrust, since we have the assurance that "all things work together for good to them that love God." We always find it easy to trust in the Lord when things go smoothly, when the sky of our experience is not darkened by trial and gloom. Why are we fearful when the dark clouds of adversity and affliction gather about us? Are we not watched over by a good and faithful Shepherd, of whose kind care we are always subjects? In the mind of every Christian two considerations, intimately related, should ever be eminent; Christ, the once humble leader and pattern, but now glorified Redeemer; and self, a dependent, but richly-favored follower. To him we may always look, and in all our trials remember that he has suffered far more, and is ever ready to "succor them that are tried," if they only confide in him.

Are we, then, poor, in this world's goods; poverty, grim and gaunt, pressing heavily upon us? We may wander back over the lapse of eighteen centuries and watch the scribe as in the confidence of inexperience he says, "Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest;" and may listen to the sad, cautionary reply, "foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." Are we falsified and maligned because of the warfare we wage upon the traditions of men; despised for our loyalty to truth; persecuted for righteousness' sake? We hear self-righteous men charging Jesus to his face with blasphemy and we incline our ear to the humble Son of God as he speaks those precious words of consolation and promise, "blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."

Are those we love, around whom our tenderest affections twine so closely that they are a part of our very being, living without God, cold, and deaf to all our entreaties, reveling in all sin, tottering upon the brink of destruction? We climb the hillside overlooking Jerusalem, seat ourselves at the feet of our Lord as he looks forth upon the loved but proud, ungrateful city; we note upon his placid, benignant features the gathering shades of sadness, watch the tear-dimmed eye and quivering lip that reveal the violent convulsions of mental anguish raging within, and which at last break forth in pathetic lamentation; "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." Does fortune smile so feebly upon us that we ofttimes turn from the treasury of the Lord with hearts made heavy by the reflection that we can cast so little therein; that we cannot give more to help the spread of truth? We observe Christ as he sits over against the treasury" in the temple, watching the people, as one by one, they cast in their offerings; we observe how well he marks the "poor widow," contributing her mites, and joy wells up in our hearts as we hear him extol the quality of her humble gift. In none of our trials and temptations are we without the beacon light of Christ's perfect example.

NEW YORK.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to GUESS them out. Also in ordering, the name of the POST OFFICE, COUNTY, AND STATE must be given, and written plainly; and if a CHANGE is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

We have, doubtless, all sometimes felt during our experience in the service of the Lord that a certain course of events was indispensable to the accomplishment of some end which we believed would secure blessings to ourselves or others; and have strenuously labored to direct those events, feeling, as we worked and prayed for assistance, a degree of confidence that God's ways in that particular matter must be as our ways. We remember how disappointed and sorrowful we were when our plans were frustrated and our designs seemingly brought to nought; remember how we thanked God and praised him when it became apparent that he had been overruling our misdirected efforts, bringing about, in his own good time and way, results more glorious than we had conceived of. Surely, therefore, we need not give place to fear or distrust, whatever circumstances may surround us, knowing that in all, we are wholly dependent upon Omnipotence. The eyes of an unbelieving world are upon all who profess to be Christ's disciples, and hence to render effective service we must be unswerving in our loyalty to him, unceasing in our efforts to maintain such a degree of faithfulness and consistency as to challenge the admiration of unbelievers, and so fully demonstrate to them that the path of righteousness is one of joy and peace and trust, that they may be induced to seek Christ and walk in his ways. Great will be the holy influence of our example, and happy will be ourselves if we at all times repose implicit faith in him who, having trodden the "path of life" and shown it unto us, stands ready to abundantly assist all who will follow, forsaking none. SANCTIFICATION.

THERE is much written on the subject of sanctification, or holiness; and there seems to be also a vagueness of idea with many as to what it is, or how attained. Now it seems to me that this vagueness or confusion of idea is entirely unnecessary, If we would study the word of God on this subject, I think we should see as plainly what he means, in regard to this, as any other simple truth. When we once apply with saving faith to him whose blood cleanseth from all sin, and hear him saying to us, "Thy sins are all forgiven thee, go and sin no more," what more can we have?

If in the blood of Christ there is full and complete redemption, are we not then pardoned, justified, saved? I cannot see that God has promised us anything more than this, except the Holy Spirit which "all who believe on him shall receive," to "lead them into all truth," and to assist them to "go on to perfection."

Paul tells us, in Rom. v., 1, that "being justified by faith, we have peace with God;" then says, in Heb. vi., 1, "Leaving the first principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection." Peter tells how we are to do so, in 1 Peter first chapter—"Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity," etc. For if ye do these things ye shall never fail. For so an entrance shall be administered to you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Paul, also, in Phil. iii. 12, says, "Not as though I had already attained, or were already perfect, but I follow after;" and goes on to say in the 14th verse "Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Now it appears to me, from the foregoing and many other passages which might be mentioned, that, instead of trying to bring ourselves into a state of "conviction," as it is often expressed, to enable us to seek and pray for this blessing, it should be our business to see that we carefully follow the rules laid down, and with the help of that Holy Spirit which is promised, add to our faith (which is the first starting point) all these things which are required, and thus "bring forth the fruits of the Spirit," and grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ;" and thus be "sanctified through the truth," in what appears to be the only scriptural way, through faith and obedience to him who says, "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

May the Spirit of him who "worketh in us to will and to do of his good pleasure," lead us into all truth, that we may thus "perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.
NEW YORK, APRIL 29, 1868.
NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK.

PLEASE take notice of the above statement. Forty-eight numbers make a volume, according to our terms. Hence we have a week, occasionally, when no paper is issued. The first week in May is one of them. New York City, especially, is a place where everything is in confusion at that time, from there being so much "moving," or changing residences.

Let our subscribers, who change their location, inform us without delay, to what street and number we shall send their paper. Otherwise they may lose several; as, having sent their paper once they cannot calculate on our having another for them if that fails to find them. Do not neglect this matter a single day.

WE are now prepared at short notice, to supply any number of these works from one copy each to 1,000. We suggest to our friends everywhere to take hold of the circulation of these works systematically.

We propose the following method, where persons live at a distance from you, and you wish the work sent by mail. Write the person's name and P. O. address plain: send us 12 cents, and we will forward the above two works, and the two tracts "Can you Believe?" and "Twenty Questions on Immortality," all in one envelope, postage paid. How can you do more to spread the truth with twelve cents? Now is the time to work; and the poorest can do something. See the following interesting item. It is a sample of information we sometimes receive from strangers. The writer lives in Iowa. He says:

A few weeks ago I received from some one, through the P. O., one number of the HERALD OF LIFE. It contained some things new to me, and I sent an order for a few of your "Bible Examiner Tracts;" which were received; also, "LIFE FROM THE DEAD," which I did not order. The explanations of the holy Scriptures contained in these small works are so in unison with my own views, and I believe with reason, that I am constrained to thank you for them. Although, while professing to believe the Bible to be the word of God, I have ever been finding fault with my Maker for making an endless hell. I could not and cannot reconcile it with the character of one who is revealed to us as a God of love; and who is far more ready to give his spirit to those who ask him, than earthly parents are to give good gifts to their children. There are many passages in the Bible which yet seem to me to stand in the way, or in opposition to your views; yet I have become so interested in the subject by what I have already read, I desire to know more.

Enclosed you find one dollar and twenty cts. Send the HERALD for six months to me, and the twenty cents are to pay for the "LIFE FROM THE DEAD," you sent me; or, if you do not wish to accept it, send in place of it one number of your paper to the following named persons.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—We have sent the papers; and who can tell how much good will be the result from the one paper first sent. Never, probably, has there been a time when we could accomplish more with small means than now. Many minds are hungering for the bread of life. They have been fed with "stones" till they are well nigh dead, or just ready to give up in hopeless despair of ever seeing a theology that harmonizes with the truth, "GOD IS LOVE."

THE RESURRECTION OF THE WICKED.—No. 4.

BY DR. N. FIELD.

(1.) WILL Br. Storrs, or any other respondent, inform the readers of the HERALD what the first resurrection mentioned in Rev. xx. means? Suppose, for example, the whole chapter is figurative, and that there is nothing literal in its technology, but nevertheless the figures represent something real and literal. Now what are the things represented? And be it remembered that whatever they do represent was far in the future when John had the vision. As far in the future as the commencement of the millennial age.

(2.) As I wish to be brief and come at the question in the plainest way possible, I have always believed that a literal resurrection of the dead is taught in chapter xx. of Revelation. Also a day of judgment and all its concomitants. I cannot, therefore, abandon my long-cherished convictions without a good reason for it. I repeat the statement, that if a literal resurrection of the dead is not taught in that chapter, then there is nothing of it in the Apocalypse. John had no vision of such an event.

(3.) If the first resurrection is literal, so is the second, which, as I have already shown, is clearly implied, and will take place at the end of a thousand years from the first. On the other hand, if the first be figurative, so is the second. What I wish to learn, is, what ideas have Br. Storrs and his co-operants of these resurrections. What do they signify? Let us have a fair and rational exposition of the whole chapter.

(4.) I once heard Br. Storrs, on the final destruction of the wicked, and he took the ground, and as I then thought, and still think, was perfectly tenable, that the resurrection of the wicked is taught in that chapter. And that after coming up on the New Earth, they would be devoured by fire from heaven. But he has discovered to his own satisfaction that the view was erroneous, and he now believes, and no doubt honestly, that no such thing is brought to view in the chapter, not even the resurrection of the righteous!

(5.) It is passing strange that John Thomas, who is as much of a materialist as any man living, should find, as he asserts, positive proof that no man will be resurrected immortal, but all will be resurrected mortal, to all intents and purposes, and in that condition appear before the judgment seat of Christ for trial. If found worthy, they will then be made immortal. If not, destroyed forever. All this will transpire long after being restored to mortal life!! This is one extreme, and the resurrection of none but immortal beings is another. John Thomas is so certain that he is right on the doctrine of a mortal resurrection of the saints, that he makes it a test of fellowship. All who cannot subscribe to this new dogma are cut off from his Christadelphian Association; or, as it was once called, "The Royal Association of believers in the Gospel of the Kingdom."

Thus we go on multiplying sects, teaching contradictory doctrines, and confusing the minds of the people with interminable theological hobbies.

Jeffersonville, Ind.

RESPONSE TO DR. FIELD.

To save a repetition of our Br.'s words, in our response, we have again placed figures at the commencement of his paragraphs to which we reply, so that the reader can easily refer to the matter without our quoting his words.

(1.) In a previous response we have shown the improbability of Rev. xx., 4, 5, being a statement of a literal resurrection; but even if it is, it does not follow that the wicked dead are embraced in the phrase "the rest of the dead;" for it is clear that it is a specified class of the saints who are the subjects of "the first resurrection," viz., "Them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus," etc., which certainly does not embrace all the saints. If our Br. will have this resurrection literal, let him keep to the literal, and not assume that those "beheaded for the witness of Jesus" embrace all the saints that will ever have life from the dead. We should think his intelligent mind would discover the language cannot be taken literal, and prove the resurrection of all classes of the servants of God, hence does not prove that "the rest of the dead" embraces any of the wicked.

(2.) Whether John had a "vision of such an event" as the resurrection or not, does not, it seems to us, touch the question at issue between Br. Field and ourself. If he had such a vision, the point to be settled is, Did that resurrection embrace the wicked dead? So far, we see no evidence that it did, and hence reject such an idea.

(3.) That the "thousand years" are yet in the future, is more than can be proved, and many consider them in the past. We do not affirm which is the correct view, as it is of no consequence to our argument. As to "a fair and rational exposition of the whole chapter," we think Br. F. and ourself will be more than "three score and ten" before we shall find any expositor to give us such an "exposition." We have seen speculation enough on it to make one sick of all expositors. We know as much about it now as the disciples did of the time of Christ's return from heaven. We know whoever waits patiently will, in "the times appointed of the Father," know all about it, that concerns him to know. Our business is to watch, work and pray, till God shall open our minds, by events, to understand the Scriptures more perfectly, At present "we see through a glass darkly."

(4.) Br. Field has made a very fair statement of what we taught twenty-five years ago, when we were just emerging from the darkness and superstition that has enveloped the church and the world on the character and government of God. We are glad Br. F. gives us credit for confessing and abandoning such an "error" as that the pure and holy God is determined to revive all the filthy, wicked beings that have ever lived on this "sin cursed earth," and that in all their wickedness, and bring them "up on the New Earth," to devour them in that pure atmosphere. Perish such a thought. God is not the great "Revivalist" of sin and wickedness, as he would be on the preposterous idea of such a resurrection.

If the literal resurrection of the righteous is brought to view in Rev. xx., we say again it does not follow that the wicked dead are also presented there alive from the dead. But if the literal deliverance of the righteous from death is not a revelation of that chapter, it is elsewhere abundantly exhibited in the Bible in the most literal manner, and in all forms of expression; so that we lose nothing on that subject, whatever view we take of Rev. xx.

We may suggest, however, one thing is tolerably clear: Rev. xx. is a symbolical representation of the final triumph of the church of God, at some stage of its history, and of the complete overthrow of all its enemies, especially of all those earth-born governments which have been the chief instruments in persecuting the true church. Above all these dragonic powers the church is to rise, or have a resurrection, but whether this is all to be accomplished at one time, or at several, making two or more distinct periods of the triumph, we presume not to determine with certainty, nor is it essential that we should, so long as the symbols make the triumph certain, and finally complete, putting "down all rule, all authority and power" that opposes the supreme rule of Christ. See 1 Corth. xv., 24, 25. We think the whole structure of the symbols employed in Rev., from chap. xii. to the end, shows a mighty conflict of the church with wicked civil and ecclesiastical organizations, which tread her down, so that she is symbolically represented as dead, but finally, either in several divisions, or all at one time, she rises victorious over all these wicked organized bodies of her oppressors.

(5.) Br. Field, it is unkind in you to put us, even in contrast, along with that Dr. Thomas. You know, we have ever held our views in charity. We never made them a test of fellowship with any man. We have struggled hard to keep all whom we could influence from a sectarian spirit; that is, from thinking or speaking of other professing Christians, as if they were not really such, simply because they did not, or do not agree with us in our theological views. We believe, and have always maintained, that there are sincere Christians in all denominations, not even excepting Roman Catholics, and we fellowship all, of every sect and denomination, who show the spirit of Christ in their tempers and walk.

Why, then, Br. Field, should you mention our name in connection with one who, according to your statement, has no such element in his nature or theory? It was cruel for you to do so. But we forgive you, knowing we are all liable to err. If our theology compelled us to take the course you say that man has done, we would abandon it to-day, fully believing that such a spirit could be begotten only in a heart at enmity with God and his whole revealed character. May our heavenly Father teach us all to love one another, for "love is of God; he that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love." We are all liable to error, and none of us can say, "We know we have the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." The man who presumes to do this, gives sad evidence that he knows nothing yet as he ought to know.

We have never attempted to organize a sect, and do not believe we ever shall have anything to do in such business. We have had twenty-eight years experience, disconnected from all sects, except the one "sect of Nazarenes." To that sect you and all sincere Christians belong; and we ardently pray, that ere long they may all meet in that inheritance where we shall "see eye to eye," and there be no more occasion to say we are "teaching contradictory doctrines." Then we shall have come to that "perfect" state where we "shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known;" and whatever of involuntary or unavoidable error may have attended us here, we shall gladly part with then "when that which is perfect has come."

In hope of that blissful state, let us strive to cultivate a spirit toward each other that shall approximate as near as possible, in this imperfect state, to that harmony that shall be "when Christ who is our life shall appear," that then we may "also appear with him in glory."

We trust nothing we have said on the subject of charity, or toleration, will be construed into an idea that we are indifferent as to what men believe. If we were, we would not have spent our time and energies as we have, for years, in endeavoring to find and promulgate views so unpopular as we are doing. We know, and have always known, there is an easier way to travel, and a way of honor which cometh from men, but we preferred the honor that cometh from God. While we, therefore, extend charity to all who manifest the spirit of Christ, we greatly desire that they may be led to see that wrong views of God's character and government are not so promotive of fervent love to God and his Christ as right ones, nor do they give that "perfect peace" of mind. We desire, therefore, that all sincere souls may come to know the truth in its fulness and glory. But because they do not know it more perfectly, or because when they see it they are afraid to go to it; or, beginning to approach, they discover the raging winds and waves of persecution rolling around them, they begin to sink, as Peter did when he set out to go to Jesus on the water, shall we "cut them off" from our fellowship because they are of "little faith?" Would that be Christlike? We think not. The man who rejects all who cannot fully agree with his views, if he has associates or followers, will be very likely to be surrounded by hypocrites or simpletons.

One word on "hobbies." This is a fearful word to an ignorant and superstitious person. Br. Field is not such an one. He knows the term means, "Any favorite object; that which a person pursues with zeal or delight." But the ignorant suppose it is a wild beast, with hoofs and horns, not unlike Daniel's "fourth beast," that was "terrible," and is to stamp on and "tread down the whole earth." Some men, for lack of Bible argument, sometimes call their opponent's views a "hobby." This is certainly not generous if they are intelligent men themselves, for it gives a wrong impression on the minds of the unenlightened. Every man has his "hobby" unless he is an idiot, or too indolent to think and act. Our "hobby" is "Life beyond the grave only in and through Christ, who is "the resurrection and the life." That glorious truth we endeavor to promulgate with "zeal and delight."

THE DRAMA AGAIN.

WE not long since remarked at some length upon this leading staple of public amusements in all large cities and in many smaller ones; and, in speaking of an immoral play that had long been continued adverted to the recent production of a shameless one, in the following language. "Encouraged by its success, the proprietor of another theatre soon afterward, as might have been expected, commenced the presentation of one still more offensive to purity and decency." A western merchant, lately visiting this city on business, accepted an invitation to witness the play last above referred to, and gives, through the columns of one of our dailies, a graphic description of it as seen by himself. We might give the delineation entire, but the fact is, that, though the writer depicts the disgusting, debasing scenes enacted, the indecent exposures of person particularly aimed at, in language as delicate as justice to the subject would permit, it is really unfit for the columns of a religious paper, or for any paper, except for the purpose of exposing and denouncing all such infamous offences against the moral sense and decency of the community. After describing the play the writer continues.

The next most important object is the audience. A friend had furnished me with a glass for the occasion, which, though not much dissimilar to those in fashionable hands, was made for another purpose, was of great power, and I could see which of the dancers were powdered, which had painted carmine lips, and which were padded. It was so powerful that what to most others appeared as charming faces showed me anxious and distressful eyes, and for the second time in my life I learned that a woman may have the most enchanting smile on her lips while her heart is sinking with despair. As the hours passed one exposure was followed by another, and, if possible, by a new one.

Every man who goes to such a place at once looks to the ladies in the audience, for he wonders what it is that can be attractive to their eyes. To every man the first sight is repulsive, and it can be no less so to a woman. The change in the mind seems to come gradually and by a process similar to acquiring a liking for unnatural, or even disgusting stimulants. We know a little, but perhaps enough, of magnetic influences, and it is not improbable that a woman's ideas in such a place are second-hand. In casting my glass around the audience, near the close of one of the most noted displays, I saw several ladies with trembling lips, but in a moment they assumed their accustomed firmness. Finally, with little beauty, and less meaning, with a confusion of fern leaves, a reclining of partly nude figures, of ascending and descending designs, and amidst a gleaming and glare of various colored lights the curtain fell on the infamous scene. Half stifled by the close air, choked and partly benumbed, the audience slid away like a guilty throng, many huskily remarking to others upon the splendor of the closing view.

The intention of the managers undoubtedly is to make money, and having studied human nature, they found it easiest to debauch it. One of my first impressions on beholding so many young women capable of adorning society, and being made happy, yet so lost to shame, was that they felt it would be a greater shame to earn an honest living, or that they had sought it in vain. Turning to the audience, I could not help thinking that each had a poor opinion of each. The lady coming in with a gentleman either had been cold to her husband or had left him, or was in a fair way to leave him, or she had never been married, but had better be; that gentleman bringing a lady whose train swept the aisle, had other claims far away, or his domestic life was feverish and unhappy; and the young men, coming by themselves, had come to lay the foundation for domestic infidelity, and for a waste of opportunities and means. The saddest sight sight was in the young couples with rosy cheeks and hopeful eyes. How many sittings are required to corrupt a young girl I do not know, but I felt that no place can equal this for debauching the soul, and that when a girl, at last is delighted with these scenes, her day of ruin cannot be far away. For, before one comes to admire these things, the finest sensibilities must be shocked beyond expression, and modesty be degraded to the dust.

With our wealth, education and refinement, with improvements on every hand, and with everything that could make us happy, except a knowledge of what happiness is, we are not going to stop at any White Fawns. Emboldened by the silence of the laws, by the gradual growth of debauchery, by the taste for strong drink, both in women and men, and impelled by a greed for pleasure, we will accumulate still more corruption and obscenity. For already a company has arrived in this city from Paris, fully prepared to give the public, so soon as the poison of the White Fawns and the Black Crooks shall have done its work, the next lesson, and this not only in New York, but everywhere through seaboard and interior cities, till at last other Neroes and Caligulas shall reappear in the full light of the blazing sun.

How often do we hear men and women professing membership of the church of Christ, defending the "stage," and protesting that occasional presence at the drama does them no harm. Supposing for the moment, this to be true, which it cannot be, does it never occur to them that they are, by the force of their example, alluring others down the broad way which leads to destruction? Do they never, when engaged in pastime which is regarded by so many as of, at least, doubtful propriety, think of that scene of suffering and agony on Calvary, when the rejected Saviour and king "poured out his soul unto death," and wonder whether it may not be that they are leading some to crucify him afresh? THE MEMPHIS MISSION.

This is a mission among the "Freedmen," established some time since by believers in the soon coming kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. ELD. J. V. HIMES, if we understand it, first moved in that work. About the same time Dr. Leslie and a Br. Reed were induced to go to Memphis, Tenn., to labor in that field. We have before mentioned this work in referring to Eld. Himes' "Journal" of his visits in that vicinity. He has recently returned to Memphis, and accompanying him was MARTHA STEERE from Harmony, R. I., who "pays her own expenses, at present, and looks to the resurrection of the just for her reward."

We give the following extracts from Eld. Himes' Journal, as showing the object and prospects of this mission at the present time, April 10th. He writes:

At half-past three P. M. we arrived at Memphis, in health and safety. Sr. Steere stood the journey well, and is prepared to enter upon her work speedily. We found the family here all well, and were greeted by Dr. Leslie, Br. Reed, and Sr. Northrup most heartily; and very soon the parents and children belonging to the School and Church in the vicinity rushed in and gave us the most kind and loving reception.

The chapel is done. . . . I am much pleased with the manner in which Brn. Leslie and Reed have carried forward the work of the chapel. It has been done faithfully and economically. Besides, they have worked hard themselves, and thereby saved to the Society many hundreds of dollars. They have not done this work for gain, but love. They love the work of helping the poor, and of raising up the lowly; and Sr. Northrup has been a true helper in this good work. The Freedmen and women have done what they could. The general hard times have affected most of them, so that they can't do now what they might and would have done in time past. But many of them have done nobly. The Church has prospered wonderfully. They have progressed not only in knowledge, but in grace, and in numbers. Many have reformed in their habits. Some have given up tobacco, and others whiskey: so that none in the church now drink strong drink as formerly, which is common in other churches. They are living up to the gospel standard; and now they speak of our close and faithful preaching on these subjects with much gratitude. They enjoy themselves so much better than ever before. They much appreciate the precious Gospel of the kingdom, and look for Jesus soon coming, and are waiting for it. They are real Adventists.

Sr. Prescott, from St. Louis, has visited this dear people of late, and had a good time with them. She was much pleased with the Church, and they were much edified with her labors; and as Mr. Prescott has purchased and located himself in Humboldt, Tenn., they hope to see and hear her often.

To-night I take lodgings with Br. Reed in our new Mission Home. These rooms are very convenient, comfortable, and pleasant. Oh! how it would delight our friends who have helped build this house to see how very comfortable our Mission family are. And compared with their former quarters, in the cold and wet shanties, it is a sort of paradise. But it is none too good for those who leave home and all that is dear, to work for the ignorant and the poor.

We have quite a family now, all devoted to the interests of the Mission. Dr. Leslie, who stands at the head of the school and Mission; Sr. Northrup, the Matron; Br. Reed, the missionary and evangelist, who is to go out with the tent; Sr. Steere is to be a missionary among the Freedwomen, to teach them lessons relating to economy, and right living, in the way of the Lord. The last three chiefly support themselves and help the mission. They are here because they feel that the Lord calls them here, and requires them to work for him,

Saturday, April 11. We have a genial and sunny day. All hands are at work getting ready for the dedication; all are working in harmony, and with a cheerful heart. The colored women have raised fifty dollars for the lamps, and have just had them brought in. They are well suited to the chapel. We shall have good light. The seats are all arranged also, and are plain and comfortable; and the whole thing now is finished, is a model of neatness, and utility throughout: and should Jesus come this year, I feel that this enterprise will pay a great interest to the cause of truth, and that the money has been expended in a way to do the most good in the short time we have to work.

This evening Br. B. Wm. Wilkins arrived from La Grange, with Mrs. Bonnan, one of the teachers, and several of their scholars, to attend the dedication. They were most cordially and joyfully received by all. Br. Wilkins is in good health and the Lord is with him in his work at La Grange.

Sabbath, April 12. Early this morning Br Leslie opened the vestry, and it was soon filled with the brethren and sisters for prayer; and so the feast of the dedication began. We enjoyed a refreshing season of prayer and praise. The Lord was with us indeed. Blessed be his holy name forever and ever!

At 11 o'clock we met for the dedication service, when I was to preach. But such was the interest in the church and ministry that I put off my part of the service, and let the whole church and ministry unite to do their work first; and such a pentecostal time I hardly ever saw. We had a flood of light, joy and gratitude. Oh! how thankful this dear people are for the chapel and school-room for themselves and children. The pen cannot describe it. To be understood, it must be seen and heard. Some forty persons spoke, among whom were Elds. Wilkins, Reed and Leslie, and Srs. Northrup and Steere, and Sr Prescott, of St. Louis. The power of God came into our midst in deed and in truth, and all seemed to dedicate themselves to God anew.

At 3 P. M. the chapel was filled to hear the dedication service. I read and expounded the word. I showed the nature of the Jewish dispensation, and then the change to the Christian; and the great superiority of the Christian over the Jewish; and then showed them the great blessedness of the new covenant, sealed with the blood of Jesus. I then spoke of the objects of our Missionary Board in the erection of this chapel. It was to open a place in the heart of the South from which the Gospel of the kingdom might be sent out into all the region, as well as to gather many souls to Christ here. Another object was to sustain a school for the education of the freedmen, so far, at least, as to enable them to read the word of God; and now that the house was finished, we dedicated it to the objects for which it was built. And all the people joined in the act most heartily and happily.

A Layman at Work;

or, One of the "Royal Priesthood."

The following account is very interesting, as showing what a "Royal Priest" can do without human "authority." These are the workmen the church and the world need to spread truth abroad. We take the account from Eld. Himes' Journal at Memphis, April 11th. He says:

Of late God has sent another workman here—a singular case, of which I ought to give some account. I refer to Br. John B. Wadsworth, born in Alabama, in 1835, but lived most of his life in North Carolina. He was a holder of slaves most of his life, as a planter. Being called to the North last year to attend a suit in law, involving all he was worth, he providentially saw the Mission tent while in Rochester, and became interested in the preaching of Eld. Grant and others, and was converted to the truth and the Lord. He had been what might be called a "fast young man"—one of the Southern "fast" boys; one that would, with all his Southern habits and views, be most unlikely to receive our views of truth, and become an humble disciple of Jesus, and an earnest, self-denying worker with Christ. Yet it is so. He is completely changed from the > "Lion to a lamb,

I was introduced to him here on my arrival to-day, and got these facts from his own lips.

As soon as converted, he felt that he must publish these things to his friends in North Carolina; and so he ordered a package of tracts sent to Baltimore, which he received on his way South; and on his return to his home scattered them among his friends and others, and published the good news to the best of his ability. He visited Washington, D. C., Richmond, Va., and Wilmington, N. C. While in Richmond he handed a tract to a colored woman, who exclaimed: "I had a dream two years ago that some one would bring me a little book that would tell me about the coming of my Saviour; and I had been looking for it. Now de Lord has sent it." She was very happy. Some colored men present said he didn't know anything about the coming of Christ. She said to them, "Hush; he is right. I know he is right." He has also visited Charleston, S. C., Savannah, Ga., and Jacksonville, Fla. Here he was kindly received by Elds. Smith and Wilson, and spent a week with them, who helped him on his way, and in his good work. From Jacksonville he went to Macon and Atlanta, Ga. At the latter place he received a supply of two thousand tracts. Then he went to Chattanooga, Tenn., and visited the cave where travellers frequent, and left tracts there He heard from them afterwards, for good. Then went to Nashville, and called upon Mr. Burt, Sr. Robinson, and others, and then came to Memphis, and was received by the Mission family. He has been very useful indeed since he came here. God is with him. He is an humble, unpretending young man of thirty-five years; has good health, and with industrious habits will do much for the cause of Christ until he comes. He performs his journeys on foot, and sometimes sleeps in the open air. He has no gift to preach, but converses fluently, and presents the truth in an acceptable way. And being a Southern man, he is able to pass along without any opposition. At one time a railroad conductor called to him at a station on the Chattanooga Road, and asked him to ride. He told him that he had heard of him, and had seen some of his tracts, and been enlightened by them; and, said he, I intend to leave my position, and live a different life.

Letters and Extracts.

From W. H. H. McAllister.

St. Albans, Vt., April 24, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I hope my long silence will not be construed into any want of zeal in the great cause of truth. I have been so situated for a few months past that it has been almost impossible to write anything for the paper. I desire, however, to say to the brothers and sisters scattered abroad that I am still alive, and endeavoring, in my feeble way, to "live soberly, righteously, and godly," looking unto Jesus for strength and guidance in all things. My first desire is to cleanse myself from sin, and then I feel moved to extend the knowledge of salvation to others. I am sowing the seed; first by a well ordered life and godly example; second, by precept as opportunity is offered; and though the result seems small I leave it with God, who in due time "gives the increase."

I meet all sorts of religious opinions, and get into conversations with all sorts of people. The article in the Herald of Life of April 8, headed, "Would not try to be a Christian," called to mind several conversations I had with a Methodist brother who was stopping at my house a few days last fall. He acted on the defensive mainly, and asked all manner of questions, which I endeavored to answer to his comprehension and in accordance with the truth. He admitted that I had a reason for my belief, but the conclusion of the whole matter, in his mind was, that if my views of the nature of man and the punishment of the wicked were true, he should have no inducement to lead a religious life. If I have any power of expressing thought in words, I believe that brother learned what he was serving God for, on his own admission, and what the result would be likely to prove. The disease was an alarming one, and I did not spare the remedy. He furthermore advised me not to preach such a dangerous doctrine, it would do more harm than good, even if it were true. I told him that I believed that Jesus preached the same, and sent his disciples to preach it also; and I knew of no good reason why I should not imitate their example. I knew of no other gospel to the human race; and if any one assumes to teach another he is a false teacher.

I have met in the course of a few months, several of these rash statements from persons who should be above making them hastily or inconsiderately. Two of these happened in the Bible class, of which I was a member, in the M. E. Church, of which the pastor has charge. The first came from the pastor himself. We had under consideration the immortality of the soul; and I asked whether it was material or immaterial? He said immaterial. I said that if man had a soul it must be material, otherwise he had no soul. He did not stop to argue the question. He reached his conclusion at a single bound. "If I believed that," said he, "I should be a deist:" and evidently thinking he had not made his statement strong enough, he added, "Yes, I should be an atheist. If that is true, there is no God." I leave this without further comment than to state that the argument dropped there, and I have not sought to renew it.

Another of these statements was made by a lady in the same class. We had under consideration the subject of "Demoniacal possession." It was discussed two Sundays. There were several that held with me that the "possession," spoken of, was a kind of insanity. This lady turned to me after the lesson was over and said, in all earnestness, "If I did not believe in the existence of a literal, personal devil I should be an atheist; I have had too many encounters with the 'old fellow' to disbelieve his existence."

I have been considerably interested in the discussion in the Herald of Life on the subject of the personality of the devil; and had there not been so much said, and so well said, would like to give some views of my own; but I think enough has been said on that subject for the present. I have heard two sermons lately, devoted mainly to his Satanic Majesty; in which the Miltonic view was boldly espoused. One minister said that Satan was a fallen angel who attempted to dethrone God, and was cast down to hell with his host, a third part of the angels whom he seduced to join him in his revolt. I would like to ask him for his proofs of such an assertion. The first proposition in this argument, and the strongest one, is this: That no spirit of evil external to this world has ever been permitted to come in to seduce man to sin. But I will leave this subject; I did not intend to discuss it.

Sister Colvins' letter in the same number of the paper to which I have referred above, also brings to mind a conversation I had with a Congregationalist clergyman last fall. We were speaking of Demoniacal possession, and I told him that a certain Universalist D. D., known to us both, said that this proved spiritualism. I finally asked him if his view of the soul of man was correct, what there was to hinder its coming back to communicate with friends after its departure from the body at death? He admitted that it was not impossible, but improbable. I said to him that if our view of the nature of man is correct we have an unanswerable argument against spiritualism; such manifestations are impossible. It seems to me to be a very poor way to convince men of their error to admit at the outset that what they profess to believe is possible. Our argument nips it in the bud.

Yours, for eternal life through Jesus Christ alone.

Dear Br. in Christ: Believing time is short and what is done must be done quickly, I am constrained to write you again. I am preaching in Fillmore County, Minn., seven miles west of Chatfield, and the house is crowded with attentive listeners to the glorious news of the coming kingdom, Life only in Christ, and salvation though his blood alone; for I am preaching that we are saved by grace, through faith; and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Not of works, lest any man should boast. Eph. ii., 8, 9. But there are some here under the law; and like Hagar, despise their mistress. But I feel that God has given the law, or bond-woman, into our hands, and we shall soon send her away and be troubled no more by her claims that she is better than we are; and I also hope that they will go to the well and drink of the water that will spring up into everlasting life, like Hagar; and return and do the bidding of their mistress, the free woman. Gen. xvi. What saith the Scriptures? Cast out the bond-woman and her son, for the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman. Gal. iv., 30. I tell the people that the law of ordinances was against us; and that it was nailed to the cross, and taken out of the way. There are a goodly number that are joining hands with me to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made them free; and I think it will be hard to entangle them again in the yoke of bondage. Praise the Lord.

There is a Br. Timothy Corlis that is with me, that saw the light of liberty, through my labors and the gospel, about two months since, and he is rejoicing in the liberty. We both belong to the Minn. Advent Conference. I hope our brethren will not try to hinder us in our mission, and stumble at the stumbling-stone that is laid in Zion; for it will be the headstone of the corner; and the spiritual house, like the temple, must go together without the sound of the hammer; and the headstone will crown the edifice. All hail, happy day, when the priest is shorn of his last lock of power, and God have the glory of man's salvation, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

> How long, dear Saviour, O how long,
> Will that bright hour delay?
> Fly swift around, ye wheels of time,
> And bring the welcome day.

Awake, ye slumbering virgins, and cry unto the Lord to come to the wedding; trim your lamps, and see that ye have oil in your vessels. Clear yourselves from the law by the body of Christ. Bring the headstone, and shout, grace, grace. Amen.

Br. Storrs: I send you a new subscriber, and $2 for his paper. He is one of the new subscribers I promised you some time ago; and his wife is the one who said, the reading of the Herald of Life was what first led her to desire to lead a Christian life. God grant that the paper may be the means of leading them both to form a close union with Christ the Life-giver; so that when He who is our life shall appear, they also may appear with him in glory. To-day I am thirty-four years of age. It has been over fifteen years since I first openly espoused the cause of Christ and of life through him. I was a virtual believer in the Life views two or three years previous to that, and many times longed to be a Christian. I cannot say that I ever believed in what is called the orthodox faith, except in water baptism; and that has been the hardest to eradicate; but I thank God it is accomplished, and to-day I feel that I am Christ's freeman.

It is truly heart sickening to see the apathy that is exhibited by the professed Christian world in regard to the truths of the Bible. The brother who wrote to you from Iowa City has expressed it exactly. A prominent Minister, in the Free-Will Baptist Church, said to me the other day, he believed all labor spent in either trying to prove or disprove the conscious state of the dead, or the eternal torment of sinners, was worse than thrown away. And I believe this is the sentiment of a majority of professors in this part of the country. You can't excite as much interest in their minds on this subject as you could in a common horse race. They say, let us live right, and all will be well. But do they live right? I desire to tell the truth in this matter, I believe most of them reform more or less; they generally make better neighbors and citizens. But if they are moderate dram drinkers before conversion, they generally continue the practice. If they chew or smoke tobacco, they never quit that, of course. Instead of being more humble, they generally become more proud; and I think their affections are generally as strongly placed on the things of this world as before their conversion.

In the midst of a professedly Christian community, I sigh for Christian fellowship and sympathy for some one who loves to converse about our common faith. It seems hard always to live thus, and have no one to sympathize with me. But perhaps I ought not to complain; my wife is with me; and my children, as their minds expand, seem to embrace the truth almost intuitively. I hope all Life lovers are training up their children while young in the leading principles of life through Christ alone. It will be almost impossible to make immortal soulists of such. I ought to have a few more copies of Life from the Dead; and perhaps I shall be able to send for some before long. Whenever I have money I intend to divide, and give some for the cause of truth. I feel to rejoice that a few persons can say that they received the truth through my instrumentality. But it makes no difference to me how people get the truth, so that they get it, and obey it. Yet when one is brought to a saving knowledge of the truth through my instrumentality, I think one more is saved that might not have been, if I had not put forth an effort. Therefore I keep to work, although it is really discouraging at times. My love to all the Brethren. Pray for me. Yours as ever.

Fredericksburg, Iowa, April 15, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I write to let you know that I have received the tracts you sent, and thank you for sending so many. May God bless the reading of them to the enlightening of multitudes. O how glad I should be if every Christian could read the Herald of Life, and see the truth, the great foundation, the only hope of eternal life, Jesus and the resurrection, brought out in its simplicity and beauty. I think the Herald is blessed of God; and I can never tell what a blessing it has been to me. The article, "The Mountain and the Stone:" O how much light it gave me on the Bible; and I bless God that so many minds are investigating the Bible to get the living truth, and are determined to defend it. I bless God for directing your mind to pen the "Essential Baptism." It has been a blessing to me; and I can see that without it no other baptism would ever make us in Christ a new creature. I rejoice to see tradition dying, and a glorious lighting up of truth. In the article, "The Resurrection," in the Herald, the writer speaks of Alger, and he says he is "astonished at some of the arguments in his critical history of the doctrine of a future life." He says, "Alger is an acute thinker; a scholar of no ordinary attainments." I have been reading Alger, and I have been astonished, too, that such an acute reasoner should come to such an erroneous conclusion. On page 343, speaking of Christ's teaching concerning the future life, he introduces this parable, "So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground, and the seed should grow up; but when the fruit is ripe he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come;" and says, "Men are seed sown in this world to ripen, and be harvested in another." The figure taken on the scale of the human race, and the whole earth, is sublime. Whether such an image was originally suggested by the parable or not, the conception is consistent with Christian doctrine.

The pious Sterling prays—

> "Give thou the life that we require;
> That, rooted fast in thee,
> From thee to thee we may aspire,
> And earth thy garden be."

"The symbol, shockingly perverted from its original beautiful meaning by the mistaken belief that we sleep in our graves until a distant resurrection-day, is often applied to burial grounds. Let its appropriate significance be restored. Life is the field, death the reaper, another sphere of being the immediate garner. An enlightened Christian, instead of entitling a grave-yard the garden of the dead, and looking for its long buried forms to spring from its cold embrace, will hear the angel saying again, 'They are not here: they are risen.'"

It is painful to think that so much labor as seven or eight hundred pages of closely-written matter on the subject of a future life, should hold up the great error of the immortality of the soul. He labors hard to establish the importance of the resurrection, but it is the resurrection of living spirits confined in the prison of the under-world. O let us work while the day lasts, putting our trust in God, while holding up his word in purity, and striving for the light and good of others. My prays shall be that God will give you strength as your day is; that he will keep you under the shadow of his wings from the fiery darts of the wicked; make you like Moses, that your eyes may not be dim, and your natural force be not much abated; that you may do all your duty in his fear, and be enabled to say, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ; for by it I am crucified to the world, and the world to me." May God sanctify all his children through the truth.

Your sister, hoping and waiting for redemption.

A. Boynton, West Batavia, N. Y., writes: Dear Brethren of the Herald of Life, my heart has been made glad of late to see such a coming up to the help of the Lord, such a willingness, yea, anxious desire, to advance the good cause. This is somewhat as I expected years ago, that this enterprise was of God, and so destined to prosper. Although deprived the privilege of adding my dollar with yours, my prayers and words of encouragement shall mingle with your offerings, and God's rich blessing will rest upon us, I am sure. May we ever live so as to say with the departed Wesley, "The best of all is, God is with us."

A Solemn Monition.

Our readers are aware of the remarkable Pan-Anglican Conference of high functionaries and representatives of the Episcopal churches, held at Lambeth, England, the latter part of last year. It numbered among its members such biblical scholars as Archbishop Trench and Bishop Ellicott, such defenders of the faith against the infidelity of the day, as Bishops Wilberforce and Harold Browne, such zealous missionaries as Bishops Selwyn and Talbot, Lay and Quintard. The results of its deliverances have not been regarded as of much account, and many of the communion in whose interest it was assembled, have expressed themselves not very respectful with reference to it.

Our attention, however, has been called to an item in the Synodical Letter given out by this conference, which is of interest to all those who are battling for the doctrine of the speedy coming of the Lord. In a passage near the close of the letter, we have the following allusion to the character of our times, and the subject of the Saviour's return:

"Brethren beloved, with one voice we warn you: the time is short; the Lord cometh: watch and be sober."

This is altogether more significant than a mere adaptation of words from holy writ, as appears from its position in the letter, and from the phrase with which it is introduced. It clearly expresses the doctrine of the nearness of the Lord's coming, and so near as to be a proper subject for particular admonition by the assembled conference. Indeed, it is the only topic in the letter introduced with such particular solemnity, and in reference to which it is asserted that all were so united as to be able to say: "With one voice we warn you, the time is short." The sign manual of each of the bishops was given to this document. It is the only place in the letter where the phrase "with one voice" occurs. It appears as the only really decided thing in the deliverances of the grand convention. And thus, from one of the rarest assemblies of modern times, there has been sent forth in Greek, Latin, and English, throughout the world, the official and solemn note of warning to a vast portion of Christendom, which may serve at least to vindicate those members and ministers of the Church of England and its affiliated communions, who have felt themselves called on to preach and testify to the nearness of the Lord's coming. If the highest assembly of the heads of those churches that has ever been held, "with one voice" so declare and and admonish, surely no scorn or censure should attach to their members and rectors any more for taking up the strain, and bestirring themselves on the momentous subject. On this point, at least, we can heartily indorse the great convention and say: "Brethren beloved, with one voice we warn you: the time is short; the Lord cometh; watch and be sober."—Prophetic Times.

"What Are We Coming To?"

"It would almost appear to the careful observer as he sends his thought abroad over our own country, and the nations of Europe and the world, that the times of tribulation spoken of in Scripture as annunciatory of the latter days, had already come. The foundations of industry, order and prosperity, seem to be tottering. Governments are corrupted, people rebellious, enterprise paralyzed, trade and commerce languishing, and individuals bankrupt. Suffering and distress prevail everywhere to a most unusual degree. Wars and rumors of wars, famines, pestilences and earthquakes in divers places, increasing wickedness, and heart-sickening casualties and crimes startle the community, and large multitudes exclaim, What are we coming to? The answer seems plain.

"The world is hastening to its destiny. Prophecy is fulfilling, history completing. The kingdoms of this world are being disorganized that they may become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. The nations are filling up the cup of their iniquities, which shall turn in their hands into the cup of the Lord's fury. Leaders of false religious are binding upon their followers heavy burdens, and grievous to be borne, which are destined to be thrown back with crushing weight upon their own heads. Communities are laying up for themselves 'wealth against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God,' and individuals, sinning with a high hand against knowledge and love, are provoking the Almighty to a just retribution. Let the Lord's people be awake, zealous and active for the Master, vigilant and uncompromising against evil, waiting for his appearing, by the brightness of whose coming the man of sin is to be finally destroyed.—Advocate and Guardian.

Abbe Napoleon.

Nobody seems to know much about the Abbe Napoleon, who has just been created cardinal with such unusual pomp, and who will probably be pope when the present aged and epileptic incumbent dies. He is yet young, and is described as dark, silent, inscrutable; of few words, but of great knowledge and high accomplishments; full of subtle secret counsel, winning other men's secrets, but guarding his own. It is not even known whether he sympathizes with the Ultramontane party, or is desirous to harmonize papal policy with the spirit of the age. Pius IX. fell down in a fit at the Vatican on the 7th inst., causing much alarm. His medical adviser has forbidden him to fatigue himself by giving audiences and attending ceremonies. He was subject to epileptic attacks in his youth, but they have not returned till of late.

The Chapel in the Heart.—In your retirement, make frequent colloquies, of short discoursings with God and thy own soul. Every return of the heart in these intercourses is a going to him, an appearing in his presence, and in representing him present to thy spirit and to thy necessity. This was long since called by a spiritual person "a building to God a chapel in our heart." It reconciles Martha's employment with Mary's devotion, charity and religion, the necessities of our calling and the employment of devotion; for thus, in the midst of the works of your trade, you may retire into your chapel—the heart—and converse with God by frequent addresses and returns.—Jeremy Taylor.

The Right Persuasion.—A soldier lay dying in the hospital, in terrible agony. A visitor asked him, "What church are you of?" "Of the Church of Christ," he replied. "I mean of what persuasion are you?" "Persuasion?" said the dying man, as his eyes looked heavenward, beaming with love to the Saviour, "'I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate me from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus.'"

Our Israelitish Origin.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Professor Wilson, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we endorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage, six cents.

Poetry.

How Long?

Sad Sorrow waits with tearful eyes,
To see her end draw near,
Weary with pain, and groans and sighs,
And agony and fear.

Pale Death, too, waits, with ghastly smile,
To yield his long-kept prey;
From ocean depths, and caverns vile,
They'll rise, at break of day.

And sin, too, waits with hateful face,
And bent with loads of shame:
The ransomed of a tai..ted race
Wi.l trample down her name.

Love waits to wipe the tearful ey..s,
To soothe with gentle hands,
To heal the hearts once rent with sighs,
And bind the broken bands.

Joy waits a glorious song to raise,
To shout the victory won,
To glorify, in sweetest praise,
God's well-beloved Son.

Peace waits to bring the promised balm
To hush all earthly strife,
And breathe on all a mighty calm
To last through endless life.

Then come, O Christ, for thou art love,
Joy comes at thy command;
And Peace with thee, like holy dove,
Shall visit every land. E. L.

Children's Department.

"I Dare You!"

"Pooh! I could do it easily, and be back here again before you could count fifty."

"May be so, but you don't dare to try it!"

"Don't dare! now, Tom, you know better."

"Well, I dare you!"

The boy's eyes flashed. In a moment he was over the boundary line, skating skilfully over the forbidden ice, while his schoolmates looked on—some with fear, and a few with shouts of applause. Clear to the other side he went, though the ice cracked and bent; then with a graceful turn he was coming toward them again, swifter, swifter, with a look of pride on his glowing face; and the praises of the other boys already sounded in his ears.

"Good for you, Win!"

"Hurrah for—"

Who? where was he? where the proud form, the smiling face, and the dark hair, uncovered in the moment of exultation? Gone! gone in one moment from their sight under the ice, and the waters rose up over the spot, as if their time of triumph had come then.

"O, what shall we do?"

"Run quick! get a rope!"

"Stand back! every one of you!" and the voice, generally so kind, frightened them now with its sternness; and they looked in silence at the teacher's white face, as he drew off his gown and crept with it to the boundary which he had marked for the boys that morning. Over that, too, so carefully, yet so quickly; and the ice cracked, cracked! And the boys could none of them see just how it was done, only that soon the dark, dripping hair of their schoolmate appeared above the broken ice: then his body slowly, slowly dragged toward them, his hand clutching tightly the teacher's dressing-gown.

The teacher did not speak; and they dared not. In the teacher's own strong arms Winthrop was carried to the house, and rubbed; and, no, he was not dead! for in a few minutes he opened his eyes, and looking at the group of anxious boyish faces gathered round, he said, "All right." How it brightened every heart there! The boys could speak now.

"Oh, Win! I haven't counted the fifty yet!" burst out Tom, excitedly, trying to laugh; but if he had not been a boy he would surely have cried instead.

"Now, let me hear all about it," said their teacher calmly, as the color began to come back into Winthrop's cheeks.

"It is all my fault!" said Tom humbly.

"How came you to disobey my rule, Winthrop, and go beyond the boundary?"

"Why, I hardly thought about the rule, sir; I wanted to let them see that I wasn't afraid of the ice! they dared me to do it; and when any one dares me to do a thing—" Winthrop stopped suddenly, as the recollection came over him of the cold, gurgling waters, and of these few terrible moments of suspense.

"Then you always dare to do it; is that what you mean?"

"Yes, sir," but the voice was not so full of confidence as it had been half an hour before.

"And the end of your daring this time, might have been—death!"

A shudder crept over the boy's heart.

"Oh, sir! please don't! I dared him!" said Tom.

"And so you think a boy is a coward who is dared to do a thing, and doesn't do it?"

"It looks so," answered Winthrop.

"Ah my boy, you must get rid of that idea; it is all wrong. He who refuses to do a sinful or a dangerous thing, even when people say 'I dare you,' is a true hero; and he who runs all risks to do something, just because he is 'dared,' is by far the most cowardly and foolish. Don't look so down-hearted, Winthrop; I want you to be truly heroic, and I know you can do things very bravely sometimes. For instance, if I should say you must not go skating another day during this season, you would bear the punishment without complaint, I think."

"Mayn't I bear the punishment? It was my fault."

"I haven't given any punishment yet, Tom. I have only given this lesson about true bravery for you all to learn. And now be off, every one of you, and let Winthrop rest, while I go to examine my dressing-gown; and if it is entirely ruined, I'll pass a subscription around among you to get a new one." And the kind man smiled as he left them, but his heart was full; and he went to thank God for the safety of his pupil, and to pray that he might become truly brave and noble.

Boys, never be dared into doing what is wrong. Do not take one step aside from the safe and straight path, no matter how many voices say "I dare you." Be brave enough to say "I dare not," to every temptation. And always:

"Dare to be right! dare to be true!
All the world's scorning can never harm you—
Stand by your conscience, your honor, your faith,
Stand like a hero, and battle till death!"

"Catechesis."

STRICTURES BY JACOB GRIM.

Art. 13.—Is there any principle involved in the development of the spiritual body? and if so, what is it? Ans.—There is: as contained in the words, "that is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual." 1 Cor. xv., 46.

Ques. 14.—What is to be understood by this? Ans.—The meaning obviously is, that in the development of a spiritual body, there must first be an earthy body as a basis for the spiritual. A man must first exist before the tailor can make a gentleman of him by clothing him in broadcloth. [No text.]

I confess, as the lawyer says, I am a kind of non-suited in this article. For Catechesis acknowledges that man is a man even naked; and when the tailor clothes him he is still the same man, but it is the broadcloth makes the gentleman! Well, that is about as good as his theology, "In the development of a spiritual body there must first be an earthy body as a basis for the spiritual." The "man must first exist" naked to have the tailor put the clothes on him that makes the gentleman. He is the same man with a suit of clothes on him. So there must be an earthy body as a basis to put a spiritual suit of clothes on, and make a spiritual man of it with an earthy basis! No wonder Catechesis could find no Scripture text for this answer.

Ques. 15.—But could not the Deity make a spiritual body in the grave, and bring it forth a finished creation? Ans.—There is nothing impossible with him. The question, however, is not what he can or cannot do; but about what he has revealed he will do; and upon what principles he will develop his work. According to the principles Paul has laid down, the spiritual body cannot come out of the earth. It must come "out of heaven."

Paul lays down no such principle. He says the first man, Adam, was of the earth, earthy, The last man, or second Adam (is) a quickening spirit. It looks very much like as if Catechesis intended to ignore this second Adam, or man, as being Christ, and place them both upon the same person, the earthy and the spiritual; we know this has been done before. Paul in 1 Cor. xv., 44, places this whole question beyond cavil. "It is sown a natural body. It is raised a spiritual body."

Ques. 16.—"Why must an earthy body be first formed? Ans.—Because of the existence of an earthy body in a previous state. To restore a person, who has no present existence, to identify with a former self, he must be created anew after the old model, and be impressed with the mental characteristics thereto belonging. [No text.]

Now if we understand Catechesis correctly, God must have a mortal body come up in the resurrection, and from that body, as his model, he takes a photograph likeness, and stamps it with the mental characteristics belonging to the model, and then throws the model away as having no further use for it: and this is called fashioning our vile bodies like unto his glorious body. In other words, God brings up our old houses from the earth as a model, and then fashions the eternal houses which are from heaven like unto the model, and stamps them with our mental and moral characteristics, and then calls them our "vile bodies fashioned like unto his own glorious body.

Ques. 17.—"What is that which comes 'out of heaven?' Ans.—All-subduing energy, or power (Phil. iii., 21) styled in Rom. viii. 11, Spirit of the Father.

Then it is not another body, as assumed in Art. 13. The all-subduing energy or power of God, is the spirit of God; and that is what raised Jesus up from the dead. Eph. i., 19, 20. And it is the same Spirit or power of God that will be exerted to bring us again from the dead.

Ques. 18.—When this power operates upon an earthy body or basis, what is the result? Ans.—"In a moment, in a twinkling of an eye," it changes the "vile" or earthy basis, or body, into a like form with the body of Christ's glory; in other words, it transforms the earthy body into a spiritual body; which becomes "thus a house which is from heaven." [No Scripture.]

Now the object in all this is, to lead the reader along, and in so doing he is laying down the foundation for the resurrection of all men in the mortal flesh, and then afterward change these vile and earthy bodies in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, into the likeness of Christ's glorious body. And this he calls "our house from heaven."

Art. 19.—What are the characteristics of the spiritual body? Ans.—It is incorruptible, glorious, powerful, and immortal "flesh and bones." 1 Cor. xv., 42, 43; Luke xxiv., 39; Eph. v. 30. Ques. 20.—What is immortality? Ans.—Incorruptible body in living action; or life manifested through an incorruptible body. The Deity, who is the life, is the only being in the universe who has it underived from anything exterior to himself. 1 Tim. vi., 16.

Ques. 21.—What is the relation of the resurrection—earthy body to the resurrection—spiritual body? Ans.—Its relation is that of a "terrestrial," inferior body to a "celestial" superior body; bearing a similar relation the one to the other, that the acorn does to the oak. [No text in proof.]

In the first place, the question is unscriptural; there is no such thing spoken of in the Scriptures as a "resurrection—earthy body." It, "the resurrection—earthy body," bears the same relation to the "resurrection—spiritual body, as the acorn does to the oak." It seems from this answer, that Catechesis is going to give each one two resurrections; first, he resurrects the acorn, and next the oak. Now the acorn is put into the ground, and an oak tree springs from it. If the analogy holds good, then Categus' spiritual body come out of the ground; for there is where the germ comes from.

Ques. 22.—What is the transition from the lower terrestrial body to the higher celestial, or heavenly termed? Ans.—It is an ascent in which the subject of the ascension is exalted, and Raised from one to the other. John xix., 17. "And he bearing his cross went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha."

What the connection between an earthy resurrected body and a spiritual resurrected body, has to do with this passage of Scripture, I confess I am too earthy to perceive; or where the ascent comes in, I cannot perceive; for Jesus was not yet dead, let alone being resurrected. The only ascent that I can perceive is, that of going up hill with his cross!

Ques. 23.—What was the body that came out of Joseph's sepulchre? Ans.—The same that was crucified, died, and was buried there—"out of the earth, earthy." An earthy body is not constubstantial with the Father, who is Spirit. At the emergence from the tomb, there was inequality of substance between the Father and the Son. [No Scripture text for proof.]

I wonder if the disciples were deceived when the angel said, "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven?" I wonder if Peter was mistaken when he said, "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses . . . . Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ." "Oh, no," Peter, you must be mistaken; for the resurrected, earthy body of Jesus, is not consubstantial with the Father; he must make him of another substance; make another Jesus out of him! You are all wrong, Peter, when you say, that "David being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne," You see, Peter, that Jesus was the fruit of David's loins, and not consubstantial with the Father; and although you witnessed the resurrected earthy body of Christ, he is now changed, so that the relationship between David and Christ no longer exists; for he has been changed into another person; and is now consubstantial with the Father. I wonder if Jesus was mistaken when he said, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold I am alive forevermore." Rev. i., 18?

Ques. 24.—What was necessary, in order to remedy this imperfection? Ans.—It was necessary for the body which had come forth, and which is the example that illustrates "the way," be "made perfect" by ascending to the Father in the twinkling of an eye. [No Scripture needed.]

Here Catechesis says the body of Jesus was imperfect; or in other words, that Jesus, who "was declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness," (by the ascension in the twinkling of an eye? no; but) "by the resurrection of the dead," Rom. i. 4, was an imperfect pattern, and needed something to perfect him, and that was the ascension to the Father. No, not that; but that it must be done in the twinkling of an eye! But that is not in accordance with the record. For we read, "And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of sight." Acts i., 9. I wonder how much a man can behold in the twinkling of an eye?

Ques. 25.—Are the assent and the assumption of Jesus the same? Ans.—No; they occurred forty days apart. The assumption of Jesus was the taking of him up into heaven, where he now is. Acts i., 11.

Ques. 26.—What did the crucified body become on its instantaneous ascent to the Father on the third day? Ans.—It became "the last Adam for a spirit-imparting life." 1 Cor. xv., 45: he was made both Lord and Christ: Acts ii., 36; he became "the Lord from heaven." 1 Cor. xv., 47; "the Lord, the spirit;" 2 Cor. iii., 17; and "the exact likeness of the Father's substance." Heb. i., 3. Ques. 27.—What is it to be clothed upon with the house which is from heaven? Ans.—To be "swallowed up of life."

Ques. 28.—At what time does this swallowing up of life occur? Ans.—After the coming forth of the earthy body from the grave, and after it has subsequently passed the scrutiny of the judgment. [No Scripture to prove this.]

Ques. 29.—What does Paul say it is, that after coming forth from the grave, is swallowed up of life? Ans.—"This Mortal:" to thneton: his words are "That the mortal might be swallowed up of life." 2 Cor. v. 4.

Now it is a self-evident fact, from what has gone before, that the object of the writer is to show that the resurrection accomplishes but one thing. And that is, it merely brings up a naked mortal body for the tailor to place a suit of clothes upon, and then the heavenly body is placed upon this mortal body—and so we have two bodies; or else his logic does not hold good; for the body is the same after the tailor has clothed it that it was before: it undergoes no change. And as the writer does not tell us what becomes of the mortal body, that comes out of the ground, but merely that it is clothed upon with a house, or dressed up with one from heaven, we suppose he means us to understand that the development is a double body; one from the earth and one from heaven; the only change is, the one the tailor makes; it is the gentleman by the suit of clothes put upon the back; and so we presume he intends the only change is from a naked mortal body to a mortal body with a spiritual suit on.

The Caution as to Accuracy.

BY ELD. J. B. COOK.

Br. Storrs: Your oft-repeated phrase, "Life only in Christ," we all do endorse, in spirit; and I trust, also in words; for, "Thus it is written, neither is there salvation (life) in any other." Acts iv., 12.

The brethren Burr, Wendell, and Grim, in your two last issues have interested us anew in the general theme of life only in Christ—Life and Immortality brought out into light and made plain by Christ.

Br. Burr writes most characteristically, kind and Christian as he habitually is, and wishing to be just right, while yet he left out a long handle for the brethren to lay hold of, in genuine good humor, to speak their mind a little further. Of course I will not mar this gospel "jeu d'esprit"—this jet of good will, to get out "the wisdom that cometh from above," on this vital point. Your word of caution as to accuracy, is accepted, I trust, by us all; and it applies to the subject itself, as much or more than to mere personal views of it.

The light of truth suggests to me a word to Br. B., and also to the others. Your paper seems the proper channel, where all will see it. Please, then, allow me a brief space, even though others may have, beyond my knowledge, preceded me in stating these points that seem to me either suppressed or unseen generally in their vital relation to the subject.

1. "Death reigned from Adam to Moses." Rom. v., 14, Nay, "sin reigns unto death," even yet, "over all who sin without law." Rom. ii., 12; v., 21. By consequence the resurrection of such is not asserted. "They are dead, they shall not live." "They are like the beasts that perish." Ps. xlix., 12, 20; Isa. xxvi., 14. Only let this stand and then we get a point. For "Sin is not imputed where there is no law." Rom. v., 12. Jesus confirms this, because, He sows before reaping. Matt. xxv., 46.

2. This paramount principle of righteousness prevails in the gospel; whether in the dispensation of grace, or of coming judgment. John iii., 16–21; 1 John v., 9–12.

"This is the condemnation" (not that Adam sinned; nor that "sin has reigned unto death," but) "that light hath come into the world; and men loved darkness rather than light," etc.

Here we have a new feature, and another element in the Divine administration over our world. This should stand forth, in its assigned place in all gospel testimony as a faithful sentinel by the gate of life. Let all be admonished that "where much is given, much is required;" "that of how much sorer punishment shall they be thought worthy, who have trodden under foot the Son of God." Heb. x., 29; ii., 1–5. God has given this its place.

When this is left out, an error usurps its place; diluting and perverting the gospel; as if all the primal teachings of the Great Teacher do not graduate responsibility by opportunity, as in the one, two, or five talents." Matt. xv., 15–30.

3. The penalty of the Mosaic law violated, or the gospel rejected, has force enough to hold its place against those who incur it, as really as did that of the primeval ordinance in Eden. This point, though employed as if to divert attention (however undesigned), from the terms that set forth the order, and means of its execution, is fundamental. As the original law and penalty have had full power to prevail and execute through 6,000 years. Rom. ii., 12; v., 12, as the law given by Moses speaks to those under it, Rom. iii., 19, so this advanced "Law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus," Rom, viii., 2; John iii., 19, carries its own divine authority to convict, and condemn, and execute its rejectors, according to the terms it declares.

It is argued that death holds the sinner in its remorseless, unrelaxing grasp; and hence he can have no personal or real "resurrection to damnation." But allow it in all its unabated, unabridged emphasis and fulness to those "by nature" under it; then it follows, "par excellence," that God's gospel by Christ holds those "unjust" who are under its "condemnation" to "the sorer punishment" it announces, till the times and terms of its execution are completed. Yet much is written as if this were not so; or, as if the hold of sin and death from Adam to Moses holds all under both Moses and Messiah, about as though neither Moses nor Messiah had ever appeared to enlighten or save men. This seems a great defect in any ministry.

4. These palpable points of truth, as they stand in the word, seem to make John v., 28, 29; Acts xxiv., 15; Heb. x., 20–29, needful to fill out the information we need as to the judgment that God will execute on "the unjust" under the gospel. The just and the unjust are correlated terms. They apply to those who are "justified by faith;" or those who not believing, "shall be damned." These belong especially to the gospel age.

5. Advancing by these gradations of positive truth—recognized as parts of the unfailing revelation from God—let us take one step further, and say to ourselves, "Be ye reconciled to God;" reconciled to have it just so. In this, as in other items of truth, the parts support and maintain each other as portions of the whole. As Abraham's righteousness by faith, was sealed and made perfect by his obedience. Rom. iv., 11; James ii., 20–26. And as "the essential baptism" granted to Cornelius, in miraculous measure, was the proper qualification for his "obedience of faith by baptism"—"for, as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ," Gal. iii., 27; Acts x., 47, "Can any man forbid water that these should be baptized, who have received the Holy Ghost. Hence all such should be baptized. Acts xi., 17.

Remarks by the Editor.—We always loved Br. Cook's kind spirit; and the foregoing is in his usual kind manner. We are glad he has so clearly given up the universal resurrection; that is, if we understand him, he does not contend that any of those who never had revelation or any who lived under Moses' law, being wicked, will have a resurrection; it is Only the wicked who have had, and have rejected the gospel, that are to have a "sorer punishment" by a resurrection, etc. Had he used the Syriac translation he would have seen there is no idea of a "sorer punishment," but simply, if persons did not escape punishment who transgressed Moses' law, how much more certain is the punishment of such as reject Christ.

But, after all, let the term "sorer" remain; then the question may be asked, who was the apostle writing to, and what was the sorer punishment he speaks of? He was writing to Hebrew or Jewish converts, among whom there was much apostasy; occasioned largely from the fact that Jesus' prophecy of Jerusalem's overthrow had not taken place, though near forty years had passed since he uttered it. The only safety of Jewish Christians, when that event should take place, was to hold fast their faith in Jesus' words. Such would escape the awful calamities to come on that nation at Jerusalem's downfall. To prevent the growing apostasy among the Hebrew Christians, the apostle tells them, if such as disregarded Moses' law were sure to die without mercy, "Of how much sorer punishment" should such as "sinned wilfully" against Christ, "after we have received the knowledge of the truth," etc., "be thought worthy," or deserving?

The sin, then, was one of wilful apostasy; the punishment was to share with their unbelieving countrymen in that "great tribulation such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." See Matt. xxiv., 19–21, and Luke xxi., 20–24. Here, then, is the "sorer punishment" the apostle speaks of—not by a resurrection, nor after a resurrection; but at the time when Jesus' words should be fulfilled on the Jewish or Hebrew people; an event that was not seven years off at the time the apostle wrote this epistle to the Hebrews.

Other parts of Br. Cook's remark's we are willing our readers should weigh for themselves, simply saying, we have yet to learn that the gospel is a message of wrath to any one; and we are perfectly "reconciled to have it just so" as God as ordained: i. e., "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you;" and "he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii., 36, and vi., 53. We respond to our dear Br. Cook, "'Be ye reconciled to God'—reconciled to have it just so." To that we add our hearty Amen.

Perhaps we ought to say one word further. We are glad Br. Cook takes the ground that the baptism of the spirit is "the essential baptism," and is "the proper qualification for," and therefore must precede "water baptism." Let us have the essential one; and if Br. Cook, or any one else, wants the other, we certainly shall not "forbid" them all the "water" they may think proper to use, so that they use it in "charity" toward such as believe the "essential baptism" is all that God demands of them.

As It Should Be.

A Free Pulpit and a Free Table.—Since the Rev. J. P. Hubbard, an Episcopal clergyman of Newport, R. I., exchanged pulpits with Rev. Mr. Dennison of the Baptist church, Rev. C. H. Malcom has written a letter to Rev. Mr. Dennison asking him, as a Baptist, to meet Mr. Hubbard half way. As Mr. Hubbard has given up a close pulpit, Mr. Dennison should now open his communion table to Mr. Hubbard, and so have a free pulpit and a free table of the Lord. Mr. Malcom is pastor, of the Second Baptist Church, in Newport. The church is over two hundred years old. It was founded in 1656. It was, and legally is, a "Six principle Baptist Church." For over thirty years it has been an open communion church. In January there was in Newport a series of union meetings in the week of prayer. Mr. Malcom resolved to hold a united communion in his church. He has not advocated that theory nor preached about it, but quietly practised it for ten years. The closing services of the week of prayer was the time selected for the united communion. About one thousand were present. Mr. Malcom presided. On one side of him were a Methodist and Congregational minister; on the other a Methodist and Free-will preacher. Two Baptist deacons, with a Congregationalist and Methodist distributed the elements. The churches of all denominations in the city participated. The season was one of great and thrilling interest. The affair has made quite as much stir in the denomination to which Mr. Malcom belongs, as has the conduct of Messrs. Hubbard and Tyng in their denominations. Mr. Malcom has been flooded with letters on the subject, for and against his conduct, but he is backed by a strong party, many of whom have not yet found it practicable to put their union ideas into practice.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower; or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

or, the Wicked Dead Remain Eternally under Death's Dominion.

A SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

Text: "Give me understanding and I shall live." Ps. cxix., 144. "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi., 16.

The distinct utterances of these portions of inspiration give us confidence in pursuing our inquiry, and in presenting the subject to attention. The first text being from the most pious and honored of Israel's kings, announcing the way of life, and the other from the wisest of those kings, distinctly stating that some "shall REMAIN in the congregation of the dead," seem ample authority for our investigating the subject; and such company as these two kings, may prevent even the timid from being alarmed in search after the truth.

Truth is harmonious in all its parts—the links of which cannot be separated without detriment to the whole chain. It is therefore not a matter of indifference as to what a man may believe, as many suppose. If he believe the truth he will doubtless be benefitted by it; but he will derive much more benefit from a clear perception of the whole truth than a part of it. When the Saviour prayed, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth," he prayed in effect, that we should all feel the force, and understand the importance of truth. So that whatever phase of that truth may be presented, it demands our attention, and should not be put aside. No one should undertake to say, therefore, that he has sufficient truth and does not wish to perplex his mind with abstract notions or irrelevant issues. The point to be examined is not merely what is truth? but how much is it necessary for us to entertain and to apply for our welfare? It does not become us to isolate passages of Scripture or to dwell upon a particular text to the exclusion of nearly every other: for the truth as it is revealed to us from God, runs in harmonious streams through both the Old and the New Testament.

We have heard persons frequently say, in reply to certain quotations "Ah! that is from the Old Testament!" as if it were not worth our while to regard the fitness and self-evidence of anything emanating from that source. But Christ bade the Jews "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they that testify of me." Now what "Scriptures" were they directed to search? As the New Testament was not then written, they must have been referred to the Old Testament; and hence we have not only Saviour's reference to those "Scriptures," but also his declaration that they testify of eternal life. The apostle Paul, likewise, in his discourses to the Jews, repeatedly directs their attention to the Old Testament. For example, when he stood before Agrippa, he claimed to have taught nothing but what Moses and the prophets had said should come to pass, and our Lord after his resurrection, said to his disciples: "Oh! fools" (literally, unwise) "and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken . . . and beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself."

There are some Christians who are prone to think that the New Testament supersedes the Old; but on the contrary, the latter serve as a key to the former—they are essential to a just appreciation and proper understanding of them. But let us add, that a theological theory has never yet been started without encountering some apparent or real contradictory texts; else the world had never been divided into so many radically different religious denominations. One class range themselves on the side of certain texts that represent their theological ideas; another class, taking exception to these, discover flaws and contradictions, and settle down upon opposite texts, and so on.

We conclude, therefore, the only means of arriving at a clear apprehension of the truth is to determine the general tenor of the Scriptures, and then construe the discordant texts in harmony with it. For many passages are susceptible of more than one construction; but the construction which approximates most nearly to the general tenor of the Scriptures, and harmonizes best with the known perfections of God, should be regarded as the true one, and adopted. The texts we have chosen as the foundation of our investigation seem flatly to to contradict the view generally received by Christendom; and it must, therefore, be submitted to the test previously recommended.

The term resurrection does not occur in the Old Testament, but there are many corresponding phrases, such as "awake—arise—Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell!—Thy dead men shall live," etc.; which expressions in no instance have the remotest allusion to the wicked dead. In the New Testament the word resurrection frequently occurs, as well as numerous equivalent terms; for example, "rise, raised, rising, raise, rose, risen," etc., but none of them are ever used with reference to a future life of the wicked, unless in the negative form, as "not rise; not see life," etc. Such terms and phrases as denote future life, belong exclusively to the righteous, and in the Scriptures are applied to them alone; so that there is not, from Genesis to Revelation, a text which declares that the wicked dead shall live again, or that they shall have a future life at all; yet there are a few texts from which it may be inferred.

Our object at this time will be to define the prospects of dying men—to learn God's purposes, as revealed in his word, in relation to the children of Adam—to reveal to the sinner the nature of his doom—eternal death—and thereby awaken him to the fact that unless he repent and come to Christ he will perish forever "like the beasts that perish." "Well, there is nothing very alarming in such a prospect," he may say; but to those who enjoy life—who rightly estimate its value—it is an awful prospect, indeed. Let us turn to and contemplate the picture presented by Job xxiv., 19, 20.

"Drought and heat consume the snow waters, so doth the grave those which have sinned. The womb shall forget him; the worm shall feed sweetly on him; he shall be no more remembered; and wickedness shall be broken as a tree."

The term which is here translated "grave," is sheol, in the original—the place or state of the dead: the hidden state. And here it is stated clearly and unequivocally sheol shall consume the wicked as heat consumes the snow waters: no analogy could be more striking, nor could any language be more expressive of the end of "those which have sinned."

The phrase "shall be no more remembered," in this text, gives emphasis to Job's declaration; by it he intensifies the fact of the eternal dominion of death over the sinner. In chap. xiv., Job asked the question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" He says, "O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave (sheol) . . . that thou wouldst appoint me a set time, and remember me." Job's idea, then, of being remembered, was that of "living again" from death. Keep this in mind, and his affirmation that the wicked consumed in sheol "shall be no more remembered" is a positive declaration that they shall not "live again." The same idea is found in Psa. lxxxviii. 3–5, where the Psalmist says, "My soul is full of troubles; and my life draweth nigh unto the grave . . . among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more." Some of the dead are to be no more remembered; hence have no life from the state of death.

The Psalmist says in Psalm xlix, "They that trust themselves in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches . . . . their inward thought is that their houses shall continue forever, and their dwelling places to all generations; they call their lands after their own names. Nevertheless, man being in honor abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish."

"What!" exclaims one—"would you reduce man to the level of a beast?" The Psalmist has done it; or rather God, who inspired the Psalmist by his Spirit, and we can only reply in his words, "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling;" or as the margin reads, "The grave being a habitation to every one of them." "The grave, then, is their abode; and there they must lie forever: but the Psalmist in the next verse says of himself, by way of contrast: "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for he shall receive me."

Let us pass on to Isaiah xxvi., 14. Here the prophet, after having spoken of certain "other lords" who had ruled over his people, says: "They are dead, they shall not live: they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." And why shall they "not rise?" Because "the man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." How important that we pray with David, "Give me understanding and I shall live." Such shall not "remain in the congregation of the dead"—"I will raise him up at the last day," saith Jesus, who is "the resurrection and the life."

It is frequently claimed that the text Isa. xxvi., 14 has reference to the final destruction of the wicked, which event, it is said, will occur a thousand years after the coming of the Lord, or at least after the resurrection of all the dead. Such a conclusion, however, is erroneous, as will be readily perceived from the contrast presented in verse 19. Keeping in mind the previous text, to wit: "They are dead: they shall not rise"—verse 19 says, "Thy dead men shall live: together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing," etc. Here, as may be seen, the final condition of the two classes is described—long prior to the resurrection—in language too plain to be misunderstood.

Again, in Isa. xliii., 17, we read, "Which bringeth forth the chariot and horse, the army and the power; they shall lie down together, they shall not rise; they are extinct, they are quenched as tow." Also in Jer. li., 39, the following language is employed: "In their heat I will make their feasts and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not awake, saith the LORD." Similar language characterizes verse 57 likewise. "And I will make drunk her princes and her wise men: her captains and her rulers and her mighty men and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not awake, saith the King whose name is the LORD of hosts."

The words of the prophet Amos are equally emphatic on this point, chap. viii. last verse: "They that swear by the sin of Samaria, and say, Thy God, O Dan, liveth; and the manner of Beersheba liveth; even they shall fall and never rise again."

Thus far we have given a fair sample of the evidence of the Old Testament in rebuttal of the prevalent doctrine of a general rising of the dead to life. The passages we have quoted leave no room for inference—unless other texts of the O. T. as plainly contradict them—which cannot be pretended—they apply clearly and directly to the point, and must be intelligible, even to the most uncultivated mind.

We shall now proceed to examine the bearing of the New Testament on the subject; but surely no one can for a moment maintain that either Christ or his apostles ever contradicted the prophets of old? Admitting a text, even—if such could be—which positively affirms the wicked dead shall live again, what then? Shall we, like the infidel, throw the Book away contemptuously, because it seemingly teaches a different doctrine? No! But our task should be to scrutinize closely to ascertain whether, after all, such discordant texts are not susceptible of a meaning or interpretation that shall form a link that supplies the seeming break in the great chain of sacred truth. If a text is possibly capable of two interpretations, that certainly should be chosen which is most in harmony with the known or revealed character of God and the general teaching of Scripture. We must determine at the outset, as in the case of the Old Testament, the general tenor or drift of the New. We find the general tenor of the New Testament expressed in a single text, namely, John iii., 16. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Here, it is manifest, that not an individual member of the human family could have had a resurrection, if Jesus Christ had not come into the world. Of the millions that have successively populated the earth, none could ever return to life but for the redemption through Christ; all must have remained with their kindred dust, according to the law which prescribed their doom: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return!" But how is this redemption obtained? The question is answered in John vi., 40: "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day."

The antithesis of this declaration, namely, "I will raise him up at the last day," logically and necessarily implies that those who do not believe on the Son will not be raised up at the last day. The apostle John also says that God has "given us eternal life," and that "this life is in his Son."

Paul said that he labored and suffered that he might be made conformable to Christ's death—that he might attain unto the resurrection of the dead—or, as the original may be construed, "the resurrection out from among the dead ones." So then Paul must have understood that of the two classes but one would have a resurrection, and he therefore strove that he might be numbered with that class. With the apostles, the resurrection of the dead was the great fundamental principle of the gospel. This was their "hobby" continually, until it became a pivot around which everything else seemed made to revolve. They sought earnestly to convince their hearers that by the indwelling of the Spirit of Christ mankind would be raised from the dead; but that if they lived "after the flesh" they should die, and death would exercise eternal dominion over them. Hence, the general tenor of the New Testament is, that there is a future life which will be eternal—not temporary—a life peculiar to the righteous, which nowhere in Scripture is affirmed of the ungod'y. To the Sadducees who denied the possibility of a resurrection, Christ replied: "They who are accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more, for they are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." That is to say, that we, by natural birth, are the children of Adam—of the flesh; and as that which is born of the flesh must perish with the flesh, we can only attain to a new life—the resurrection life—by means of the Spirit of God, the same Spirit which raised Christ from the dead.

We might multiply similar texts; but think that enough have been quoted to establish the general tenor of both the Old and the New Testament in reference to the doctrine of the resurrection.

[To be concluded next week].

"Catechesis."

STRICTURES BY JACOB GRIM.

"Ques. 30.—By what other form of sound words does he express the same thing? Ans.—By the words in 1 Cor xv., 53, 'This corruptible must put on incorruption, this mortal (to thneton touto) must put on immortality. incorruption and immortality are vestments to be put on to a corruptible and mortal thing."

Here we have the same thing of dressing up a mortal corruptible body with something that does not belong to it.

"Ques. 31.—What is the mortal and the corruptible he refers to in these texts? Ans.—It is not to dust and ashes in the grave, for they are neither corruptible nor mortal. He refers to what he plainly expresses in Rom. viii., 11, where he says, The Spirit of him who raised Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies. Dust and ashes resulting from decomposition are not mortal bodies.

"Ques. 32.—Has the aforesaid promise to the saints in Rome, of quickening their mortal bodies ever been fulfilled? Ans.—Instead of their mortal bodies having been quickened, they paid the debt of nature, and have been dead ever since.

"Ques. 33.—Where are the mortal bodies of the saints to whom Paul wrote? Ans.—There are no such bodies in existence upon the earth or under the earth. The mortal bodies to whom Paul wrote are now no bodies and nowhere. There is nothing left of them but dust and ashes, and their record written in the Lamb's book of life. Mal. iii., 16, Rev. xxi., 27.

"Ques. 34.—Hath the promise failed then? if not what must ensue to make its fulfilment possible? Ans.—The Roman saints must be recreated from the dust and come forth with the same kind of bodies that were laid in the grave, namely, with earthy bodies, being upon this, as they were when Paul wrote to them; that part of their number which at the judgment seat of Christ (see Rom. xiv., 10, 12; 2 Cor. v., 10.) in the account rendered, shall be able to make it appear that they have walked after the Spirit, will be quickened; but those of them who have lived after the flesh, (and many, we know, do this who profess to be saints), will remain earthy bodies, as they came forth, and die a second time, and reap corruption of the flesh. Rom. viii. 13; Gal. vi. 8."

Now we have given the last four or five questions entire, to show the subtle influence of the whole work. First, there are no bodies now, only dust and ashes; for fear the question should be raised on their recreation the answer is, Their lives are written in the Lamb's book of life." But this proves too much. Where are the lives of the dust and ashes of the wicked kept? where is their record kept? Certainly not in the Lamb's book of life. "But those who have lived after the flesh, (and there are many who profess to be saints who do), will remain earthy bodies as they came forth." But how do they come forth? what quickens them into life? Paul says, "Some will say, how are the dead raised up? with what bodies do they come? Thou fool, (says Paul) that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." But, Paul, "Catechesis," says "the dead dust and ashes cannot be quickened; it must be a live earthy body before it can be quickened." But I say, says Paul, "it cannot be quickened except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be." Stop, Paul, you must be mistaken! In answering question 34, Catechesis says, "The Roman saints must be recreated and come forth with the same kind of bodies that were laid down in the grave, namely earthy bodies." "It is not so," says Paul, "God gives it a body as it hath pleased him. . . . . So also is the resurrection of the dead; it is sown a natural body, and it is raised a spiritual body." But Paul, are you not mistaken? Catechesis says, "they must be recreated from dust and ashes into the same kind of earthy bodies that were laid in the grave; and when they shall be able to make it appear, at the judgment seat of Christ, that they have walked after the Spirit, then they will be quickened." Ans. to ques. 34.

I tell you nay, says Paul: For "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we (the living) shall be changed. Does that look like coming up in the flesh and making it appear at the judgment seat of Christ that we have walked after the Spirit? and all to be done in the twinkling of an eye? No: I tell you the dead will be raised incorruptible. But does not Rom. viii., 13, say, "For if ye live after the flesh ye shall die?" Yes; but we deny that it says if ye live after the flesh ye shall die the second time after the resurrection, or recreation from the dead, according to Catechesis, in answer to question 34. But does not Gal. vi., 8, say, "For he that soweth to his flesh shall reap corruption?" Yes; but we deny that it says, from this flesh or corruption a man gathers himself up again, and then dies a second time, according to Catechesis' answer 34.

"Ques. 36.—Seeing that Jesus came forth from among the dead, why is he styled, The second Man, the Lord from heaven? Ans.—The earthy body which came from the tomb was not the Lord from heaven. The Lord from heaven was the Father, by whose Spirit the earthy body was anointed with incorruption, power, and deathlessness, in its instantaneous transformation or ascent into the divine nature; and by which it was made Lord the Christ."

Peter, what are we to understand when you say, "That his soul was not left in the grave, neither his flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we are all witnesses. Therefore being at the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear. Therefore let all the house of Israel, (yea, and Catechesis also) know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ?" Acts ii., 31, 32, 33, 36.

Now if what Catechesis says is true, that the earthy body that came from the tomb was not the man from heaven (the word Lord is supplied) whom God made both Lord and Christ, then Peter was deceived and deceived all Israel; for he declared that the same Jesus whom they crucified was the one that God exalted to be both Lord and Christ. Catechesis says, "that the Lord from heaven was the Father, by whose Spirit the earthy body was anointed with power and deathlessness." The Father never was crucified, neither was the Spirit that anointed; and it matters not what change a body or person undergoes in the change from corruption to incorruption, from mortal to immortality, Peter declares it is the same Jesus that was crucified that was exalted to be both Lord and Christ. Paul declares it was sown (in the earth) a mortal body: it was raised (out of the earth where it was sown) a spiritual body. And Jesus, the first born from the dead, declared, "I am he that liveth and was dead: and behold I am alive forevermore." Rev. i., 18. Now we affirm, if Jesus had a heavenly house, with which he was clothed upon, that house never was dead; for as Catechesis says, "it is eternal, and from the heaven;" whereas Jesus was from the earth earthy; and God raised him from the dead.

We have probably occupied more time, and consumed more of the patience of our readers than the subject is worth; but there seems to be a growing disposition on the part of all our opponents to try to make out that the resurrection of all mankind, good and bad, will be a mortal resurrection; and then the righteous will be quickened, which Catechesis makes the act of rising from the earth into some undefined place in the twinkling of an eye. If it had not been for this growing tendency of these latter days, we would have passed Catechesis over in silence. His work is an acknowledgment, that if the dead are raised incorruptible, and we (the living saints) shall be changed, the wicked are left behind; or once get them up and you cannot get them down again.

For this, we thank Catechesis. It is narrowing the debate down to the one issue; and we are prepared to meet it. And this mongrel Catechism will prove, like all its kindred, an abortion; and will perish in its birth. There are some more questions. If the Editor think these articles worth the room in the Herald of Life we may pursue it until we reach the end. Yours in love.

Note by the Editor.—If we must express an opinion, we confess we cannot see how Br. Grim can have patience to transcribe such trash as the questions and answers of the bloated "Catechesis." They make us think of what the Deists said in the Hartford Convention of the Jewish Priesthood, that it was a "contemptible foolery." But when men "seek their own and not the things that are Jesus Christ's," we expect to see just such "foolery" as this effort of Catechesis. If men will run into such vain imaginings, we think Br. Grim or any one else who attempts to stop them will find it just about as hopeless a case, as the shepherds of the swine in Gergasenes would have found an attempt to arrest their herd after it started for the lake. When men become mad with their fancied greatness, and others are stupid enough to follow them, they will run into the lake. "If the blind lead the blind, both will fall into the ditch." Br. Grim will please use his own judgment about noticing further such trash.

"My kingdom is not of this world."

When, because of continued rebellion and apostasy, God suspended the exercise of regal authority in the line of David, in the person of Coniah, as king on David's throne, it was by a most solemn appeal, as though the entire creation was concerned in the event: "O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord! Write ye this man childless—a man that shall not prosper in his days; for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah." Jer. xxii., 30.

But the interruption is only for a time appointed; the kingdom shall be overturned and abased. "Perverted, perverted, perverted shall it be, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi., 27. Until then power and glory should not inhere in prince or people. "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king and without a prince, without a sacrifice and without an image, and without an ephod, and without a teraphim. Afterward shall the children of Israel return and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days." Hos. iii., 4, 5. The power, authority and dominion that had been vested in Abraham and his seed, and was by an everlasting covenant to be perpetuated in the line of David, was now for a time revoked and annulled. And, as by this most solemn revocation all specific delegated power had thus been withdrawn from earth, the right of dominion, if it existed at all, must be transferred outside the circumcision, or the entire earth would be left to lawlessness and anarchy. This is self-evident—for within the circumcision, by the oath and covenant of God, power and dominion was vested in David alone, and was not transferable. See Jer. xxxiii., 15, to end.

"To the intent that the living may know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men," Dan. iv., 17, we find the king of Babylon solemnly invested with as plenary power as God ever conferred on any of the human race. "The God of heaven has given thee a kingdom, power, strength and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thy hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all." Dan. ii., 37, 38.

The kingdom thus established by an irreversible decree, and for a time appointed is placed in Gentile hands, and through the successive order of empire, as prescribed and determined, shall be perpetuated "until the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed. And the kingdom shall not be left to other people; it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Dan. ii., 44. This decree is thus in the most perfect accord with Ezekiel, as above quoted: "Until he comes, whose right it is." The assumption that the power thus vested in Gentile hands, whether in church or state, is to be perpetuated, irrespective of the Davidical covenant and restoration of the throne and kingdom—thus subordinating the Israel of God to Gentile supremacy—claiming for themselves the distinguished honor to convert the world and bless the race during the absence of her Lord, is too monstrous and God-dishonoring to be seriously entertained.

This decree, as a part of the revealed will of the Father, our Lord ever respected and acknowledged during his service-time on earth. "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke xxi., 24. "When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him King, he departed again into a mountain himself alone." John vi., 15. "Ye shall not see me until the time come when ye shall say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Luke xiii., 35. "In the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matth. xix., 28. The judicial blindness of Israel continues "until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." Rom. xi., 25.

In our Lord's more private intercourse, this decree was ever observed. When "a certain" adventurer volunteered as a partisan, he answered, "the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." Luke ix., 58. Reference here is doubtless had to that which pertained to him officially, as Son of man, and not, as is generally supposed, to mere personal or individual destitution. Like Abraham, to whom the inheritance pertained, he was only a sojourner. It is not in "this world" (cosmos), but in "the world to come," in which the inheritance shall be realized. So, also, in the matter touching the division of "the inheritance," our Lord utterly refused to entertain the proposition, and repudiated the exercise of any judicial authority: "Man, who made me a judge or divider over you?" Luke xii., 14.

With this decree established, as a rule or

THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY:
OR, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION.

A SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

TEXT: "Give me understanding and I shall live." Ps. cxix., 144. "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi., 16.

The distinct utterances of these portions of inspiration give us confidence in pursuing our inquiry, and in presenting the subject to attention. The first text being from the most pious and honored of Israel's kings, announcing the way of life, and the other from the wisest of those kings, distinctly stating that some "shall REMAIN in the congregation of the dead," seem ample authority for our investigating the subject; and such company as these two kings, may prevent even the timid from being alarmed in search after the truth.

Truth is harmonious in all its parts—the links of which cannot be separated without detriment to the whole chain. It is therefore not a matter of indifference as to what a man may believe, as many suppose. If he believe the truth he will doubtless be benefitted by it; but he will derive much more benefit from a clear perception of the whole truth than a part of it. When the Saviour prayed, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth," he prayed in effect, that we should all feel the force, and understand the importance of truth. So that whatever phase of that truth may be presented, it demands our attention, and should not be put aside. No one should undertake to say, therefore, that he has sufficient truth and does not wish to perplex his mind with abstract notions or irrelevant issues. The point to be examined is not merely what is truth? but how much is it necessary for us to entertain and to apply for our welfare? It does not become us to isolate passages of Scripture or to dwell upon a particular text to the exclusion of nearly every other: for the truth as it is revealed to us from God, runs in harmonious streams through both the Old and the New Testament.

We have heard persons frequently say, in reply to certain quotations "Ah! that is from the Old Testament!" as if it were not worth our while to regard the fitness and self-evidence of anything emanating from that source. But Christ bade the Jews "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they that testify of me." Now what "Scriptures" were they directed to search? As the New Testament was not then written, they must have been referred to the Old Testament; and hence we have not only Saviour's reference to those "Scriptures," but also his declaration that they testify of eternal life. The apostle Paul, likewise, in his discourses to the Jews, repeatedly directs their attention to the Old Testament. For example, when he stood before Agrippa, he claimed to have taught nothing but what Moses and the prophets had said should come to pass, and our Lord after his resurrection, said to his disciples: "Oh! fools" (literally, unwise) "and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken . . . and beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself."

There are some Christians who are prone to think that the New Testament supersedes the Old; but on the contrary, the latter serve as a key to the former—they are essential to a just appreciation and proper understanding of them. But let us add, that a theological theory has never yet been started without encountering some apparent or real contradictory texts; else the world had never been divided into so many radically different religious denominations. One class range themselves on the side of certain texts that represent their theological ideas; another class, taking exception to these, discover flaws and contradictions, and settle down upon opposite texts, and so on.

We conclude, therefore, the only means of arriving at a clear apprehension of the truth is to determine the general tenor of the Scriptures, and then construe the discordant texts in harmony with it. For many passages are susceptible of more than one construction; but the construction which approximates most nearly to the general tenor of the Scriptures, and harmonizes best with the known perfections of God, should be regarded as the true one, and adopted. The texts we have chosen as the foundation of our investigation seem flatly to to contradict the view generally received by Christendom; and it must, therefore, be submitted to the test previously recommended.

The term resurrection does not occur in the Old Testament, but there are many corresponding phrases, such as "awake—arise—Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell!—Thy dead men shall live," etc.; which expressions in no instance have the remotest allusion to the wicked dead. In the New Testament the word resurrection frequently occurs, as well as numerous equivalent terms; for example, "rise, raised, rising, raise, rose, risen," etc., but none of them are ever used with reference to a future life of the wicked, unless in the negative form, as "not rise; not see life," etc. Such terms and phrases as denote future life, belong exclusively to the righteous, and in the Scriptures are applied to them alone; so that there is not, from Genesis to Revelation, a text which declares that the wicked dead shall live again, or that they shall have a future life at all; yet there are a few texts from which it may be inferred.

Our object at this time will be to define the prospects of dying men—to learn God's purposes, as revealed in his word, in relation to the children of Adam—to reveal to the sinner the nature of his doom—eternal death—and thereby awaken him to the fact that unless he repent and come to Christ he will perish forever "like the beasts that perish." "Well, there is nothing very alarming in such a prospect," he may say; but to those who enjoy life—who rightly estimate its value—it is an awful prospect, indeed. Let us turn to and contemplate the picture presented by Job xxiv., 19, 20.

"Drought and heat consume the snow waters, so doth the grave those which have sinned. The womb shall forget him; the worm shall feed sweetly on him; he shall be no more remembered; and wickedness shall be broken as a tree."

The term which is here translated "grave," is sheol, in the original—the place or state of the dead: the hidden state. And here it is stated clearly and unequivocally sheol shall consume the wicked as heat consumes the snow waters: no analogy could be more striking, nor could any language be more expressive of the end of "those which have sinned."

The phrase "shall be no more remembered,' in this text, gives emphasis to Job's declaration; by it he intensifies the fact of the eternal dominion of death over the sinner. In chap. xiv., Job asked the question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" He says, "O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave (sheol) . . . that thou wouldst appoint me a set time, and remember me." Job's idea, then, of being remembered, was that of "living again" from death. Keep this in mind, and his affirmation that the wicked consumed in sheol "shall be no more remembered" is a positive declaration that they shall not "live again." The same idea is found in Psa. lxxxviii. 3–5, where the Psalmist says, "My soul is full of troubles; and my life draweth nigh unto the grave . . . among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more." Some of the dead are to be no more remembered; hence have no life from the state of death.

The Psalmist says in Psalm xlix, "They that trust themselves in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches . . . . their inward thought is that their houses shall continue forever, and their dwelling places to all generations; they call their lands after their own names. Nevertheless, man being in honor abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish."

"What!" exclaims one—"would you reduce man to the level of a beast?" The Psalmist has done it; or rather God, who inspired the Psalmist by his Spirit, and we can only reply in his words, "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling;" or as the margin reads, "The grave being a habitation to every one of them." "The grave, then, is their abode; and there they must lie forever: but the Psalmist in the next verse says of himself, by way of contrast: "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for he shall receive me."

Let us pass on to Isaiah xxvi., 14. Here the prophet, after having spoken of certain "other lords" who had ruled over his people, says: "They are dead, they shall not live: they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." And why shall they "not rise?" Because "the man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." How important that we pray with David, "Give me understanding and I shall live." Such shall not "remain in the congregation of the dead"—"I will raise him up at the last day," saith Jesus, who is "the resurrection and the life."

It is frequently claimed that the text Isa. xxvi., 14 has reference to the final destruction of the wicked, which event, it is said, will occur a thousand years after the coming of the Lord, or at least after the resurrection of all the dead. Such a conclusion, however, is erroneous, as will be readily perceived from the contrast presented in verse 19. Keeping in mind the previous text, to wit: "They are dead: they shall not rise"—verse 19 says, "Thy dead men shall live: together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing," etc. Here, as may be seen, the final condition of the two classes is described—long prior to the resurrection—in language too plain to be misunderstood.

Again, in Isa. xliii., 17, we read, "Which bringeth forth the chariot and horse, the army and the power; they shall lie down together, they shall not rise; they are extinct, they are quenched as tow." Also in Jer. li., 39, the following language is employed: "In their heat I will make their feasts and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not awake, saith the LORD." Similar language characterizes verse 57 likewise. "And I will make drunk her princes and her wise men: her captains and her rulers and her mighty men and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not awake, saith the King whose name is the LORD of hosts."

The words of the prophet Amos are equally emphatic on this point, chap. viii. last verse: "They that swear by the sin of Samaria, and say, Thy God, O Dan, liveth; and the manner of Beersheba liveth; even they shall fall and never rise again."

Thus far we have given a fair sample of the evidence of the Old Testament in rebuttal of the prevalent doctrine of a general rising of the dead to life. The passages we have quoted leave no room for inference—unless other texts of the O. T. as plainly contradict them—which cannot be pretended—they apply clearly and directly to the point, and must be intelligible, even to the most uncultivated mind.

We shall now proceed to examine the bearing of the New Testament on the subject; but surely no one can for a moment maintain that either Christ or his apostles ever contradicted the prophets of old? Admitting a text, even—if such could be—which positively affirms the wicked dead shall live again, what then? Shall we, like the infidel, throw the Book away contemptuously, because it seemingly teaches a different doctrine? No! But our task should be to scrutinize closely to ascertain whether, after all, such discordant texts are not susceptible of a meaning or interpretation that shall form a link that supplies the seeming break in the great chain of sacred truth. If a text is possibly capable of two interpretations, that certainly should be chosen which is most in harmony with the known or revealed character of God and the general teaching of Scripture. We must determine at the outset, as in the case of the Old Testament, the general tenor or drift of the New. We find the general tenor of the New Testament expressed in a single text, namely, John iii., 16. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Here, it is manifest, that not an individual member of the human family could have had a resurrection, if Jesus Christ had not come into the world. Of the millions that have successively populated the earth, none could ever return to life but for the redemption through Christ; all must have remained with their kindred dust, according to the law which prescribed their doom: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return!" But how is this redemption obtained? The question is answered in John vi., 40: "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day."

The antithesis of this declaration, namely, "I will raise him up at the last day," logically and necessarily implies that those who do not believe on the Son will not be raised up at the last day. The apostle John also says that God has "given us eternal life," and that "this life is in his Son."

Paul said that he labored and suffered that he might be made conformable to Christ's death—that he might attain unto the resurrection of the dead—or, as the original may be construed, "the resurrection out from among the dead ones." So then Paul must have understood that of the two classes but one would have a resurrection, and he therefore strove that he might be numbered with that class. With the apostles, the resurrection of the dead was the great fundamental principle of the gospel. This was their "hobby" continually, until it became a pivot around which everything else seemed made to revolve. They sought earnestly to convince their hearers that by the indwelling of the Spirit of Christ mankind would be raised from the dead; but that if they lived "after the flesh" they should die, and death would exercise eternal dominion over them. Hence, the general tenor of the New Testament is, that there is a future life which will be eternal—not temporary—a life peculiar to the righteous, which nowhere in Scripture is affirmed of the ungodly. To the Sadducees who denied the possibility of a resurrection, Christ replied: "They who are accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more, for they are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." That is to say, that we, by natural birth, are the children of Adam—of the flesh; and as that which is born of the flesh must perish with the flesh, we can only attain to a new life—the resurrection life—by means of the Spirit of God, the same Spirit which raised Christ from the dead.

We might multiply similar texts; but think that enough have been quoted to establish the general tenor of both the Old and the New Testament in reference to the doctrine of the resurrection.

[To be concluded next week].

"CATECHESIS."

STRICTURES BY JACOB GRIM.

"Ques. 30.—By what other form of sound words does he express the same thing? Ans.—By the words in 1 Cor xv., 53, 'This corruptible must put on incorruption, this mortal (to thneton touto) must put on immortality. incorruption and immortality are vestments to be put on to a corruptible and mortal thing."

Here we have the same thing of dressing up a mortal corruptible body with something that does not belong to it.

"Ques. 31.—What is the mortal and the corruptible he refers to in these texts? Ans.—It is not to dust and ashes in the grave, for they are neither corruptible nor mortal. He refers to what he plainly expresses in Rom. viii., 11, where he says, The Spirit of him who raised Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies. Dust and ashes resulting from decomposition are not mortal bodies.

"Ques. 32.—Has the aforesaid promise to the saints in Rome, of quickening their mortal bodies ever been fulfilled? Ans.—Instead of their mortal bodies having been quickened, they paid the debt of nature, and have been dead ever since.

"Ques. 33.—Where are the mortal bodies of the saints to whom Paul wrote? Ans.—There are no such bodies in existence upon the earth or under the earth. The mortal bodies to whom Paul wrote are now no bodies and nowhere. There is nothing left of them but dust and ashes, and their record written in the Lamb's book of life. Mal. iii., 16, Rev. xxi., 27.

"Ques. 34.—Hath the promise failed then? if not what must ensue to make its fulfilment possible? Ans.—The Roman saints must be recreated from the dust and come forth with the same kind of bodies that were laid in the grave, namely, with earthy bodies, being upon this, as they were when Paul wrote to them; that part of their number which at the judgment seat of Christ (see Rom. xiv., 10, 12; 2 Cor. v., 10.) in the account rendered, shall be able to make it appear that they have walked after the Spirit, will be quickened; but those of them who have lived after the flesh, (and many, we know, do this who profess to be saints), will remain earthy bodies, as they came forth, and die a second time, and reap corruption of the flesh. Rom. viii. 13; Gal. vi. 8."

Now we have given the last four or five questions entire, to show the subtle influence of the whole work. First, there are no bodies now, only dust and ashes; for fear the question should be raised on their recreation the answer is, Their lives are written in the Lamb's book of life." But this proves too much. Where are the lives of the dust and ashes of the wicked kept? where is their record kept? Certainly not in the Lamb's book of life. "But those who have lived after the flesh, (and there are many who profess to be saints who do), will remain earthy bodies as they came forth." But how do they come forth? what quickens them into life? Paul says, "Some will say, how are the dead raised up? with what bodies do they come? Thou fool, (says Paul) that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." But, Paul, "Catechesis," says "the dead dust and ashes cannot be quickened; it must be a live earthy body before it can be quickened." But I say, says Paul, "it cannot be quickened except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be." Stop, Paul, you must be mistaken! In answering question 34, Catechesis says, "The Roman saints must be recreated and come forth with the same kind of bodies that were laid down in the grave, namely earthy bodies." "It is not so," says Paul, "God gives it a body as it hath pleased him. . . . . So also is the resurrection of the dead; it is sown a natural body, and it is raised a spiritual body." But Paul, are you not mistaken? Catechesis says, "they must be recreated from dust and ashes into the same kind of earthy bodies that were laid in the grave; and when they shall be able to make it appear, at the judgment seat of Christ, that they have walked after the Spirit, then they will be quickened." Ans. to ques. 34.

I tell you nay, says Paul: For "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we (the living) shall be changed. Does that look like coming up in the flesh and making it appear at the judgment seat of Christ that we have walked after the Spirit? and all to be done in the twinkling of an eye? No: I tell you the dead will be raised incorruptible. But does not Rom. viii., 13, say, "For if ye live after the flesh ye shall die?" Yes; but we deny that it says if ye live after the flesh ye shall die the second time after the resurrection, or recreation from the dead, according to Catechesis, in answer to question 34. But does not Gal. vi., 8, say, "For he that soweth to his flesh shall reap corruption?" Yes; but we deny that it says, from this flesh or corruption a man gathers himself up again, and then dies a second time, according to Catechesis' answer 34.

"Ques. 36.—Seeing that Jesus came forth from among the dead, why is he styled, The second Man, the Lord from heaven? Ans.—The earthy body which came from the tomb was not the Lord from heaven. The Lord from heaven was the Father, by whose Spirit the earthy body was anointed with incorruption, power, and deathlessness, in its instantaneous transformation or ascent into the divine nature; and by which it was made Lord the Christ."

Peter, what are we to understand when you say, "That his soul was not left in the grave, neither his flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we are all witnesses. Therefore being at the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear. Therefore let all the house of Israel, (yea, and Catechesis also) know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ?" Acts ii., 31, 32, 33, 36.

Now if what Catechesis says is true, that the earthy body that came from the tomb was not the man from heaven (the word Lord is supplied) whom God made both Lord and Christ, then Peter was deceived and deceived all Israel; for he declared that the same Jesus whom they crucified was the one that God exalted to be both Lord and Christ. Catechesis says, "that the Lord from heaven was the Father, by whose Spirit the earthy body was anointed with power and deathlessness." The Father never was crucified, neither was the Spirit that anointed; and it matters not what change a body or person undergoes in the change from corruption to incorruption, from mortal to immortality, Peter declares it is the same Jesus that was crucified that was exalted to be both Lord and Christ. Paul declares it was sown (in the earth) a mortal body: it was raised (out of the earth where it was sown) a spiritual body. And Jesus, the first born from the dead, declared, "I am he that liveth and was dead: and behold I am alive forevermore." Rev. i., 18. Now we affirm, if Jesus had a heavenly house, with which he was clothed upon, that house never was dead; for as Catechesis says, "it is eternal, and from the heaven;" whereas Jesus was from the earth earthy; and God raised him from the dead.

We have probably occupied more time, and consumed more of the patience of our readers than the subject is worth; but there seems to be a growing disposition on the part of all our opponents to try to make out that the resurrection of all mankind, good and bad, will be a mortal resurrection; and then the righteous will be quickened, which Catechesis makes the act of rising from the earth into some undefined place in the twinkling of an eye. If it had not been for this growing tendency of these latter days, we would have passed Catechesis over in silence. His work is an acknowledgment, that if the dead are raised incorruptible, and we (the living saints) shall be changed, the wicked are left behind; or once get them up and you cannot get them down again.

For this, we thank Catechesis. It is narrowing the debate down to the one issue; and we are prepared to meet it. And this mongrel Catechism will prove, like all its kindred, an abortion; and will perish in its birth. There are some more questions. If the Editor think these articles worth the room in the HERALD OF LIFE we may pursue it until we reach the end. Yours in love.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—If we must express an opinion, we confess we cannot see how Br. Grim can have patience to transcribe such trash as the questions and answers of the bloated "Catechesis." They make us think of what the Deists said in the Hartford Convention of the Jewish Priesthood, that it was a "contemptible foolery." But when men "seek their own and not the things that are Jesus Christ's," we expect to see just such "foolery" as this effort of Catechesis. If men will run into such vain imaginings, we think Br. Grim or any one else who attempts to stop them will find it just about as hopeless a case, as the shepherds of the swine in Gergasenes would have found an attempt to arrest their herd after it started for the lake. When men become mad with their fancied greatness, and others are stupid enough to follow them, they will run into the lake. "If the blind lead the blind, both will fall into the ditch." Br. Grim will please use his own judgment about noticing further such trash.

"My kingdom is not of this world."

When, because of continued rebellion and apostasy, God suspended the exercise of regal authority in the line of David, in the person of Coniah, as king on David's throne, it was by a most solemn appeal, as though the entire creation was concerned in the event: "O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord! Write ye this man childless—a man that shall not prosper in his days; for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah." Jer. xxii., 30.

But the interruption is only for a time appointed; the kingdom shall be overturned and abased. "Perverted, perverted, perverted shall it be, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi., 27. Until then power and glory should not inhere in prince or people. "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king and without a prince, without a sacrifice and without an image, and without an ephod, and without a teraphim. Afterward shall the children of Israel return and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days." Hos. iii., 4, 5. The power, authority and dominion that had been vested in Abraham and his seed, and was by an everlasting covenant to be perpetuated in the line of David, was now for a time revoked and annulled. And, as by this most solemn revocation all specific delegated power had thus been withdrawn from earth, the right of dominion, if it existed at all, must be transferred outside the circumcision, or the entire earth would be left to lawlessness and anarchy. This is self-evident—for within the circumcision, by the oath and covenant of God, power and dominion was vested in David alone, and was not transferable. See Jer. xxxiii., 15, to end.

"To the intent that the living may know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men," Dan. iv., 17, we find the king of Babylon solemnly invested with as plenary power as God ever conferred on any of the human race. "The God of heaven has given thee a kingdom, power, strength and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thy hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all." Dan. ii., 37, 38.

The kingdom thus established by an irreversible decree, and for a time appointed is placed in Gentile hands, and through the successive order of empire, as prescribed and determined, shall be perpetuated "until the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed. And the kingdom shall not be left to other people; it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Dan. ii., 44. This decree is thus in the most perfect accord with Ezekiel, as above quoted: "Until he comes, whose right it is." The assumption that the power thus vested in Gentile hands, whether in church or state, is to be perpetuated, irrespective of the Davidical covenant and restoration of the throne and kingdom—thus subordinating the Israel of God to Gentile supremacy—claiming for themselves the distinguished honor to convert the world and bless the race during the absence of her Lord, is too monstrous and God-dishonoring to be seriously entertained.

This decree, as a part of the revealed will of the Father, our Lord ever respected and acknowledged during his service-time on earth. "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke xxi., 24. "When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him King, he departed again into a mountain himself alone." John vi., 15. "Ye shall not see me until the time come when ye shall say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Luke xiii., 35. "In the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matth. xix., 28. The judicial blindness of Israel continues "until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." Rom. xi., 25.

In our Lord's more private intercourse, this decree was ever observed. When "a certain" adventurer volunteered as a partisan, he answered, "the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." Luke ix., 58. Reference here is doubtless had to that which pertained to him officially, as Son of man, and not, as is generally supposed, to mere personal or individual destitution. Like Abraham, to whom the inheritance pertained, he was only a sojourner. It is not in "this world" (cosmos), but in "the world to come," in which the inheritance shall be realized. So, also, in the matter touching the division of "the inheritance," our Lord utterly refused to entertain the proposition, and repudiated the exercise of any judicial authority: "Man, who made me a judge or divider over you?" Luke xii., 14. . . .

With this decree established, as a rule or principle ever recognized by our Lord, as the Father's will which he came to honor, we are prepared to inquire into his defence and confession before Pilate—only premising that it was not as a turbulent man, a political aspirant, or an ambitious adventurer—but upon the one, sole specific charge embraced in Pilate's interrogation. It is of no consequence whatever, whether Pilate understood its full import, so long as the person arraigned had not endamaged Cæsar's government. The Jews, doubtless, fully comprehended its import, both in the relation he sustained toward their own nation, and the consequences that must ensue to their Gentile oppressors. They well knew the only power destined of God, so to antagonize the Gentile supremacy, of which Cæsar was the constituted head, and to accomplish its overthrow, was comprehended in that short inquiry.

And when fully acquitted on each separate count, the Jews plead in behalf of Cæsar: "If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend; whosoever maketh himself a king, speaketh against Cæsar." John xix., 12. Pilate said unto him, "Art thou the King of the Jews?" John xviii., 33. Our Lord fairly meets both issues involved in the question. "Sayest thou this thing of thyself,"—on the behalf of Cæsar—"or did others tell it thee of me?" The reply of Pilate implies an acquittal on the part of the Roman government. He had no charges to make. "Am I Jew? Thine own nation and the chief priests have delivered thee unto me: what hast thou done?" Our Lord, maintaining his official character, answers, "My kingdom is not of this world." By the decree of the Father, it was given into the hand of Cæsar—his authority he had ever respected, even to the payment of tribute. As to the Jews, "If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews." Had he then affected the crown of Judah, his servants would have resisted; but without tumult or commotion He had been apprehended and presented before Pilate's bar. He had, therefore, neither resisted Cæsar nor attempted the throne of Judah, and assigns the reason, "But now is my kingdom no from hence."

Here the assize virtually ended; But Pilate's curiosity was profoundly aroused, and the question was more directly put, "Art thou a King; then?" Jesus answered, "Thou sayest, I am a King. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." Astonished, perplexed, and confounded, Pilate exclaims: "What is truth!" And for this cause alone was he taken, crucified, and slain. It was the only issue involved in the trial, and Pilate could do no less than to write his superscription, "This is the King of the Jews." It was the procuring cause of his death.

There never was a vindication more complete; a defence more logical and unambiguous, or better sustained; there never was a judge more thoroughly convinced of the innocency of the party arraigned: "I find in him no fault."

To make "the kingdom" here spoken of, aught else than that which is held in abeyance by the decree of the Father—to make it the elect, or Gentile Church—or a "kingdom in mystery" (a mysterious kingdom?), or a spiritual one, or anything but that which he confessed before Pilate, and for which he died, is simply to place Christ's kingdom in this world, in opposition to his own divine testimony, and thus to rob him of his glory, and his kingdom, and his crown. Selected from Prophetic Times.

The Jaffa Colony.

It is some time since anything was published about the American Colony at Jaffa. It seems that there are a few remaining of the deluded set who were led to sacrifice so much in America to undertake a settlement in the Holy Land under Adams, and most of whom, after many disasters, were sent back to this country through the munificence of some charitable people and the aid of our government. The motive that led that colony is still encouraged as a belief by many in England as well as here, and indications are anxiously looked for that are to herald the day when the children of Israel shall return to their own land. A correspondent of the Tribune, writing from Beyrout thus speaks of the condition of the remnant of Adams' Colony.

The famous—or rather infamous—colony at Jaffa, under President Adams, still lives, although reduced to about twenty-five persons It is not so small, however, that it is not still divided by intestine feuds. Adams and wife are about to proceed to England to find recruits and funds. No doubt they will succeed. They have already some English members of the colony, and the English are far more insane on the subject of the Holy Land than Americans. You meet here at every turn some half-cracked man or woman from England, who has come out here to help fulfil the prophecies of Scripture as he or she interprets them. These deluded and often wealthy enthusiasts are legitimate game for such rogues as Adams. As far as one can see, the colony now depends for existence upon such game, for no crops have been sown, and there are no apparent means of subsistence. The few travellers who have been fortunate enough to land at Jaffa this year seem to have all taken the time to see the colony, and judge for themselves of Adams' claims.

Our Israelitish Origin.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Professor Wilson, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we endorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage, six cents.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MAY 13, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"Life from the Dead."
AND
"A Defence of the Bible."

We are now prepared at short notice, to supply any number of these works from one copy each to 1,000. We suggest to our friends everywhere to take hold of the circulation of these works systematically.

We propose the following method, where persons live at a distance from you, and you wish the work sent by mail. Write the person's name and P. O. address plain: send us 12 cents, and we will forward the above two works, and the two tracts "Can you Believe?" and "Twenty Questions on Immortality," all in one envelope, postage paid. How can you do more to spread the truth with twelve cents? Now is the time to work; and the poorest can do something.

Never, probably, has there been a time when we could accomplish more with small means than now. Many minds are hungering for the bread of life. They have been fed with "stones" till they are well nigh dead, or just ready to give up in hopeless despair of ever seeing a theology that harmonizes with the truth, "God is love."

A Call for Another Tract.

Br. Reuben Cadwell, Cortland, N. Y., writes: I will pledge $10 to publish the "True idea of the Judgment:" viz., your sermon "The Judgment," and the article "Light Increasing" added to it, in pamphlet. There is no subject on which the religious world are more in the dark than on this. I think we need tracts on this subject to scatter among the people as much as any other subject.

Remarks by the Editor.—We were thinking of the necessity of issuing that sermon on the Judgment, with some additions, when we received the above communication from Br. Cadwell. The effort now making, by a certain class of Advent believers, to carry the point of a mortal resurrection of all the dead, and a judicial judgment after, is not only unscriptural but pernicious. Let "Life Believers" not fail to clear our theory of such a mortal and monstrous absurdity. Let the true Scriptural view of the subject be presented, and no reflective and candid mind can fail to see that the investigating judgment, or judgment which decides every man's destiny, must be before the resurrection. The executive judgment is at or by the resurrection. [See our article, "Is the Judgment after the Resurrection?" following this.]

Let there be no parleying on this question. It is a vital one. It is one we cannot, must not, and will not surrender to any man or body of men. Life believers may as well give up their whole theory as to surrender this point. On this we shall make no compromise, show no hesitancy, and never ask for quarters. We stand here on the rock of eternal truth, and will die at our post, if die we must. But "though we thus speak," we have no fear, no misgiving, no doubts. The mortal resurrection theory, and judgment after, is as baseless as the immortal soul theory, and attempted to be bolstered up by the same course of reasoning. Both die together and let them be buried in one common grave—as they will be—and never have a resurrection.

Who seconds Br. Cadwell's proposal? Shall it be carried out immediately? All we can give is our time and labor, which seems already taxed to its utmost capacity. The work, if published, should accompany "Life from the Dead." Two thousand of this last named work have been sent off on their mission in the last few weeks, and the third thousand are printed, ready to go. Shall the tract on The Judgment go by thousands, also?

This is a question of vast importance. Those who take the affirmative may now be divided into several classes. 1. Those who believe the righteous have a priority in the resurrection, or will be raised before the wicked. 2. Those who believe the resurrection is simultaneous, both classes rising at the same time, but the righteous immortal and the wicked mortal. 3. Those who holy all are raised mortal, and so continue till after all have passed through an investigating judgment.

If the righteous will have a priority in time, in the resurrection, whether that time be one hour, one day, one year, or a thousand, how is it to be known who are to have part in this favored class, if all in their graves have not been judged before the resurrection begins? Are the righteous to be raised and then the process of judgment to be instituted to see whether the Searcher of hearts has made a mistake? Or, are they to be tried, undergo an examination after their resurrection, as if suspected characters? Can we adopt either of these positions? If not, must it not be manifest they had been judged before being raised? And why are they raised, and not the wicked, at the same instant, except the wicked also have been judged, and found not worthy to have part in this prior or "first resurrection?"

There is no escape from these questions by those who hold all men are revived at the same time, and yet say the wicked are raised corruptible; for it is clear the righteous come up incorruptible and immortal. Why this distinction in the revival state, if both classes had not been judged prior to the revival? And those who have taken the unscriptural position that both classes are raised in a mortal condition, and yet a thousand years apart, do not help their side of the question; for how does it happen that one class are raised before the others at all, if both had not been judged prior to this separation of the dead ones? Why do the righteous come up before the wicked? Why? No rational answer can be given by the advocates of a mortal resurrection, if they deny that all had previously been judged.

This dilemma has driven some of the advocates of the judgment after the resurrection to abandon not only the thousand years supposed to intervene between the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked, but also to deny that the righteous "are raised incorruptible," and to maintain that both righteous and wicked are raised mortal. This makes the righteous wait through the entire period of the judgment, whatever its length may be, before they can receive their reward or know certainly what their destiny is to be; which waiting may be 1,500 years, or two billions of years, according to the time occupied in investigating the acts and character of each individual. Such a preposterous idea as this mortal resurrection of all, good and bad, would be unworthy of notice, if some were not found who seem to believe it.

To say nothing of its palpable denial of Paul's affirmation, "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," what a grand state of suspense the whole race are held in for an indefinite period! And we might ask, How are this mortal multitude to be fed during this time? If by cultivating the earth, shall not all take part therein? If by miracle, then God will show mercy, for the time being, to the wicked as well as to the righteous, perhaps for thousands of years. That will be some, yea, a large compensation to the wicked to be fed without work for so long a period. We might ask very many questions about the occupation, places of retirement, sleep, etc., all of which are essential to mortals; but the thought of such an assemblage, for such a period, for the purpose of deciding what to do with each, after a minute examination, is too much for any unbiased mind to entertain: there must be an indefensible theory to serve before any man can resort to such a position. So it seems to us.

We will now look at this position as if it were presented by men of reason who profess to believe the Bible. That book positively declares, "The dead shall be raised incorruptible:" hence they are not raised mortal. But again: Christ is "the first fruits" from the dead; the sample of the harvest. If he was not raised from the dead mortal, and judged afterwards, to see if he should be changed to immortality, neither will they be "that are Christ's at his coming;" they are "the harvest," represented by the first fruits. Two facts show that Christ was judged before, or antecedent to his revival from the dead. First: The fact that he was revived previous to the "general resurrection," as it is called. Why is he revived before others, if he had not been judged worthy of such peculiar resurrection? Clearly, he had been so judged prior to his revival from the dead.

Second: His revival demonstrated that he had been so judged: for, he was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." That was the demonstration that he was judged to be the Son of God, and that this judgment passed on him prior to his resurrection from the dead. He was not raised mortal, then judged, and afterward changed to immortality, but his resurrection was his acquittal from mortality; "knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him." Rom. vi., 9. So Christ saith of those who are his followers: "they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world [kai] even the resurrection from the dead . . . . neither can they die any more." Why not? Because they "are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

They are "declared to be the sons of God, by the resurrection from the dead;" they are like the first-fruits, Christ the Son of God, and are demonstrated to be such by their revival from the dead, and cannot die any more, and hence are not raised mortal, but "incorruptible," as the Scriptures affirm.

If these things are so, then we are brought to the inevitable conclusion that the judgment, in which character and doom are decided, is at some period prior, or antecedent to the resurrection, and that the resurrection is, of itself, the executive judgment.

Eld. F. Burr and Jacob Grim:

As Br. Grim was "interested" as well as "somewhat amused" by my former letter in the Herald, I wish the privilege of following out some of those interesting remarks a little further for the benefit of the Herald readers.

Br. Grim writes that he is "sorry the good brother did not give us one text for the destruction of the wicked after the resurrection." Let us see if we cannot get something that will gladden our brother's heart. The apostle Jude in his epistle speaks of a class in his day whom he calls "wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." "Of these he says, Enoch prophesied, saying, 'Behold the Lord cometh . . . . to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly . . . . of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." Here is a "judgment" prophesied against some who lived in Jude's time. This judgment is to be executed when "the Lord cometh." At this judgment they will be "convinced of all their hard speeches." They must therefore be conscious. But they are unconscious in death now and cannot be made conscious without a resurrection from this unconsciousness. But what is reserved for them to pass into at that judgment? The blackness of darkness forever."

Again, read Heb. x., 26, 27, on this point. "For if we sin wilfully . . . . there remaineth . . . . a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries." Here is the case of a wilful sinner, and while in such a state there "remaineth" a "fearful looking for of judgment," etc. That judgment is connected with the "fiery indignation." Can any one look forward to this with fear if he is entirely to escape the consciousness of receiving it? But those in the apostle's day who belong to this class are unconscious in death, and unless raised from their present state will certainly escape the fearfulness of that devouring fire.

So also 2 Thess. i., 8, 9, which Br. Grim quoted, evidently includes a portion of the human race already dead; for the apostle speaks of God's recompensing tribulation to those who troubled the Thessalonian brethren at that time. But they are in temporal death, and must be restored to temporal life, or else there will be no "tribulation" recompensed to them. So scores of Scriptures might be adduced significant of the same great fact that consciousness will be restored to all the human race in the coming judgment day, and the same course of argument which would prove them to be devoid of life in that day, would also, if brought to bear upon their present condition, go to prove that no unrighteous man has any life now. But we know they have a mortal life now, consequently we conclude in harmony with Scripture declaration, that eternal life is that which they fail to obtain.

The doctrine of "no life out of Christ" is stated more emphatically to be the doctrine of "no life by a resurrection from the dead except through Christ." And how does that alter the case? To have life through or by means of Christ one thing, and to have life in Christ is quite another. "All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." John i., 3, "By him all things consist." Col. i., 17. To him is given "all power," and therefore all are dependent on him for continuation of their present life. He can restore temporal life, and as he has said "the hour cometh in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth," the resurrection of the wicked in that day will be "through Christ." But in order to have eternal life we must be in him. A suspension of temporal life is frequently called death. Thus, "where Lazarus was which had been dead, whom he raised from the dead." John xii., 1. Had he not been dead? Was he not raised to mortal or present life again? He has never received a future life, yet he had been raised to "life by a resurrection from the dead through Christ." So Br. Grim's emphatic statement of his doctrine does not cut off all chance of a resurrection from the dead to mortal life after all. But I leave the subject for the present, hoping to meet Br. Grim and all who love Jesus in a world where death can never enter. F. Burr.

Response to the Foregoing.

In the foregoing article we recognize the true spirit. If all our opponents would manifest the same kind spirit there would have been more progress in the cause of truth. We thank Br. Burr for the article and the kind spirit in which he dictated it. We have a few introductory remarks to make, and then we will proceed with what we have to say in reply. In the first place, I was amused at that portion of the article, in which Br. Rufus supposed he had caught some fish, as soon as they began to nibble at the bait. And then, again, I was amused to find Br. Burr quitting the bait so soon, for fear there was a hook concealed beneath it. And then, I was interested in what Br. Burr said about his own and his wife's researches, and the conclusions they had arrived at, and was sorry that they did not give the readers some of the results of their labors.

But Br. Burr has made up for that oversight in his second article. He offers to gladden our heart with the following passage, Jude xii., 16. For these is reserved "the blackness of darkness forever." This is to be executed at the judgment after the resurrection. I would say to my dear Br. Burr, I have not been a believer in the non-living again of the wicked for twenty-four years, and passed over the single chapter of Jude. I would here say there is not one word of a resurrection of the wicked and a judgment after that event. Jude gives us the characters of whom he is speaking in v. 10, "But these speak evil of those things which they know not, but what they know naturally as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves." What became of them? "these same individuals?" "They ran greedily after the error of Balaam . . . . and perished in the gainsaying of Core." "To whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." I suppose our Br. Burr wishes to make something out of the word reserved, re-again. Worcester says it means "to lay up in store; to keep; to retain; to hold." Now what is darkness and blackness? We read in Col. i., 13, "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and prepared us for the kingdom of his dear Son. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our sins. Here, evidently the power of darkness was the dominion of death; from which we were delivered through the forgiveness of our sins. In 2 Peter ii., Peter is evidently speaking of the same class of persons as Jude. In verse 3, he says, "And through covetousness shall make merchandise of you, whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their condemnation slumbereth not." But according to Br. Burr it has been slumbering for nearly 2,000 years. "For if God spared not the angels (messengers) that sinned, (angels cannot sin, neither can they die any more,) but cast them down to hell, and delivered into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment." There, says our brother, is the word reserve again. Yes, and we have it once more; "And spared not the old world, but saved Noah . . . . The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." To sum up. He spared not the messengers. He spared not the old world. He spared not the Sodomites. But he did reserve them until the day of judgment to be punished. And when was that? Just as soon as he had finished the preparation for the salvation of the godly; then they were cast down to death, which was, or is, the "blackness of darkness forever." And these, says Peter, "are set forth an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly." But these, he adds, in our day, who are following their example, "as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption; and shall receive the reward of unrighteousness." Well, if when they have perished in their own corruption they have received the reward of unrighteousness, will Br. Burr please inform us for what they are to be raised up again?

His next text is Heb. x., 26, 27. Our Br. Storrs, in his reply to Br. Cook, has anticipated our reply, and we would refer Br. Burr to that article. We will add but a few remarks. Jesus' mission was to the Jews, and to those only; and Paul, in his epistle to the Hebrews, is addressing the same class. Jesus said to his followers, Matt. x., 28, "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; (life) but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." The apostle to the Hebrews is speaking to a class of individuals who had tasted of the power of the life to come, and had turned back and denied the author of life. Well, the wicked Jews had not tasted of the world to come, and all they could lose was what man could take away. But these individuals would lose not only temporal life, but that also of which they had a foretaste, even the life to come.

The next and only passage for our consolation is 2 Thess. i, 8, 9. "Evidently includes a portion of the human race already dead," says Br. Burr; "for the apostle speaks of God's recompensing tribulation to those who troubled the Thessalonians." This seems to me like a strange kind of consolation, to tell the church to rest with him, to bear up under your trials and persecutions; for some two thousand years hence, after we have been dead and forgotten by the world, our God will bring back these dead sinners, and let you have the pleasure of seeing how he can make them "squeal" again. As Burns says, "It must be poor pleasure to a deil, to see them tormented thus and hear them squeal." The fact is the apostle and the church at Thessalonica were looking for the Lord Jesus to come, even in their day; and he consoled them with the fact, that the Lord would soon come and deliver them from their tribulations. There is not one word, Br. Burr, in either passage you have named has any reference to a future judgment, after a resurrection of the wicked.

"No life out of Christ" "To have life through or by means of Christ is one thing, and to have life in Christ is quite another," says Br. Burr. We see no difference, from the fact the Bible makes no difference. There is only one life which Jesus came to give, and that was eternal life. Adam was a generator; and he generated animal, mortal, corruptible life; and such are all his posterity. Jesus is a regenerator; and he regenerates with eternal life. But, says Br. Burr, "All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made. John i., 3. Br. Burr reads his Bible different from mine. I read, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." Now my Bible tells me "there is but one God." And I do not read that Jesus was in the beginning with God. The first I read of Jesus in my Bible is Luke i., 31. "And shall bring forth a son, and shall call his name Jesus." But we are referred to Col. i., 17. "And he is before all things, and by him all things consist." It would not be amiss to inquire what all things the apostle is speaking of? If Jesus had failed in his trial as Adam did, there would have been no resurrection of the dead; no church redeemed; no future age; "For if Christ be not risen (from the dead), your faith is vain, you are yet in your sins; and they also which are fallen asleep in Christ (as well as Christ) have perished." Therefore, says Paul, "He is before all things, and by him (in the age to come) all things consist. And he is the head of the body, the church; who is the beginning, the first born from the dead; that in all things (in the age to come) he might have the pre-eminence. For it pleased the Father that in him (in the age to come) should all the fulness dwell." Thanks be unto our God, that although through a man's disobedience came death, corruptibility, and mortality to the race, so by a Man's obedience came the resurrection of the dead, and all the glory of a future age. And we feel like singing the song of the prophet, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor; the Mighty God; the Father of the Everlasting Age; the Prince of Peace."

"Was not Lazarus raised from the dead?" We answer, yes. "Was he not raised to mortal, or present life again?" We answer, No; and ask you to prove it. Show us where he returned to his fathers, if you please. "He has never received a future life." How do you know that, Br. Burr? Please give us your proof. John xi., 24. "Martha said unto him, I know that he shall rise again (unto eternal life) in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the (eternal) life, (you need not wait until the last day) he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live. And whosoever believeth in me shall never die." Lazarus lived by the resurrection, and believed in Christ; and what right have we to say he died again, when Jesus said, "He that liveth and believeth in me shall never die?" "Believest thou this?" We in the flesh, who believe in Christ, die. We still think that "Br. Grim's emphatic statement cuts off all" hope of a resurrection in the flesh. Yours hoping for the resurrection unto life.

Jacob Grim.

Light Breaking.

Rev. R. S. Tharin, will preach on Sunday morning, and evening, at National Hall, 1,224 Market Street. Subject—Orthodox, Heaven and Hell tested by Scripture and "Paradise." Services at 10 1-2 A. M., and 7 1-2 P. M. Sunday School at 9 A. M. and 2 P. M. Seats free.

Philadelphia, April 27, 1868.

Br. Storrs: Yesterday (Sunday) the above notice was the subject of a discourse by the gentleman whose name is attached. But before I proceed to give any account of the discourse, I had better introduce the Rev. R. S. Tharin.

He was pastor of the Eleventh Baptist church, in Twelfth street, above Race street, Philadelphia. Some three weeks ago a disturbance occurred between him and people, and he commenced to give them a lecture from James, "Be not many masters, brethren," and the trustees thinking it too personal, ordered the organist to commence playing, and the consequence was the speaker's voice was drowned, and he was compelled to stop. In the evening the door was locked against him. Many were the charges made and answered, through the papers, of which we care nothing about. Some of our people said he was preaching our views. Sunday morning, when the above notice was announced, some of our brethren thought it would pay to hear what he said about the "Theological hell." He said it would be well first to settle what was the meaning of the word "Orthodox." After looking into the Lexicographers to get a definition, he had come to the conclusion that Orthodoxy, meant my-doxy; and Heterodoxy, my neighbor's doxy; for, said he, among the sects, every one who believes as we do is orthodox; and he that differs is heterodox. Hell, said he, is derived from the word sheol, and means the grave, or state of the dead; and the wicked and the nations who forget God are turned into sheol, into the grave. Speaking of the rich man and Lazarus, he said it was a parable; for Jesus never spoke to the Jews except by parables. Make the rich man and Lazarus two men, and where is your parable? The rich man, said Mr. Tharin, is the embodiment of of the Jewish law; and Lazarus the embodiment of the Christian dispensation. The idea of going to the Scribes and Pharisees for a doctrine, when Jesus warned his disciples to beware of them, he repudiated. No, says he, the Bible is very plain on the punishment of the wicked: it is death, eternal death. When Probst, the murderer, was at the end of the rope, said Tharin, he was eternally punished, and he is eternally dead; the end of the rope was the end of him. But, said he, some of you will ask, Can you annihilate matter? No, said he, we do not need to annihilate matter; but we can annihilate the man; and that is the end of him. Speaking of the coming of Christ, he said, "This same Jesus will so come in like manner:" and when he comes he will have a clean universe. He remarked, what I am going to say will not be new to some of you; for you have heard it before. So, from that, we infer he has been preaching upon the same subject before. He remarked that he had mentioned his doubts to a brother minister, and he replied, I am in the same pickle as yourself.

The Baptist church has severed the connection and dismissed him, and the Baptist Association have sustained the church. I believe I have given you what few facts I could gather; when I can ascertain his residence I shall call upon him. JACOB GRIM.

HOW TO PREVENT A DIVORCE.

WHEN the senior Jonnthan Trumbull was governor of Connecticut, a gentleman called at his house, requesting to see his excellency in private. Accordingly he was shown into his sanctum sanctorum, and the Governor came forward to meet Squire W., saying, "Good morning, sir, I am glad to see you."

Squire W. returned the salutation, adding as he did so, "I have called upon a very unpleasant errand, sir, and want your advice. My wife and I do not live happily together, and I am thinking of getting a divorce. What do you advise, sir?"

The Governor sat a few moments in deep thought, then turning to Squire W., said: "How did you treat Mrs. W. when you were courting her? and how did you feel toward her at the time of your marriage?" Squire W. replied, "I treated her as kindly as I could, for I loved her dearly at that time."

Well, sir," said the Governor, "go home and court her now just as you did then, and love her as when you married her. Do this in the fear of God for one year, and then tell me the result." The Governor then said, "Let us pray." They bowed in prayer and separated. When a year had passed away Squire W. again called to see the Governor, and grasping his hand said: "I have called sir, to thank you for the good advice you gave me, and to tell you that my wife and I are as happy as when first we were married. I cannot be grateful enough for your good counsel." I am glad to hear it, Mr. W., and hope that you will continue to court your wife as long as you live." The result was that Squire W. and his wife lived happily together to the end of life. Let those who are thinking of separation in these days go and do likewise.

Little acts of kindness,
Little deeds of love,
Make the world an Eden,
Like to that above.

NOTE BY EDITOR OF HERALD OF LIFE.—We commend the foregoing to all married persons; both husbands and wives. It was most excellent advice given by the Governor to the Squire. A Christian man should never think a divorce possible except in the one case named by the Saviour. All other cases of divorce are anti-christian, and not to be tolerated among Christians; and those who seek and obtain one, for any other cause, should not be acknowledged as Christians any more than drunkards or any other class of open sinners. So we believe, and such is our estimate of a divorce unless the crime of adultery is proved against the party put away.

A. A. BABCOCK, Albion, Mich., writes: We have no preaching in this quarter, except the Orthodox sects, which primitive Christians might have thought it a sin to listen to. Let me give you a specimen, as found in "MAN ALL IMMORTAL," a Methodist work by "D. W. CLARK, D. D.:" page 156.

"Death is the crown of life! . . . .
Death wounds to cure;—we fall,—we rise,—we reign!
Spring from our fetters, fasten in the skies,
Where blooming Eden withers in our sight.
Death gives us more than was in Eden lost:
This king of terrors is the Prince of Peace."

If you can find a more God-dishonoring sentiment put in verse, you have a great start of me. Yet this sentiment is the teaching of the day.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Such is the sentiment taught in our public schools. "Saunder's Fifth Reader," contains it, if it has not been expunged since 1854, "Lessonl 14," under the head of "Life and Death Contrasted." We called attention to it in March of that year, in the Bible Examiner. But that sentiment is one of the passports to the office of a "Bishop" in modern churches. D. W. Clark, D. D., has, since his "MAN ALL IMMORTAL" was published, been made one of the Bishops of the Methodist E. Church. If "death is the crown of life," Who puts it on man's head? The answer is, "The devil," for that which had been called the devil "had the power of death:" Heb. ii., 14. As Christ is to "destroy death, and him who had the power of it," it follows Christ is to destroy "the crown of life." But Jesus saith, "I will give thee a crown of life." But the most blasphemous part of this poetic, bishop-made theology, is, it puts death in the place of Christ! Death, the wages of sin, is said to be "the Prince of Peace," a title that belongs exclusively to the Lord Jesus Christ. Christ came to "destroy death"—that is, to destroy the Prince of Peace! The last enemy to be destroyed is death, (1 Cor. xv., 26); but according to the poet's theology, it is the Prince of Peace! Alas, how long shall our children be taught such blasphemies? and how long shall intelligent and Christian men, professed ministers of Jesus Christ, suffer the guilt of such teaching to cleave to their garments? O, that we all loved the praise of men less, and the honor which cometh from God only, much more. But of this there is no hope while we continue to cherish the monstrous deception of inherent immortality.

A CURIOUS CASE OF PRAISE.

A CASE of praise, from man, occurred some years ago in North Carolina. Louis Scarborough, a Methodist preacher, was riding to town one day, after an absence of six years, and found a man in a mud-puddle, drunk; he had fallen from his horse. Scarborough alighted from his horse and helped the poor inebriate up, who recognized the preacher, and delivered himself as follows:

"Is this you, brother Scarborough? God bless you: you are the very man that converted my never-dying immortal soul six years ago: much obliged to you for your help: sorry you find me in such a fix; 'tis the first time. But brother Scarborough, God bless you; if I ever find you in the same fix, I will take much pleasure in helping you."

Says Dr. J. F. Lee, who communicated the above to us, "If you could hear Scarborough relate the circumstance in his inimitable way, you would think you not only saw the man, but heard him speak." Nearly all men are half drunk with something. What then is their praise or blame worth to one who seeks honor from God only?

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE."—The second thousand of this work is printed and ready for delivery.

Letters and Extracts.

SHALL THE HERALD LIVE?

INDUSTRY, ILL., April 30, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: In looking over my old file of newspapers, I found the 44th No. of the 4th vol. of the HERALD OF LIFE; how it got where I found it I know not; but one thing I do know, and that is, that if I knew that you are still publishing the same paper, and what sum of money it would take to pay for it one year, I would surely send it to you. I like the spirit of the thing, and want the paper. Please send me a number containing the subscription price, and I will send the money immediately. I want the paper, it advocates my doctrine.

Respectfully ——.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We have sent the paper, and also some pamphlets. Let the HERALD OF LIFE "live, and die." Shall it live, friends? or will you suffer it to die by dividing our interest on private enterprises?

FROM J. P. CHREST.

SAINT PAUL, MIN., May 2, 1868.

BR. STORRS: The HERALD OF LIFE gives me great joy and pleasure, and is a very great help to me in understanding the Scriptures, and I pray God may spare your life to publish the glorious gospel to dying men and women of our country, and to the world; and I verily believe, if ministers would preach life through Christ only, and death out of Christ to sinners, they would lay hold on him as their only hope of a future life.

I received from J. Blain, some two months ago, your work on the inquiry, Is there immortality in sin and suffering? and other tracts and pamphlets, which I have been giving to members of the church to read, and it has brought out considerable opposition. The pastor called to see me, and requested me to desist from spreading error in the church. I told him I felt it my duty to work in this way for the spread of truth, and if not allowed to do it in the church, or as a member of the Methodist E. Church, I would withdraw my name and be amenable to God alone. The truth lies very near my heart, and I feel that I would sacrifice a greal deal rather than give it up, or not be permitted to defend it, and help combat error.

I hope the day is not far distant when the gospel will be preached in its purity; when laymen will dare exercise the right of private judgment. O, how I wish some good brother would come to Saint Paul and preach these glorious truths; every other sect has its exponents to promulgate its doctrines; but truth, the blessed truth, has none. I have been in Saint Paul twelve years and never heard a sermon preached by any one who taught life through Christ only. Please send me one copy "Bible vs. Tradition;" also, "Defence of the Bible" and twenty "Questions on Immortality;" send me what you can for $1 50 enclosed, and I will distribute them in our young and growing city. Yours, in search of truth.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR:—"Other sects" have their preachers "to promulgate their doctrines." We are not a "sect," as that term is commonly used. Our preachers are all believers of the truth—"A Royal Priesthood." Do not be concerned to get a professional preacher among you. The money spent for that purpose will go much farther in spreading the truth, if laid out in the right sort of tracts and pamphlets and scattered among the people judiciously, than any single preacher; and these go and stay where no common preacher could have access; and such works call attention to the Bible, the only authoritative preacher God has ordained since the Apostles.

FROM ELDER W. S. CAMPBELL.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS., May 7, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I find there is great demand for the tract pamphlet "A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE," as soon as it becomes known. It is hailed as a good thing, and just what is demanded to meet the caviling objections of infidels on certain points. Its direct and plain statement gives us a very ready reply to the skeptic; especially is it good to circulate among those who are tempted to yield to the supposed arguments of Deists. I find many young persons are glad to possess it, that they may meet opposers.

Send me twenty-five or thirty copies, to New Britain, Conn.; also, a dozen LIFE FROM THE DEAD.

DECORAH, IOWA, May 1, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I have removed from Burr Oak to Decorah, Iowa, which latter place is now my post office address. I am trying to do something for the HERALD OF LIFE, and send you herewith one subscriber. There are many here who profess to believe in the Advent views, but say, if there is no resurrection of the wicked dead and no devil they want nothing to do with Adventism. There are others who believe with me that there is one Lord, one faith, and one baptism; and we have the courage to meet our opposers at any and at all times to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. The truth is gaining ground, and, glory to God, will soon be triumphant. I think the best way to do is to find the right way, and then go ahead without asking what will brethren say. What is God's will? ought to be the inquiry.

BR. STORRS: As I have obtained two more subscribers for the HERALD OF LIFE I shall have to write you a few lines. The subject of Life only in Christ is gaining ground in this country; those who would not listen to the eternal death of the wicked, a short time since, are giving it a fair investigation, and I think the truth will cut its way through every obstacle, and the unbiased must admit that the wicked will never see life, and that Christ came to give life only to those that have been begotten by his Spirit, as death, not life, is the wages of sin. There has been a great amount of preaching in this section the past winter, to show that the wicked will be raised to life after the 1,000 years of Revelation xx. are finished, and will compass the camp of the saints, and howl like dogs, and then fire is to come down from heaven upon the new earth and devour them. O what a nice sight that will be to those who have friends that have died out of Christ!

I think it is one of the relics of paganism. I am going through this State this summer, and would call upon any one that loves to hear the truth without compromising with error.

FROM ELDER J. LEWIS.

RICHLAND, ILL., April 22, 1868.

BR. STORRS: We thought perhaps some would be looking over the HERALD to see if they could learn anything from the old one-armed preacher; and if it does any of the little flock as much good as it does us to hear from not only one, but all the Life band, they, like ourself, would report often.

Our time is all filled up in preaching. Our second tour through the country to what is called Dog Prairie, has been most pleasing as well as profitable to the cause of truth. The people have become satisfied that the soul sleeps in death, and that the wicked will "remain in the congregation of the dead," and our Life views, in general, are embraced. The preachers are in a terrible uneasy position. They have all had a hand with the "old soul-sleeper," as they call us; but with no effect; our positions are too strong for them; so they make a great ado; but the people will hardly go to hear them any more. But we want help. Who will come and enlist in the cause? There is much inquiry as to whether Brother Walter is coming here. We have looked for him long, and for Brother Osborn. We hope some of the preaching brethren will come and travel with us the ensuing season. The people all want Brother W. S. Campbell back here. May the Lord direct. Will Brother Campbell write us at Mode, soon; as we want to know what disposition to make of the Tent. We think it should remain here.

We have received the two packages of LIFE FROM THE DEAD, and have sent a quantity of them abroad, hoping to get them all to work soon. We look for the DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE, hoping it will come soon, as we want them as we go to our appointments. We send thirty cents more to help on the good cause. Pray for us.

Under date of May 1st Brother Lewis writes again, at READ SCHOOL HOUSE:

Think not strange of my writing so often for it is like water to a thirsty soul to get good news from a far country, and isolated as we are, most of the time, away from those of like precious faith, without so much as the dear HERALD to cheer our drooping spirits, and where ignorance, bigotry and superstition reign by reason of the blind guides. Last Sunday we walked eleven miles to fill our morning appointment for the day, at the Patton School house, which had been given out two weeks previous, without any other to interfere. But judge of my surprise, when I arrived at the house and found the door locked and no key to be found. We soon found that two of the immortal-soul, hell-fire preachers on hearing that we were coming to preach, came and started a meeting; one of their old tricks. But it is already manifest that good will grew out of it; for it has given us the opportunity of exposing their errors. Poor men! They fired away from Friday till Sunday evening, as we are informed, at the "old soul-sleeper," as they sarcastically call us; but all to no purpose. They exhausted all their ammunition, and finished up by calling us all the reproachful names they could invent, and thanking God that there was a lake of hell-fire, where the sinner would be punished, etc. Well, we have found no better way than to follow them up and expose their errors in the light of truth: so we are preaching in the same place.

FROM E. D. ADAMS.

DEAR EDITOR: The good cause is gaining ground, though rather slowly in this part of the country. Divisions among us hinder the spread of the truth somewhat, no doubt. The world likes even a poor excuse to neglect the study of the Scriptures. Men travel hundreds of miles, if not encompass sea and land, to proselyte to the unscriptural faith of a mortal resurrection of both good and bad, though I am happy to state they had but little success in this part of Iowa. Some of us think the Lord's supper a yearly institution; others weekly; and this is a cause of trouble tending to division among us. Another publishes to the world that he has no fellowship with us sickly brethren, who do not believe in the resurrection of a small class of unjust, alias, apostates, to judgment to be judged. I wonder if these "Hymenius and Alexander the coppersmith," order of teachers realize that they are causing divisions contrary to the apostle's command, and the Saviour's prayer for the unity of the church?

All appear equally sincere. I have no desire to judge any, but rather to scatter the truth that the sheep of the great Shepherd may hear his voice and be led in the straight and sure way to life.

There were eighteen or twenty assembled on Passover eve in this place and partook of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our blessed Lord.

FROM S. S. CALL.

NEWPORT CENTRE, VT., May 3, 1868.

BR. STORRS: A fortnight ago to-day I felt encouraged; there were signs of a growing interest in the doctrine of life in Christ by a resurrection, if dead, or a change, if living, when Christ, who is our life, shall appear. But to-day it is all "Go to heaven at death," and the resurrection not mentioned so much as once in the morning or afternoon discourses. They neglected Paul's injunction to Timothy, "Remember that Jesus Christ was raised from the dead, according to my gospel." How that differs from the teaching in these days. "He went to heaven at death." The preacher's main object was to get the people to heaven in the forenoon; in the afternoon he undertook to prove that there was a personal, spirit devil, and his proof amounted to this: "The Bible says there is a devil; and if you do not believe it, you disbelieve the Bible."

After the services it was remarked, "If I did not believe there was a hell, and that there was a devil, I would not serve God a minute." I answered, Then you admit if he (God) had not got hell for a fence and a devil for a dog, you would run into mischief. God must be pleased with such servants! The love of God, and the gift of his Son, is a better fence, and more effectual.

I received a line a few days since from Br. Daniel Chase, saying the HERALD OF LIFE was a welcome visitor, and he loved the truths it contained. How much more lovely God appeared under its teachings than he did under the torment theory. To give his idea, How can men that believe in the torment of the wicked, believe that such a God is a God of love? Can it be? Is it possible? No, no, it cannot be.

God bless the HERALD and its laborers. I am glad I receive it.

A. LOGAN, Milwaukee, Wis., writes: I like the HERALD very much; it is all the preacher I have. I think it grows more and more interesting. I am fully satisfied that "No life out of Christ" is the true doctrine. I am rejoiced to see the success you are meeting with in printing and circulating "LIFE FROM THE DEAD:" just the thing needed; also, the "DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE." Enclosed find $5: appropriate it as you think for the best interest of the cause. Send me a few copies of the fore-named works; but those who are proclaiming the truth abroad are doing a great work, and must have tracts to distribute; and we who cannot go must furnish ammunition.

H. HARRIS, Mt. Tabor, Wis., writes: In love for you and the cause of God, I write a few lines to let you know that we, in this country, believe in the glorious news of Life only in Christ; that there is no merit in any other. I have believed this doctrine since 1852. I took your SIX SERMONS and have been trying to teach it to others. Our "Tirae" brethren fight it the hardest in this section of country. I am working hard for the cause, and intend to continue. I think to send some new subscribers, and also to send for some tracts, before long. Yours in hope of eternal life through Christ the LIFE-GIVER.

GEO. H. FISHER, New Rutland, Ill., writes: I am highly pleased with the character, appearance, and progress of our paper, and the precious truth it advocates of "No life future, except immortal, and that through Christ."

JANETT A. MAYO, North Amherst, Mass., writes: I send $1 to continue the paper of ——. I sent him the paper last Fall, and he writes me he cannot think of doing without it. He is trying to get others interested in the subject. I send another dollar to have works sent to different persons herein named; also, send me some. I have heard it said, "A lie will travel a mile while truth is putting on his boots:" but I hope when he gets them on he will leave his tracks [Tracts] in the rock, while the lie marks only the sand. I believe with all my heart, "There is no life out of Christ."

MARRIED.

AT Prairie du Chien, April 10th, 1868, by Rev. H. C. Dudley, Mr. Peter B. Eno, of Wagner, Iowa, to Miss Ina B. Harriman, of Warner, N. H. World's Crisis please copy.

OBITUARY.

DIED at Saltersville, N. J., Wednesday, May 6th, JESSIE, daughter of Br. JAMES HOWARD, aged about 8 years. BR. STORRS spoke at the funeral on Friday evening, and the next day she was removed to Armonk, N. Y., the residence of her Grandfather, B. Matthias, for burial. Must our dear friends ever and anon be sacrificed to the insatiate archer, death, that the people may be induced to sit for an hour under the sound of the truth of life only in Christ? Many hear next to nothing of the resurrection at funerals, or on any other occasions unless it be at funerals where our friends have been prostrated in death. "Going to heaven at death" is the teaching which has made void the resurrection and the life from the dead by our Lord Jesus Christ. Some are induced to come and hear at funerals who would not listen on any other occasion; so the death of our loved ones is sometimes made the occasion of life to others. We trust such may be the case by this sad bereavement. O, what a hope does the memory of that dear child awaken! she would speak of the resurrection as confidently as the most mature Christian.

Often during the last season which she spent with her Grandpa, at Armonk, when they were singing at her request, her naturally thoughtful countenance would light up with the joyful expectation of that favorite song that tells of meeting "to part no more." She seemed to be always ready to join in the chorus, "O that will be joyful," etc.

This sad occasion seemed to be especially opportune for our friends at Saltersville, where much opposition has been manifested to our Life views.

BR. W. H. HANFORD will preach at KEYPORT, N. J., on Sunday, the 17th inst. At RAHWAY, Sunday, the 24th inst.

TENT MEETING.—It is in contemplation to hold a meeting in Rahway, N. J., early in June, in the tent belonging to Br. E. WOLCOTT. Due notice will be given of the precise time and location.

MEETINGS IN NEW YORK CITY.—Believers in the Second Coming of Christ at hand, and future Life for the Righteous at his Coming, meet for worship every Sunday, at Botanic Hall, No. 68 East Broadway. Service at 10½ A. M. and 3 P. M. Seats free.

TERRIFIC EARTHQUAKES.

THE bark Comet, from the Sandwich Islands, brings accounts of a terrible volcanic eruption by Mauna Loa, which began its demonstrations on March 27. On the 28th, one hundred earthquake shocks were felt, and during the two weeks following to April 13, two thousand earthquake shocks occurred. At Waischina the earth opened in many places, and a tidal wave sixty feet high rose over the tops of the cocoa trees a quarter of a mile inland, sweeping human beings, houses, and everything movable before it. A terrible shock prostrated churches and houses, and killed many persons. In all, one hundred lives were lost, beside a thousand horses and cattle. The craters vomited fire, rock, and lava, and a river of red-hot lava, five or six miles long, flowed to the sea at the rate of ten miles per hour, destroying everything before it, and forming an island in the sea. A new crater two miles wide opened and threw rocks and streams of fire a thousand feet into the air, and from it streams of lava rolled to the sea. At one time, the illumination was visible at night fifty miles distant. The lava has pushed out from the shore one mile. At Waischina, three miles from the shore a conical island rose suddenly, emitting a column of steam and smoke, while the Kono packet was passing, spattering mud on the vessel. The greatest shock occurred April 2d, a great shower of ashes and pumice. During the great shock the swinging motion of the earth was dreadful, so violent that no person could stand. In the midst of this tremendous shock an eruption of red earth poured down the mountain, rushing across the plain three miles in three minutes, and then ceased. Then came the great tidal wave and, then the streams of lava. The villages on the shore were all destroyed by this wave. The earth opened under the sea, and reddened the water. The earth eruption swallowed thirty persons, and the sea many more. Dreadful suffering and terror prevailed in the district, and the whole region was affected. Bottomless fissures opened in the mountain's side. A lava stream flows under the ground breaking out in four jets, six miles from the sea, and throwing lava and stones 1,000 and 1,500 feet into the air. The new island thrown up is 400 feet high, and is now joined to the main land by a stream of lava a mile wide.

A large stream of water has burst from the mountain where the earth eruption occurred. The base of the volcano is about 30 miles in circumference and is desolated. At least half a million dollars' worth of property is destroyed.

THE PALACE OF HEROD.

THE palace stands on a table of land, on the summit of the hill, overlooking every part of the surrounding country; and such was the exceeding softness and beauty of the scene, even under the wilderness and waste of Arab cultivation, that the city seemed smiling in the midst of her desolation. All around was a beautiful valley, watered by running streams, and covered with a rich carpet of grass sprinkled like an open book before me, a boundary of fruitful mountains, the vine and the olives rising in terraces to their very summits; there, day after day, the haughty Herod had sat in his palace, and looking out upon all these beauties, his heart had become hardened with prosperity; here, among those still towering columns, the proud monarch had made a supper for "his lords and high captains, and chief estates of Galilee;" here the daughter of Herodias, Herod's brother's wife, "danced before him, and the proud King promised with an oath, to give her whatsoever she asked, even to half of his Kingdom." And while the feast and dance went on, the head of John the Baptist was brought in a charger, and given to the damsel." And Herod has gone, and Herodias, Herod's brother's wife, has gone, and the "lords and the high captains, and the chief estates of Galilee," are gone, but the ruins of the palace in which they feasted, are still here; the mountains and the valleys which beheld their revels are here; and, oh! what a comment upon the vanity of worldly greatness—a Fellah was turning his plow around one of the columns! I was sitting on a broken capital, under a fig tree, by its side, and I asked him what were the ruins that we saw? While his oxen were quietly cropping the grass that grew among the fragments of the marble floor, he told me that they were the ruins of the palace of a King, he believed, of the Christians; and while pilgrims from every quarter of the world turn aside from their path to do homage to the prison of his beheaded victim, the Arab who was driving his plow among the columns of his palace, knew not the name of the haughty Herod. Even at this distance of time, I look back with a feeling of uncommon interest, upon my ramble among those ruins, talking with the Arab plowman of the King who built it, leaning against a column which, perhaps, had often supported the haughty Herod, and looking out from this scene of desolation and ruin upon the most beautiful country in the Holy Land.—*Incidents of Travel, by G. Is Death a Friend or an Enemy?

Br. Storrs: Among the many beautiful hymns that Christians delight to cherish, none is more delightful than that one by Rev. Dr. Palmer, commencing

> "My faith looks up to Thee,
> Thou Lamb of Calvary,
> Saviour divine—"

I find, however, in the Independent of the 16th instant, an ode "to Death" by the same warm-hearted Christian, conceived in the best spirit, no doubt, and intended to encourage those faint-hearted ones, who, "through fear of death are all their lifetime in bondage." It is, as a poetical effort, very fine; and the suggesting motive that caused its production is entitled to the highest praise; but does it state the truth? I have endeavored in my unpretentious way to answer it; and have taken care to give in the margin the "thus saith the Lord," for what I have written; and if my mind is in a sound condition, I think it would puzzle Dr. P. to quote the Scripture for some of his assertions.

It is true that when the body is racked with pain and no relief can be had; or when old age has so impaired the faculties that "the grasshopper is a burden and desire has failed;" and also when in exceptional cases, even in health, the charm of life has departed, that the sufferer longs for death and welcomes it, and may even so far confuse matters as to term it "sweet death;" but I apprehend that the most that is written in the lines of the enclosed proceeds from a morbid state of mind, induced by false theology; and death receives as in this case the homage due to him who conquered death and came "to bring life and immortality to light."

I think that faith would have a "keen eye" indeed, that, with God's word to instruct, could metamorphose that which God sent into the world as a punishment, into an angel of light.

If you think what I have written worthy publication you are at liberty to use it, but I prefer that in the same paper both be published in full, and let candor decide which is according to revelation. Very truly yours,

Veritas.

To Death.

By Rev. Ray Palmer, D. D.

Men wrong thee, Death!
They fashion thee a monster grim,
With lifted dart,
Intent to strike thy victim's heart;
The light of day to quench for him,
To wrench him from his joys away,
And doom to moulder in decay,
The turf beneath.

Thou seem'st a foe;
And mortals quail to see thee come
With tread so still,
With sable robe and breath so chill,
And finger beckoning to the tomb,
Thy heralds, hollow groans and sighs,
And breaking hearts and streaming eyes—
All signs of woe.

To shun thy hour
The living deem the chief of cares;
With hurried flight,
As from some horrid spectral sight,
They speed till their hot haste prepares
The worn-out springs of life to break,
And thine an easy triumph make
O'er mortal power.

The few who dare
To seek thee are the rash, the mad,
In phrensy wild,
By some delirious dream beguiled;
The wretch, the hopeless, blindly glad
From present misery's rack to fly,
And reckless, though they see on high
Thy shaft made bare.

What hidden lies
Beyond thy bourn for souls unshriven,
By guilt deep stained,
When at the eternal bar arraigned,
Where just award to each is given,
Thy victims, Death, may well appall
Whom no celestial voice shall call
Heavenward to rise.

To Faith's keen eye
Thou, Death, art Life: 'tis but to sense
That thou art dread;
No cruel shaft by thee is sped;
'Tis not thy will that hurries hence,
Sets life's brief limit and ordains
The gloom, the sorrows, and the pains
That speak thee nigh.

Heaven's high behest
All these hath fixed for wayward man;
Offspring of sin,
The terrors round that gate hath been
Through which, ere since thy reign began,
All mortal steps must tread to see
The dawn of immortality,
Its visions blest.

Kind Death! 'Tis thine
To cool the fever of the brain,
At once to still
Of fretted nerves the torturing thrill,
To end the lingering days of pain,
To dry all tears forevermore,
To lift the veil that hid before
The Home divine.

When lifted high,
The Son of God in anguish hung,
And on his head
The burdens of a world were laid,
Till groans from his parched lips were wrung;
'Twas thine to come with sweet relief,
To end the Sufferer's mighty grief
In one last sigh!

From yon blest shores,
When souls redeemed shall backward turn
To look on Thee,
All beautiful thy form shall be:
Thy ministries once deemed so stern,
Shall seem sweet ministries of grace
Forever to unveil the face
That heaven adores!

Death! Death! The word
No more shall be a name of fear,
My joy to kill,
While years, or days, life's measure fill:
My soul, when she thy voice shall hear,
Aside her mortal robe shall cast,
Stretch her swift wing and mount at last
To meet her Lord!

Answer to the Above.

Oh why should Christians thus pervert
The Word of God, and be alert
To prove that death,
Which is "the King of Terrors" named, (a)
No terror hath, but should be famed
A welcomed guest?

Death is the culminating woe (b)
That God pronounced on man below,
When Adam fell;
That all, who are in Adam found,
Shall soon be mouldering in the ground,
We know full well.

But Christ the Lord, who came to save, (c)
Redeems from out the gloomy grave
His faithful ones.
But not till trumpets' joyful sound (d)
Shall shake the earth and rend the ground,
Deliverance comes.

Where then's thy victory, boasting grave? (e)
When he shall come with power to save,
Where, Death, thy sting?
Thy dread dominion will be o'er,
A terror thou wilt be no more,
No more a king.

We do not sin who dread to die!
This life's a boon, when health runs high,
And friends surround.
If Jesus wept at Lazarus' tomb,
At such a sight of mortal doom,
And grief profound;

And back to life his friend recall,
Commanding death to disenthrall;
(So great his love)
Say, may not we, who fear the Lord,
Like him, a terror death regard,
And God approve?

My heavenly Father, hear my prayer!
Be this my earnest constant care,
To use this life,
So that the promise of thy Word (f)
Secure me, through my risen Lord
Eternal life.

If thou shoulds't choose to send disease,
And torturing pains these limbs should seize,
Oh God Most High!
Suffer no murmuring thought to rise,
May I thy providences prize,
Until I die.

Oh, let me then with faith serene,
Pay the last penalty of sin;
Sure that the grave,
Which could not hold my Saviour dear,
Will yield, when he again appear,
The life he gave.

Then in that resurrection morn (g)
I shall t' immortal life be born:
Oh glorious Word,
Then, with a body like to his, (h)
I'll rise to never-ending bliss,
And meet my Lord.

Children's Department.

What Poverty Means.

A Discovery by J. A. Bellows.

I had read about it often enough in the story books; I was ready to lend a sigh for the "suffering poor;" I had many a choice expression about "the wolf howling at the door" and "poverty peeping in at the window." The other day I found what it meant, this Poverty, with her gaunt, pale face. Shall I tell you of my discovery? I will not draw upon my imagination to make an affecting story, but will write of that which I have seen and heard.

Dear children, you who read this in your comfortable, pleasant homes, do you know how many of your fellow-beings are suffering for the want of the common food and clothing that you accept as your proper right, as a "matter of course." Let me tell you—I will not be long—of a certain visit that I made in the holidays.

One day last December, not long before the Christ-child was to come again to us with the Christmas cheer—Christmas with the holly and the evergreen, the tree, the stockings, and dear knows what all—we learned that a family in our city was suffering extremely from cold and hunger.

Perhaps you have some idea what cold is? You come in with your hands numb, your ears almost frozen, perhaps you are crying. But there is a warm fire to meet you; you are soon laughing again, you rosy-cheeked little children. And then, what care you if the wind does howl without in the branches, and the nails in the roof go snap, snap, 'tis so dreadfully cold, and Jack Frost is dancing about the house ready to nip your nose off, if you do but venture out of doors. But what do you think of no fire around which to cluster? and of going to bed at dusk to keep warm?

Possibly you may know what it is to be hungry? Often enough, I can well believe, it seems an "age" between breakfast and dinner; or you would very much like that Hannah should ring the tea-bell in the middle of the afternoon. What of that? The bell does ring in a few hours at the most, and there is the hot toast and the milk and the spluttering apples—dear me, how good it all is! But what would you think, I wonder, of nothing for breakfast, and nothing for dinner, and nothing for supper? Rather poor fare, that!

Well, such was about what we had heard of this poor family not a mile away from our door; that they had no wood, and that the mother of the two children had found no work during the past week. Good heavens! had they been starving and freezing?

Ere long a basket of clothes and provisions was packed for them, and we started out. A cold day it was too, though less bitter than some which had preceded it—one Sunday. If any would have rebuked us, I know not; but for my part it seemed well that on God's day we should bear a message of cheer to his people.

After inquiry we found it—a miserable, miserable old house. I can fancy how the windows rattle; nay, how the very foundations shake in a high wind. Up one flight of stairs they lived—if you can call it living—in one single room. A pane of glass in the window was broken, and through it some old garment had been stuffed to keep out, as well as it might, the bitter December air.

In this one room they lived, the mother and her two children. My eye took in the furniture of the apartment; a bed, a stove, a chair or two. By the way, little rosy-cheeks, how would you like, year in and year out, to live in one room? Do you think you would sigh for your pleasant home, and wonder how you could ever have found fault with it? If you wish to make the experiment, suppose you live a week without stirring out of the nursery!

Thank Heaven! they had a fire in the stove. I saw that at a glance.

"But," said the woman, "I thought we were going to be dreadfully punished. We have had wood, a little, you know, most of the time. We'd use that carefully, and when it gave out we'd go to bed. But sometimes baby has seemed almost frozen, as if I couldn't get him warm by rubbing. Oh, we've been dreadfully punished."

Did she mean, did she mean that, while we were sitting in our comfortable rooms, lying in our soft, warm beds, that they were freezing?

Were they starving? "Once," she said, "it would have gone hard with the little boy if it had not been for some milk that had been sent him." Think of that! Yet the boy was a little tot, some three or four years old, not larger than your Benny, or Willie, or Charley. and if it had not been for the timely gift—I can't bear to think of it! Ah, they might, indeed, have been "dreadfully punished."

Yet there was nothing of the beggar about her. Indeed, my sister told her that she must not let it happen so again; that she must apply to some one.

Ah, but she didn't like to trouble people about herself! Poor and proud. An old, old story, but somehow I've come to believe in it!

How glad I am that I filled the basket full! I watched her take out the clothing and food, but somehow she had overlooked the pie at the top, for I remember her exclamation when I told her:

"And now baby shall have a piece of it; how he will like it!" as if it had been the greatest treat in the world.

A very little thing, I know, but I can't help thinking of the reception that the pastry and other dainties would meet at our own table: but barely tasted, put by and found fault with:

"'Tis not thick enough, the crust is poor," with the rest of the catalogue. And it had seemed such a treat to them!

Oh, children, it takes a very little to bring sunlight into a home like this! And were we not repaid with interest? Never did I understand half so well the meaning of that good word—"'Tis better to give than to receive." Never did I feel so fully that God's poor live near to his heart, and that it is our duty, aye our privilege to minister to their wants. For what does it say?

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—The Little Pilgrim, Edited by Grace Greenwood, Philadelphia.

The Words of Jesus.

By Mrs. L. Fuller.

"Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." John xiv., 13.

Blessed Jesus! it is thou who hast unlocked to thy people the gates of prayer. Without thee they must have been shut forever. It was thy atoning merit on earth that first opened them; it is thy intercessory work in heaven which keeps them open still.

How unlimited the promise—"Whatsoever ye shall ask!" It is the pledge of all that the needy sinner requires—all that an Omnipotent Saviour can bestow! As the Great Steward of all the mysteries of grace, he seems to say to his faithful servants, "Take thy bill, and under this my superscription write what you please." And then, when the blank is filled up, he further endorses each petition with the words, "I will do it!" He further encourages us to ask "in his name." In the case of an earthly petitioner, there are some pleas more influential in obtaining a boon than others. Jesus speaks of this as forming the key to the heart of God. As David loved the helpless cripple of Saul's house "for Jonathan's sake," so will the Father, by virtue of our covenant relationship to the true Jonathan (lit., "the gift of God") delight in giving us even "exceeding abundantly above all that we can ask or think."

Reader, do you know the blessedness of confiding your every word and every care—your every sorrow and every cross into the ear of the Saviour? He is the "Wonderful Counsellor." With an exquisitely tender sympathy he can enter into the innermost depths of your need. That need may be great, the everlasting arms are underneath it all. Think of him now at this moment—the great angel of the covenant, with the censer full of much incense, in which are placed your feeblest aspirations, your most burdened sighs—the odor-breathing cloud ascending with acceptance before the Father's throne. The answer may tarry—these your supplications may seem to be kept long on the wing, hovering round the mercy seat. A gracious God sometimes sees it meet thus to test the faith and patience of the people. He delights to hear the music of their importunate pleadings—to see them undeterred by difficulties, unrepelled by apparent forgetfulness and neglect. But he will come at last—the pent-up fountain of love and mercy will at length burst out—the soothing accents will, in his own good time be heard: "Be it unto thee according to thy word." Soldier of Christ! with all thine other panoply, forget not thy prayers. It is that which keeps bright and shining "the whole armor of God." While yet out in the night of a dark world—while still bivouacking in an enemy's country—kindle thy watch-fires at the altar of incense. Thou must be Moses pleading on the Mount, if thou wouldst be Joshua victorious in the world's daily battle. Confide thy cause to this waiting Redeemer. Thou canst not weary him with thine importunity. He delights in hearing. His Father is glorified in giving. The memorable Bethany utterance remains unaltered and unrepealed—"I knew that thou hearest me always." He is still the "Prince that has power with God, and prevails" still. He promises and pleads—still he lives and loves!

"I wait for the Lord, my soul doth wait, and in his work do I hope." Psalm cxxx., 5.
—Selected.

The Veil and its Removal.

"The face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations." Isa. xxv., 6–8.

This most sublime figure is veiled by most writers, whereby its forcible and interesting meaning is lost. It is supposed to represent the common ignorance or blindness of our race, or something of that kind; but the Spirit, as if jealous of the meaning of this precious Scripture, would not trust it with us without the explanation. Here it is, verse 8, "He will swallow up death in victory."

Then this covering of the face of all people is their condemnation to death, which condemnation shall be revoked, and the victims unveiled in that "mountain." Verse 6.

This figure of speech is taken from the decent custom of covering the faces of criminals about to suffer the extreme penalty of the law. The victim himself (if not deprived of a common and commendable instinct), wishes to hide his face in such a case. Officers of judgment and the people wish to have it so. Mourners, and persons in agony, cover their faces with whatever is convenient, hands, handkerchief, apron, etc. When the servants of Ahasuerus anticipated the result of his wrath, they "covered Haman's face." When Cæsar fell dead at the foot of Pompey's statue, "He muffled up his face with his own robe."

It will be observed that the removal of this "veil and covering" is on the occasion of a great feast for the purpose of celebrating the advent of the glorious kingdom. Here is where the apostle locates the event. "Then shall be brought to pass the saying written, "Death shall be swallowed up in victory." "In this mountain." The "stone kingdom has become a mountain." It will be well to remember, also, that our Lord encouraged the hope of this very feast when he instituted his supper: "I will not any more eat of this bread, and drink of this cup until it is fulfilled in the kingdom of God."

There was another thing entered into these occasions; that of signalizing them, by some great act of generosity, or a gift to a favorite. The king said to Esther, "What wilt thou, Queen Esther? and what is thy request? it shall be even given thee, to the half of the kingdom." Pilate said to the clamorous, wicked rulers, "It is your wont to release a prisoner on this (passover) feast," and proposed to gratify their magnanimity by releasing Jesus. You know their election on that occasion. Herod distinguished himself, and signalized a birthday feast by a bloody present to a vain girl, even the head of the greatest prophet ever born of woman. The occasions referred to had their victims and their releases, as well.

A kingdom is coming when the king shall make a feast to all people, a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees well refined. . . . And he will destroy in this mountain (kingdom) the face of the covering (the covering of the face), cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God shall wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it." Isa. xxv., 8.

There will be a release and a victim then, as at the crucifixion, when Jesus was the victim, but Barabbas the lion. But now at the coming feast, Jesus will be the Lion, the Hero, the "Prince of the kings of the earth," the everything, the admired, the adored of all. To him all knees shall bow, and all tongues confess. Death will be the victim, and all saints released!

One other thought. This figure represents a marvellous condition in our race, viz., perfect indifference to the fact that they are under the sentence of death. Their condition is in mercy hid from themselves. While they admit, in words, death is sure to them, they do not lay it to heart. They are, for the most part, happy, merry, full of frolic and fun. For all the world they live as if death was to them an impossibility. We are physically formed for more pleasure than pain. Valentine, the famous humorist, used to say in his advertisements that we had two muscles for laughing and one for crying. The more serious among us (in the rule) are educated to die. Ministers are educated at great pains and expense, and in a series of schools, for this work. As a result, the educated, up to a given point, will defy death. Such are the saints, doubtless; notwithstanding, our Lord feared death with all the susceptibilities of his being. They sing, "Welcome, death." Jesus prayed to his Father, "with strong cries and tears," saying, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me," etc.

One other custom was in use in those times. That of giving the victims opiates, or whatever would make them insensible to their condition. "Give strong drink to them that are ready to perish . . . . let him drink and forget," etc. Prov. xxxi., 6. This humane custom has been crowded out of use by the barbarism of the dark ages, and kept out of use by the superstition of Christendom.

But God accepts of the resort—the alternative. When men choose their ways, he chooses their delusions. "God will send them strong delusions, that they should believe a lie, that they may all be condemned who believe not the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness. 1 Thess. ii., 11. This happens to them because they "receive not the love of the truth." Delusion is a sort of mental or moral stupefaction—a judicial disqualification for the exercise of their reason. We have, to-day, perhaps, millions of these infatuated mortals, who have no doubt of their acceptance with their God, who accept of not one word of the gospel, and who will die in their intoxication, vaguely dreaming of heaven, Paradise, Elysian field, and will never know that they go anywhere. Alas, for the people!

B. Matthias.

Usually, when they visit any region, it is in swarms and clouds which darken the whole atmosphere for miles; and when they reach a green place, they descend upon it with a noise like that of a high wind, or the beating of innumerable drums in the distance. They conduct themselves, however, not like a disorderly rabble, but like a well ordered army, with Napoleon at its head, marching forward in squadrons and columns, without turning to the right hand or to the left; facing everything, overcoming everything, gnawing everything to pieces with their saw-like teeth. They eat up everything green—the grass from the meadows, the leaves and bark from the trees, the blossoms and fruit from gardens, the thatch from houses. Sometimes a few light skirmishers preceding the main host, cause the hearts of the inhabitants to thrill with terror, for they know what they have to expect. At first a gentle murmur is heard high in the air; then a loud buzzing; then a low continuous roar, like that of distant thunder; then, as the wind sweeps them forward, the black battalions show their fronts in the sky, alighting in countless millions as they advance. The terror of the population then makes itself evident; they climb trees, and hoot and shout, to scare away the heedless and invincible intruders; they kindle enormous fires on the mountain-tops, which diffuse their smoke in dark volumes; they cut broad trenches across the plains, and flood them with water—all in vain: the locusts by the multitude extinguish the fires; fill up the trenches with their bodies; and march over them; climb up the trees after the natives whom they speedily bring to the ground—pour into the towns and villages, invade the houses through doors and windows, crawl into the beds, cover the walls like tapestry, eating everything they can find, tumbling into the sugar basins, plunging into the milk-jugs and tea-cups, making free with the skirts of gentlemen's coats, filling their pockets, creeping up their sleeves and down their necks, covering the skirts of ladies' dresses inside and out, spreading themselves over cradles, and what is worse, gnawing the flesh off the cheeks of sleeping infants.
—Chambers' Journal.

Spiritualism.—Horace Greeley sums up as the result of a number of years' investigation and observation of spiritualism, that the thing is inexplicable; that men and women have not been made better by it, on the contrary, have grown lax in their notions of marriage, divorce and moral purity; and that the aggregate of insanity and suicide has been increased by spiritualism. A good many others will agree with him.

THE OFFICIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR,

Its Causes, Character, Conduct and Results.

By Hon. Alexander H. Stephens.

A Book for all Sections and all Parties.

This great work presents the only complete and impartial analysis of the Causes of the War yet published, and gives those interior lights and shadows of the great conflict only known to those high officers who watched the flood-tide of revolution from its fountain springs, and which were so accessible to Mr. Stephens from his position as second officer of the Confederacy.

To a public that has been surfeited with APPARENTLY SIMILAR PRODUCTIONS, we promise a change of fare, both agreeable and salutary, and an intellectual treat of the highest order. The Great American War has AT LAST found a historian worthy of its importance, and at whose hands it will receive that moderate, candid and impartial treatment which truth and justice so urgently demand.

The intense desire everywhere manifested to obtain this work, its Official character and ready sale, combined with an increased commission, make it the best subscription book ever published.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY:

OR, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION.

A SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

[Concluded from last week.]

WE will now refer to several texts which have been urged against our view of the subject: The one which is most generally used to demolish us, is to be found in 1 Cor. xv., 22. We will introduce it by a few brief remarks on the context. The apostle says: "And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

There are two ways in which this form of expression may be understood. The word also may refer to the supposition that Christ must have perished if he had not been raised from the dead; or it may refer to the wicked, who, not being "in Christ," had died and perished. But to whichever case it may apply, it is evident that unless a man be raised from the dead he has perished.

The text relied on by some of our opponents reads thus: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

Among the Corinthians who had professed faith in Christ, some might ask, "If we are to have a future life—if we are to live beyond the grave, why do we saints die? Why are we buried in the grave?" They said, probably, "Well, if that be true that we must go down to the grave, there cannot be life hereafter; if there is to be such life, why are we not translated?" But what said the apostle? "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable; but now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept."

What is the "first fruits?" It consists of the first gathering of the crop, as a sample of it; and such was Christ. He was the "first fruits" of the dead—not of the wicked dead—he was no sample of such a harvest—but he was a pledge of the quality of the harvest that was to come. The apostle continues: "For since by man" (that is, Adam), "came death, by man" (Jesus), "also, came the resurrection of the dead." Again: "For as in Adam all die"—all who? You may say, "all mankind," but the apostle is evidently speaking of those, and those only, who agreed with, or are like the sample or "first fruits," viz., the believers in him, or those who were like him. But why do they die? Because of their connection with Adam; but "in Christ shall all be made alive." The wicked are not in Christ nor like the "first fruits" and so are not embraced in the all to be made alive; for "if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature;" but we have all a connection with the first Adam—a relationship of the flesh; therefore we are all subject to mortality, corruption and death, in which terminates the life received from our earthly progenitor. But God has provided a second Adam, with a life that shall never end; and in order that we may obtain that life we must be united to him—must have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. This life the apostle designates in Rom. viii. as "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," and saith, it "hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Now, if that "law of the Spirit of life" is not in us, what is to make us free from "the law of sin and death?" how are we to be emancipated? Hence, it is evident the apostle is speaking only of the righteous. He does not affirm corruptibility of one class, and incorruptibility of another, but states broadly that "we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." If the resurrection embraces the wicked, they must be raised to incorruptibility; and it follows that they will either be eternally miserable, or else they will be saved, inasmuch as they cannot "die any more." There is no escape from these conclusions by those who maintain that the "all made alive," verse 22, includes all men, irrespective of moral state; for the apostle makes no distinction between the "all" in that verse, and the "all" in verses 51 and 52; so that if "in Christ shall all be made alive" is of universal application, so also is the expression, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."

Thus our opponents are compelled, by their theory, to take eternal misery in their course, or universal salvation; one or the other is inevitable. They may sneer at us for saying so, but that does not alter the truth. The testimony of the apostle is so clear and distinct that no unbiased mind can avoid the conclusion. Look at verses 42–44: "They are [We insert "They are," instead of "It is," on the authority of Wakefield and Professsor Murdock's translation of the Syriac,] sown in corruption; they are raised in incorruption: they are sown in dishonor; they are raised in glory; they are sown in weakness; they are raised in power: it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." Thus the state and condition of those raised from the dead is settled beyond all reasonable controversy; and, fortunately for the race, the apostle has settled the question that "the dead" who are raised, are "raised in incorruption—in glory," and "spiritual." Thus universalism is the result to which the apostle drives the advocates of a universal re-living of the dead. They may say, boasting, "I would not deny the first part" [of the chapter, viz., v. 22.] "for fear of believing the rest, nor pervert half because I did not understand the whole." If the boaster does "not understand the whole," how does he know he understands verse 22? May he not be mistaken or ignorant in that matter as well as the other? Surely, a little modesty would be serviceable to such teachers. But "pride goeth before destruction and a haughty look before a fall." Inspiration has settled the fact, in unequivocal language, that "the man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead"—he "shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." Shall any man be allowed to disannul such testimony by a criticism on 1 Cor. xv., 22, which is not only worthless, but contradicts the whole scope of the apostle's reasoning in that chapter? Even if it were admitted that text might be read by Christ, instead of in Christ, it would not help the advocate of a universal reliving of the dead; for as "all die" by having a union with Adam, "even so" those who are "made alive" must be made so by having a union with Christ. It is the union with these two heads that affects the condition of men for death or life. Adam did not by an act of mere power put all his posterity under death; the union of nature with him is what brings death to the race; "even so" Christ, the second Adam, does not by a mere act of power give life to any one, but a union of nature with him brings them into life again. "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." "As we have borne the image of the earthy" (Adam), "we shall also bear the image of the heavenly" (Adam). The first brings death to all connected with him: the second brings life to all connected with him. All others "utterly perish in their own corruption," and do "not see life," because they rejected or neglected the LIFE-GIVER.

To escape the inevitable conclusion from the apostle's reasoning in this chapter, some of the advocates of a universal resurrection have assumed the unwarrantable and unscriptural position that both the righteous and wicked are raised mortal, hence corruptible. Such an assumption shows to what straits they are driven to maintain their theory. There is not one text in the Bible that saith any dead man will be raised mortal at the last day; but the reverse is affirmed by the apostle in this chapter, so expressly, and in so many forms of expression, that one is amazed that persons can be found bold enough to contradict it. Yet so it is; but we trust God will overrule this folly to the furtherance of the grand truth, "the dead shall be raised incorruptible—in honor—in glory"—"neither can they die any more"—but "are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

The next attempt of the advocates of the reliving of the wicked dead to force Paul to their side, is a resort to Acts xxiv., 15; and like most others who have a desperate case to make out, they disregard the apostle's premises and make him contradict his entire teaching elsewhere.

Paul opens this discourse, "I confess unto thee" [Felix, the governor] "that after the way which they" [the Jews, his accusers] "call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things written in the law and in the prophets." Where is it written in the law or the prophets that the wicked or unjust shall live, or have a resurrection from the dead? Ans.—Nowhere. But it is written of some of them, "They are dead; they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise"—"they are like the beasts that perish," etc. And this testimony Paul believed; for he testified he believed "all things written in the law and in the prophets." Is he in the next breath giving the lie to this utterance? He did not deal in "yea and nay," for he declares to the Corinthians, his preaching was not "yea and nay," but that it "was yea." 2 Cor. i., 19. "Believing all things written," etc., "and have hope toward God, which"—"which" what? To what does which refer? Not to something to be said, but to something already spoken. What then is the antecedent of which? Clearly it is "hope;" "which [hope] they themselves also allow" [by maintaining] "that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both" [or, not only] "of the just and" [or, but also of the] "unjust."

The argument is clearly this: The complaint of the Jews against me is groundless; for, while I preach the resurrection of the just, or those in Christ, and they persecute me for doing so, they, in in fact, allow by their doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust, all that my "hope" embraces, inasmuch as the whole embraces the part which is the subject of my hope. "I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers" . . . . "why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" said Paul before Agrippa. His hope was based on the promise of God to the fathers: that promise did not embrace the unjust, and no threat of a resurrection is found "written in the law or the prophets." Thus Paul's language, Acts xxiv., 15, gives no countenance to the idea that his faith embraced the resurrection of the wicked dead; besides he clearly recognizes the fact that at the time of the resurrection some would "remain in the congregation of the dead;" for he says, I labor and suffer, "if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Phil. iii., 11. Thus he distinctly states the fact that a revival from the dead is conditional, and not the lot of all men.

We regard this point as settled beyond all reasonable doubt, that Paul had no resurrection, in his gospel, for the unjust or wicked dead: and as he did "not shun to declare unto" men "all the counsel of God," and never declared the living again of those who die in their sins, we may be sure he did not hold any such theory.

Some brief remarks on John v., 28, 29, are all we have time for now. This text has its difficulties, we admit, but what view of Scripture doctrine finds no texts of difficulty? It were easy to show how true it is that all theories have difficulties, else there would be no adverse sects in Christendom.

Our Lord and his apostles made all their appeals to the law and the prophets; this we have abundantly shown. Whatever, then, be the import of John v., 28, 29, it cannot contradict the Old Testament teaching, and does not, therefore, teach that those who have "done evil" come into "life," whatever else it teaches. "They that have done good unto the resurrection of life;" they live. "They that have done evil unto the resurrection of condemnation:"—condemned to what? "He that believeth not shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him"—such are condemned to "remain in the congregation of the dead." John iii., 36; Prov. xxi., 16. In this view the antithesis is perfect. God hath given his Son "authority to execute judgment:" he does it, "at the last day," by his power over all the living and dead—good and bad: to the good he gives life; the bad he condemns to "remain in the congregation of the dead"—leaves the "wrath of God" abiding "on them." Thus he judgeth "the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." 2 Tim. iv., 1.

If any still insist the doers of evil must be made alive because it is said they "shall hear his voice and come forth," and ask, how could this be if they were not made alive? We reply by asking them a like question on Ezek. xxxvii. How could the "dry bones hear the word of the Lord" unless made alive? But they did hear; and as the prophet "prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone. And the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above; but there was no breath in them." They were not alive, yet they heard the voice of the prophet and obeyed. Thus we have inspired testimony that the dead, without life, are said to hear and obey; and until it can be proved the wicked dead will have life at the resurrection, "at the last day," we may rest assured they "shall not see life"—they have "no life in" them, because they did not "eat my flesh," nor "drink my blood," as saith Jesus, John vi., 53; they have no connection with the life-giving power, and perish forever in their own corruptible nature.

We might go a step further on the subject as illustrated by Ezekiel's vision of the dry bones; we might admit all the dead wicked would come as near to life as the dry bones did, while there was "no breath in them." What then? Were they alive? No. What is lacking? The vitalizing element. What is that? We have no account of any other for dead men, at the last day, but the Spirit of God. But the wicked never had that dwelling in them; and though God should cause them to come out of their graves, and clothe them with flesh anew, what is to give them life? The Spirit of life enters only into God's people—"I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and . . . . . put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live." Ezek. xxxvii., 13, 14. "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii., 11.

But "I don't believe the wicked dead will come out of their graves and not be made alive," says an objector. Well, we do not ask you to believe it; we only say it is far more scriptural and reasonable to suppose such to be the fact than to believe they will be made alive to be tormented and killed again: and moreover the Scriptures, speaking of the people of God, say, "they shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring to all flesh." Isa. xlvi., 24.

If the advocates of the resurrection of wicked men will have it so, why, so be it; but their resurrection will give nothing but carcasses to these dead; carcasses which will be an abhorrence to all living men. These "carcasses" "shall remain in the congregation of the dead," and "not see life."

But some persons sneer at the idea that carcasses shall be brought from the graves to be treated thus. They say, "That is a horrible idea"—they "have heard of savages that thus treated the dead bodies of their enemies, but it is shocking to attribute such a thing to God!" Happy that their sensibilities can be shocked by something; but to them there is nothing to disturb their "pure minds" in the idea that God should make those carcasses alive and then torture that life out of them again! That is all right in their estimation! They can "strain at a gnat, but swallow a camel" as calmly as if taking a sweet morsel!

We give these objectors to raising lifeless carcasses to shame and dishonor, and to show it is a punishment in God's estimation, Jer. vii., 1, 2. The contents of the chapter commences—"The calamities to the Jews both dead and alive." What are those calamities to the dead? "At that time, saith the Lord, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah and the bones of the princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves: and they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the hosts of heaven, whom they have loved and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped; they shall not be gathered nor buried; they shall be dung upon the face of the earth."

If the Son of man shall thus cause all the doers of evil to "come forth" from "the graves" to "condemnation," not to see life, but to be "dung upon the face of the earth"—whose "carcasses shall be an abhorring to all flesh," who shall say John v., 28, 29 is not fulfilled to the very letter?

And now, O, sinner, a word to you, and we have done. If you remain impenitent, still rejecting or neglecting God's mercy in Christ, and grieving the Holy Spirit of God, by which alone you can ever be prepared for life, or revived from the dead, your eternal doom will soon overtake you—the night of death will set in upon you—a night from which you will never awake—a night of eternal gloom: no redemption will ever come to you. Will you still persist in a course of sin, with your eyes open to such an awful doom? Will you still listen to the serpent's song—"Ye shall not surely die?" O, beware of that father of lies! "The wages of sin is death," but God, in his infinite mercy, offers you life—in and through Jesus Christ our Redeemer—that shall never end; a life, the joys of which shall never be interrupted and never cease: a life, increasing in new glories, in the midst of unbounded means for new delights, with holy and glorious society, amid seas of shoreless love, ever fresh and refreshing. O, what a state! what a life! what rapturous scenes! and no alloy! Say, sinner, will you have it? Do not say No! Make haste to Christ the LIFE-GIVER! Make no delay! Time is hastening on, and soon the last sand of thy present life will fall; and then! O then, have you this eternal life made sure to you? Arouse thyself this moment! Another, it may be too late, and all is lost, eternally lost! O, "why will you die!" Come to Jesus, perishing sinner. He will receive you—take away your sins, and enroll your name in his "BOOK OF LIFE."

THE ADAMIC PENALTY.

BY S. COOPER.

BR. STORRS: Perhaps there has been enough said upon the Adamic penalty, but there was an article in the Crisis, some time since, touching that point, and saying, "It is a question yet to be settled . . . . and if any can give more light upon it, it would be gladly received," etc. Accordingly I wrote an article and sent it to the Crisis, which has not, and probably will not appear in its columns. I now write for the HERALD OF LIFE. The writer in the Crisis says:

There is one question yet to be settled, i. e., the "nature of the Adamic penalty, about which so many differ:" and says, "I will ask and answer a few questions as they present themselves to me. If any can give more light on them it will be gladly received."

1. "If man died a temporal death for his own sins, why do children and Christians die?

2. "What did the broken law claim of Christ to satisfy the demand against Adam?" He says, "It does not claim eternal torment; if so, Christ is suffering it now, and is not at the right hand of God. It does not claim a spiritual or moral death. If so, Christ could not pay the debt.

3. "What law did Adam break? It was not the law of ten commandments which Adam violated, and whose claims Christ paid, but the one God gave Adam in the garden; hence a right to bring to life all the human family from the devil or grave, and become the Saviour of all men from the penalty of the Adamic death or sleep."

In considering his position and inquiries, there are several questions pertinent and necessary to be answered to set the matter in a clear light.

1. What is a penalty?
2. What is the nature of penalty?
3. On whom is penalty inflicted?

I answer, 1. Penalty is the inflicting or suffering the infliction of that which is written or threatened against an offender or violater of law, command or authority. Now mark, whatever overreaches or goes beyond that, is not penalty, but vindictive revenge, and unjust.

2. What is the nature of penalty?

Answer. The nature of anything is only known by its result, or the effect it produces. For instance: our law says, the murderer shall hang by the neck until he is dead. The hanging by the neck is not the penalty, but simply the mode to produce that dead and unconscious state which is the threatening written, and when fully executed, produces, and forever ends the penalty, which in its nature holds the criminal forever in the death state: for it has no other "nature," no restoring quality, but is the ultimatum of the demand of the law.

3. On whom is penalty inflicted? I answer: When justice is done, and the law has its demand, the transgressor only can suffer the penalty, whatever others may suffer as a consequence, it is not the penalty; for against such as have not violated law, there is no law or penalty.

Now to "the Adamic penalty." What was it? "Dying thou shalt die." How was it inflicted? God cut Adam off from the tree of life; the only element to which he had access which could perpetuate his living existence. Consequently after 930 years of sweat, wasting, and dying, it reaches its climax, and Adam is dead.

Is such the Adamic penalty? Most certainly. What is the nature of that penalty? has it any restoring qualities? It has not. But if it has a nature it is to hold forever its death grasp upon its victim, and upon no other; for none but Adam and Eve have violated that law to which the Adamic penalty was annexed, and which the Crisis writer has cited to us, as given in the garden. As the law and the threatening were given to and violated by Adam and Eve only, God can never inflict the penalty upon another.

But, asks this writer, "Why do children and Christians die?" Permit me to ask you, Why did Adam die after being cut off from the tree of life? Simply because he did not possess an undying nature. Now, why do his posterity—children and Christians—die?

I answer: It is not for Adam's sin as a penalty. "The soul that sinneth it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father." But why die? Because, Adam not possessing, could not transmit to his posterity an undying nature; therefore through corruption and physical imperfection they must die. Is not this correct and easy to be understood, so that this question can be settled? It appears to me so, and that these reasons are true and God-honoring. The Crisis asks,

"2. What did the broken law claim of Christ to satisfy the demand against Adam?"

I unhesitatingly answer, NOT ANYTHING: for, while God requires obedience, there is no law that has a claim or demand against any until they have violated law, or become sinners; and we are taught that Jesus knew no sin; was without sin, etc.

I would ask, Where in the word are we taught that Christ came to pay an old debt which Adam had contracted, and which was obligatory on Christ? and by the satisfying of which demand Christ now has "a right to bring to life all the human family from the dominion of the devil or the grave, and become the Saviour of all men from the penalty of the Adamic death, or sleep?" as the Crisis writer says; and "hence has a right to bring to life all from the grave." I would ask, has he not a "right" to leave them all in the grave? Most certainly he has, except he has made them promises, conditional or unconditional. If the promise of a resurrection is conditional, then none but those who comply with the conditions will be raised to life again; else there is no condition, and Jesus must save all men, if a Saviour of any. Now if Christ is under obligation to raise to life all men, it is his imperative duty to do it, as a matter of debt which justice demands; and hence it is not of grace, and no thanks to him for doing that which if he failed to do would make him a sinner.

But, says this writer, "Hence a right to become the Saviour of all men from the penalty of the Adamic death, or sleep." How, I ask, can Jesus save men from what they have already experienced to its utmost, as all who have died have experienced the Adamic penalty, if this death, which men have died, is that penalty, as the Crisis writer teaches? To me, such an idea is a gross absurdity; and contrary to the sense and use of language.

Again, where there is a saving of men, there is salvation; and there is no salvation that is not of grace or favor.

But suppose that all the wicked who have died, and are as though they had not been," should be formed and reanimated, only to experience awful forebodings and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversary; could such be of use to them? Could it be of use to the redeemed? Is it desirable? Could it be a salvation of grace and God-honoring? I tell you, nay. An act of such a character would be only revengeful and devilish. But if God has unconditionally promised to raise to life all men by Jesus Christ, he is under the most solemn obligations, as a truth-keeping God, to do it.

But I have not yet learned that salvation, or that God's promises or threatenings are unconditional; neither do I understand that Christ's mission was to pay an old debt of 4,000 years standing; but that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." What says Jesus? Hear him. "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me; and this is the Father's will, which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day. And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day."

Such is the general tenor of the gospel of salvation, which offers a resurrection and life conditionally, and I know of no promise of life and blessing that is unconditional.

One more thought. This Crisis writer and others appear to present the idea that because men have once lived and died, God, by some means, is laid under obligation to raise them to life again. It is true that life generally is admitted to be a blessing; and God in wisdom and goodness formed man (Adam) and gave him life and intelligence for enjoyment, and this blessing and goodness was wholly a gratuity. God had a perfect right to require obedience of man, and make disobedience the ground of forfeiture or suspension of that life and being, which he has done. Again, he has promised a restoration of being and life on conditions, we know; but of an unconditional future life, I know of no promises. If the Crisis writer does, will he please show them how such a life as he presents as the future of the wicked can be a blessing or of use to any.

But, it is contended that justice demands the restoration to life of all who have died not directly in consequence of their own sins. If justice demands it, it is that good may follow as a consequence. Can any one tell us what that good will be?

Again, If that argument is good for anything, it will extend to the animals or brutes which have been created with a degree of intelligence, and capable of enjoyment; but which have died, not for their sins.

WINDSOR, CONN.

THE DOWN GRADE.

THE down grade is pleasant, if it be not too steep, and do not lead in the wrong direction.

If it be steep, even though it lead whither we would go, it involves the danger of an increasing speed that soon is past control, and ends in violence and death. Much more do we dread the fatal facility of descent when the incline is away from our goal, and conducts to a fatal precipice. Two years since three young Englishmen, brothers, climbed Mont Blanc to its summit without a guide.

On their return over the frozen snow, tied to each other, that if one slipped, the others might hold him, the foremost fell, at the top of a long slope, and dragged the others down with him. They slid gently and scarcely unpleasantly, at first, but with an ever increasing speed, till suddenly they went over a precipice of twenty or thirty feet, at the foot of which one lay dead and the other two insensible.

If a locomotive be climbing the steep up grade of the Pennsylvania road over the Alleghanies, and lose steam, or have insufficient power for the long train behind, so that just before reaching the summit, it first comes to a stand, and then begins slowly to recede, it needs no prophet to foretell the result. The passengers who would not be dashed to atoms with the train, must leap from it, as soon as it takes the down grade. A moment's delay and it is death, whether one leaps or remains.

There is a down grade in life and wretched is the fate of those who have descended.

The men on the gallows, the crowds in the state-prisons, the painted, diseased hags on the street, the victims of strong drink with bloated features and a delirium-tremens-experience, are the wrecks at the bottom. Young men and young women coming to the city, if incautious and unwarned, soon begin the descent. Gay society, late hours, increasing expenses, distaste for all that is serious, growing fondness for excitement, the fashionable wine cup, the opera, the theatre, the ball room, illicit and unmentionable pleasures, crime, disgrace, open shame, ruin—such is the grade.

Warnings are met with derision. They know what they are about. The grade is a little down, that is true, just enough to make motion easy and pleasant. When the speed increases they will jump off upon the grass.

Soon the speed shows imminent danger, and friends cry out in alarm. But they smile back. It is not yet perilous, only exciting, and there is a charm in excitement. So they act the madmen, until the rush of the devil's train is terrific, and the bottomless pit directly ahead, when they look on both sides for the soft grass upon which to spring, but there is only a wall of rock, and in a moment the crash comes!

There is a sense in which we are all on the track that is a down grade if we head toward the bottom. Life does not run over a level plain but up a mountain, on which the grades are often steep, and woe to him who looses motive power in the ascent! The law of gravity, ever present, draws steadily downward. The problem of life is, Is there counteracting power to draw us to the top, where lies the city of our destination, the New Jerusalem? Alas! if we are out of fuel or water, or fail to feed the fires or the boiler. Native depravity, evil example, perpetual temptation, these are the steady pull downward. Bible truth, a divine Saviour, an indwelling Spirit, constant watchfulness, unceasing prayer, firm faith, the use of private and public means of grace, these are the sources of overcoming power.

Professing Christian, are you on the up or down grade? On one or the other certainly; for there is no stand-still on an incline. It is not difficult to know. Notice the order of the objects as you pass. Is this it? Irregularity and neglect of secret prayer; a Bible unopened in private; a broken down family altar; no words spoken for Jesus; a violated covenant; associates chiefly or wholly worldly; pleasures gay, and along or over the border line between Christians and worldlings; absence from church meeting during the week; regular engagements made for business or for pleasure on the evening of the church meeting; mind all absorbed in making money, or in earthly gaiety. Have you passed these things in succession? Then jump from the train instantly! You are on the down grade! You are leaving the church, holiness, Christ, heaven, far behind. Jump while you can, and whether others do or not. Don't stand upon ceremony, or ask what men will think or say. Every moment's delay makes it more difficult to escape, and it is well, if you are not leading others to ruin, also, and the more surely because they know you to be a church member. God help you to do the wise, right, safe, necessary thing Now!—The Advance.

Benjamin Mellor, Rockdale Mills, Pa., writes: You will not wonder when I tell you how much I was interested in what was stated in the late papers under the head "A Defence of the Bible," if you call to mind that I was the one who loaned you those books of Joseph Barker's, published some twenty-two or twenty-three years ago; and I may also state that my father and sister were members of Barker's class at the time he was expelled from the "New Connexion Methodists." Of course I am glad to hear of his return to Christ. But how shall such a man give proof that his repentance is genuine? How much need have we all to heed the apostle's admonition, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." With much love, and continued prayers for you and all our dear brethren and sisters who are laboring for the spread of truth, I remain yours, in hope of eternal life at the appearing of our Lord.

Note by the Editor.—We think the only way to prove a man's repentance is genuine, is for him to take as much pains to undo the evil he has done, as he did to inflict that evil. Mr. Barker states that he has purposed to visit America on such a mission, but has been hindered by sickness in his family. Nothing but unavoidable hindrance should prevent him, for a day, from visiting this country and striving to counteract the evil he was instrumental in doing while a deist and an atheist. We trust he may feel the importance of such a work at the earliest possible period. It may cost him some sacrifice, but he should remember that thousands here have been ruined by his efforts to overthrow Christianity, while he was travelling and laboring in the United States, so many years. Thousands under that evil influence are to this day ignorant that Mr. Barker has renounced those pernicious principles which are now working their ruin. We shall do all we can to make them know his present position; but his presence among them is imperatively called for. That only can convince many whom he led astray while here. Let him return, then, and show all such, who are still alive, that he is "doing works meet for repentance;" so shall his garments be clear of their blood.

H. O. Billings, Decorah, Iowa, writes: I send you another subscriber for the Herald of Life. The friends all seem afraid of the glorious theme of Life only in Christ. How hard it is to see that "God is love." I came to the conclusion that the wicked would never be raised from the dead before I read any reasoning, from any of the brethren. It was, to me, in harmony with a good and just God to give life to those that belong to him, through Jesus Christ our Lord, and to them only.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MAY 20, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. The Judgment: When is it, and What is it?

The tract called for on this subject in our last issue, by Br. Cadwell, will go to press in a few days. It will make about 24 pages same size as the pages of Life from the Dead. The exact cost we are not able yet to state. The first 1,000 will not vary much from $40: the second 1,000 about half that. We shall venture to begin the sale at three cents per copy, or $2.50 per 100, trusting to meet the first cost soon, by donations or otherwise, so as to be able to reduce the price. Let it be scattered everywhere.

Shall see him: Shall not see Him.

Br. Storrs: May I ask you a few questions? They relate to seeing and not seeing Jesus.

John xiv., "I shall come to you in a little while: and the world will not see me." Verses 18, 19.—Syriac. Is this before or after Jesus comes?

"Because I live, ye will live also, in that day."—Syriac, vs. 19, 20. What day? this age or the future?

Rev., i., 7, "Behold he cometh with clouds and all eyes shall see him; and also they who speared him; and all the tribes of the earth shall mourn on account of him."—Syriac.

Response.

It is sometimes difficult to determine the exact meaning intended to be conveyed by the words employed. They may also have a two-fold application. We are disposed to think such is the case with the first of the foregoing texts. After it was spoken, Jesus was put to death. He knew that event would be a sore trial to his followers. He therefore prepared their minds by various words in this and the two following chapters, for that sad event, and spoke words of comfort and encouragement to them. He tells them not to let their hearts be troubled; and in chap. xvi., he says, "Do ye inquire among yourselves of that I said, 'A little while and ye shall not see me, and again a little while and ye shall see me?' Verily I say unto you, that ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice; and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy . . . Ye now have sorrow; but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you."

It seems clear this refers to the same matter as the text John xiv., "I shall come to you in a little while," etc. In both, our Lord, it appears to us, refers to two events; the first relating to his revival from the dead and reappearance among his immediate and sorrowful followers, by which their hearts would be mightily comforted. In that manifestation, the world did not see him, but his friends only. This promised immediate manifestation was for his friends in those days of trial; but it was the pledge of a fuller and more perfect manifestation, at another and later period, to all his followers who had passed through trials and tribulations, and gone down into their graves, whose cases might seem to be hopeless. To encourage all such, in all time till the last day, Jesus said, "Because I live, ye shall live also." That is, As I will live again from the dead, to die no more, so shall all my friends, who have died, or shall die, live from the dead in like manner, and die no more; death shall have no more dominion over them.

These remarks embrace the first texts in the inquiries of our friend; but he adds that in Rev. i., 7, probably because it seems to conflict with the first text quoted, viz., "the world will not see me." We think, however, "all eyes shall see him" does not relate to "the world," but only to "all eyes" of those just previously named. John had just said, "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen." He then adds, "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him." Instead of only a few of his followers seeing him, as at his manifestation after his resurrection, when at most only about "five hundred saw him at once," every one of his friends—"every eye" of them "shall see him;" many of whom, though they "having not seen" Jesus had nevertheless loved him, and had been washed from their sins in his blood: all, all of these shall see him now, when "he cometh with clouds;" for the first time will they all see him—the living saints being changed and the dead ones being raised to life, and all together caught up to meet their returning Lord, "and so shall be forever with" their Lord and Life-giver.

This event, so glorious to the "kings and priests"—all the redeemed saints—will not be seen by the world; it will still be a truth, "the world seeth me no more," (John xiv., 19) but "every eye" of his saints, from Abel to the last on earth prior to that event, "shall see him;" one universal company—one universal gathering of all whose sins have been washed away by his blood; they "shall see him as he is, and be like him." 1 John iii., 2.

In this sight "the world"—the incorrigibly wicked—will have no part, but they "shall wail because of him." It will be a day which winds up the dominion and triumph of sin and sinners; whether civil or ecclesiastical despots. Then will the prophecy of Jeremiah xxv., 15, 16, 26, to the end have its full accomplishment. It reads thus:

"Thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me: Take the wine cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations, to whom I send thee to drink it: and they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad because of the sword that I will send among them . . . And it shall be, if they refuse to take the cup, ... Thus saith the Lord of hosts; ye shall surely drink . . . . Ye shall not be unpunished; for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth . . . . a noise shall come even to the ends of the earth for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations, he will plead with all flesh; and he will give them that are wicked to the sword . . . . evil shall go forth from nation to nation . . . . the slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other . . . . Howl, ye shepherds, and cry; and wallow . . . . ye principal of the flock . . . . ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel . . . . A voice of the cry of the shepherds, and a howling of the principal of the flock shall be heard; for the Lord hath spoiled their pasture . . . their land is desolate because of the fierceness of the oppressor," etc.

Here is a fearful description of the coming judgments on the living wicked, in church and State, who have been oppressors of the people, and who have aggrandized themselves at the expense of those over whom they have tyrannized. Their days of glory are ended, and such horrors will attend their downfall and overthrow as shall fulfil the Revelator's statement, "all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him;" not because they "see him," but because of the judgments he will visit on these oppressors of their fellow-men; for, "he shall destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. xi., 18.

That our view of Rev. i., 7 is likely to be the true one, we regard as further evident from the fact that three classes seem to be spoken of in the text, viz., 1. The "kings and priests:" 2. "And they also which pierced him:" 3. "And all kindreds of the earth;" which latter class "shall wail because of him." If the phrase, "every eye shall see him," embraced all men, it would seem superfluous to add, "and they also," etc., as every eye, if it meant all men, would embrace the second class, of necessity; but they are spoken of as a distinct class from the first.

Our view is, that the advent is one thing, and the manifestations under it are another and a different matter. That the first manifestation will be to the saints, and to them only; that they will first be gathered to meet their Lord and Life-giver; at which time they, and only they, will see him.

At a subsequent period a manifestation will be made to a people indicated as they who "pierced him." But this language cannot be taken of a literal act, as the act of piercing Christ was the individual act of a Roman soldier. It must therefore refer to some act of a people who were the cause of the death of Christ. There is no dispute as to what people did this; and the prophecy of Zechariah, chap. xii., is clear as to that matter; it was "Judah;" and the time will come when the representatives of that people—a "remnant" of them—"shall see him" "and shall look on me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn:" verse 10. But this appears to be a subsequent event to the manifestation to the "kings and priests" and their glorification. How long subsequent we have no means of determining. During this interval, however, is, probably, the time in which "all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him."

From that period of awful judgment on the kindreds of the earth, the saints are saved, by having been translated or raised to life eternal before those events occur. And here we may see the importance of the caution of Jesus, where he says, "watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and stand before the Son of man." Luke xxi., 36.

This will be their place of safety, indicated by the prophetic call, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment until the indignation be overpast; for behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: the earth also shall disclose her blood and no more cover her slain." Isa. xxvi., 20, 21.

The last generation of men, in this age or dispensation, will be those most wicked and abandoned of any previous generation since the overthrow of Jerusalem. And as that generation was visited with the sins of the previous ones, because they made them all their own by sinning against greater light and knowledge; so this last generation are accumulating all the sins of the last eighteen hundred years on their heads from the abuse of the greater privileges and knowledge now enjoyed. In view of the coming judgments at the end of this age, it may well be said, "All kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him," for, "He cometh to execute justice and judgment in the earth," and shall destroy the corrupters of the earth.

A Question.

"Is not the Adamic penalty all there is out against us?"

This question is asked us because of our remarks on Heb. x., 29, a few weeks since; and the brother who asks it, says,

"In my opinion, no man ever has, or ever will, suffer more than the Adamic penalty. 'Ye shall surely die,' is the sum of all evils in the world. No personal sins of our own bring the Adamic penalty, they only hasten it."

The Adamic penalty is not "all there" was "out against" the people of Israel, as any one can see who will read Lev. xxvi., and Deut. xxviii. Surely those chapters express some other penalties besides the Adamic one. "If ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do my commandments, and if ye despise my statutes," etc. "I will do this unto you," etc., "I will make your cities waste . . . . and I will bring the land into desolation . . . . and I will scatter you among the heathen." "The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from afar . . . . a nation of fierce countenance . . . . and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down . . . . and thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and of thy daughters . . . . in the straightness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee. . . . Then the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful," etc., "because thou wouldst not obey the voice of the Lord thy God."

Please read the whole of those two chapters and see if there was not something "out against" Israel besides the Adamic penalty. It was not the penalty of the gospel, for that has no penalty, but it was the penalty of the law against Israel for disobedience to God's commands, and one of those commands was that Israel should hear all the words of that prophet that God would raise up unto them; for, saith the Lord, "He shall speak unto them all that I command him . . . . whosoever will not hearken unto my words, which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him." Deut. xviii., 15–19.

It was the law given to Israel that fixed the penalty of disobedience upon them; and that penalty, as inflicted on Israel, or that part of them called Jews, at the overthrow of the nation, was a "sorer punishment" than merely "dying without mercy:" it was death, or being led away captive into all nations, preceded by calamities fitly denominated by Paul as "indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish."

The ultimate, or final penalty of all sin, is death; not dying, but to be holden in the death state—to have no deliverance from it. If sin is not taken away, the law holds the transgressor in death. Not because of the Adamic penalty; that penalty, as such, holds none of Adam's seed: it is their own sins that makes death perpetual to them: it is thus they receive the wages of their personal sins. Death to such as have not sinned is not a penalty, in any sense, because where there is no law, or where there is no capacity to understand law, there is no sin or transgression, consequently, no penalty. In their case, death is the result of a mortal nature. Such go out of life, not as the penalty of anybody's sins, but because it pleased God to give them only the present life. All future life, or life after death, is a "gift of God, through Jesus Christ." Withholding it from any creature is no wrong done them, unless God has promised such life to them. He may revive from the dead such as have never sinned; there is no penalty to hold them in death; but if he does revive them, it is an act of grace, or favor, freely bestowed, without any claim for such revival on their part; for, if such claim exists, their revival would be an act of justice, and not grace. But no creatures can claim a future life because they have not sinned in this, unless God has promised such life to them, based on that fact. Without such promise no injustice is done to any creature, however sinless, by letting them remain under death; it is not depriving them of anything upon which they have a claim. Any other position would make God under obligation to give a future life to all animals and insects. Sinless creatures do not remain under death as a punishment; but because their nature was a corruptible one, and God does not see fit to give them an incorruptible one. Who shall question his wisdom or right thus to act?

Dishonoring God.—No. 3.

BY ELDER S. W. BISHOP.

Any theology that exalts human wisdom over the Scriptures of truth, dishonors God. Man, always proud in his assumptions of superior wisdom, is ever seeking to devise some scheme of salvation that shall flatter his vanity, or cater to his self-sufficiency. It is too humiliating to human nature, pompous in its own supposed importance, to bow reverently to God's plan of grace; so human invention sets itself about the work of improving a divinely arranged system. It matters not how the arrangement is changed only that something of merit may be ours. Never, for long centuries, had such a fearful blow fell upon the head of ecclesiastical arrogance, as when the gigantic intellect of a Luther thundered through the dismal vaults of that sacerdotal charnel house—"the man of sin," the great Bible truth, salvation by faith, and not of works. The hoary-headed usurpers of the prerogatives of God, who had been deluding themselves with nightmare dreams of unending universal power, for more than a thousand years, were aroused from their bigoted stupefaction, to tremble both in fear and anger. But their insane ravings only made the light to shine more brightly still. And when that great principle of truth was sealed on the zealous heart of a living church, the blasphemous assumptions of "the Mother of harlots," had lost its potency to awe into silence those who dared to differ from her appointments and decrees. When Rome lost this, it was killing the fowl that layed the golden egg. If men are saved through faith in Christ, all of her priestly, jesuitical jugglery is at an end. No more money comes into her coffers as the price paid by religious dupes for the privilege of expiating their sins by a painful system of penance-doing. The jingle of the gold in the sacred receptacle, the pocket of the priest, will no longer, in the estimation of men, once befooled by priestly demagogues, expedite departed souls in their exit from the dreary abodes of purgatory. No wonder that in the vast struggles of the minions of the Pope, put forth to save this pet child of pharisaical arrogance, that "hold of every foul spirit," should vomit forth its most hateful anathemas against the mighty reasonings of the man of God. But O, how futile every effort. As well might they attempt to frustrate the decrees of omnipotence. The finger of God had delineated, in characters of living light, the certain destiny of that "cage of every unclean and hateful bird," and the time had come when her power must wane. Infinite wisdom knew well where to direct the most deadly blow. The sword of God was put into the hand of that mighty man of valor, the monk of Erfurt, and notwithstanding the bulls of Leo X. thundered from the Vatican around his ears to such an extent as to frighten some of his less fearless compeers; yet armed from heaven's arsenal he laid his heavy blows upon the very root of this moral upas tree, legal righteousness; and if he did not hew it down, he so damaged its life that it has from that hour onward been falling into death. Yet notwithstanding the history of the past is before us, still, quite often, even now, little out-shoots from this poisonous tree are seen to thrust themselves above the religious surface. Its peculiar phases are different. Some suppose they will be saved at last by virtue of performing strictly the requirements of the liturgy of "our church." Others suppose that they will be more sure of the kingdom of heaven if they become religious recluses, and although they are strong in their condemnation of the more appalling features of papal superstitions in this direction, still, their hope of salvation is absolutely made to depend, in part, at least, on the length of their face, and the extent to which they exclude themselves from the society of all men. Others still, suppose that purity of heart, which alone can ensure salvation, depends in no small degree, on what they eat. But every system of this character, be it simple or complicated, is an off-shoot of papacy, deeply tainted with modern pharisaism, denies Christ, does despite unto the spirit of grace, and will land its votaries in endless death. God save us from legal righteousness.

Death Without a Resurrection:

THE PUNISHMENT FOR SIN CAN BE THE DOOM OF NONE BUT SINNERS.

"There is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." 1 Tim. ii., 5, 6.

How many does this text say that this Mediator gave himself for? "For all." This means every individual of the race, does it not? When shall this fact be revealed, when shall it be "testified" (or, it is "a testimony," see margin), when? Ans., "In due time." And to how many shall this be "testified in due time?" We answer, To just as many as this Mediator "gave himself a ransom for;" for, if there was one that this testimony should fail to reach, and fail to reach "in due time," too, that one must be lost, just as surely as though no Mediator or ransom had been given for him; for, if this fact must be testified to any, in order to their salvation, then, surely, any one to whom it was not "testified," must be lost. Yet, who will dispute that millions of our race have lived and died, to whom this testimony has never yet been given? And has no Mediator been given as a "ransom" for these? We have decided above, agreeably to our text, that he has been given for "all." But it can be of no possible service to them, unless the fact shall be "testified" to them. Now we are ready for the question, When, and where, in the future, shall this due time come, in which such shall have this joyful fact testified to them, and so they be saved, if they will believe and accept it? Men may gravely tell us that "death to all such is no punishment;" that "it is only a natural result of a mortal state." But if such shall not live again, then their death is eternal; and then, we ask, If eternal "death is only a natural result of a mortal state," in the case of such as die without a knowledge of God's law or will concerning them, then, we ask, What is the same thing, i. e., eternal death, to all such as have known his will and refused to obey it? have received God's law, as revealed in his word, and have not kept it? such as have received this testimony named in the text and have not profited by it?

Is eternal death the revealed penalty for transgression, "the wages of sin," and yet, shall those who have not transgressed law, because they have not known law; have not gone contrary to God's will, because no will had been revealed to them; have not refused salvation through a "Mediator," because the fact of such mediation and salvation had never been "testified" to them; nevertheless suffer the same doom as those who transgressed law, and refused salvation? The final condition, we see, of these two classes is the same; both are eternally dead; and all the difference we can see is, that in the case of the guilty, we call their death, from which they shall never awaken, a punishment inflicted on them for their sins; while, in the case of the innocent, we say, their death from which they shall not awake, is "no infliction," "no punishment," but only "the natural result of a mortal state." But do not the guilty fare just as well as the innocent by this argument? We can see no difference, only in the name given to this state of death, into which both classes have fallen; and this, to us, is no difference at all. But does not justice demand that there be a difference? Can the awards of justice be the same here? Believing as we most fully do—that the wages of sin is death eternal, what can we say but this—the death which all but the guilty die, can be only temporary death. It must not, it cannot be eternal and justice be vindicated.

If to be eternally dead is an awful punishment inflicted on the wicked; then, is it less awful to be eternally dead, though it be said, that condition is no punishment? And if to be eternally dead is a less punishment than to suffer eternal torments, yet if this lesser punishment be the doom of both innocent and guilty, is not the same injustice seen in this, as would be seen if eternal torments were the doom of both the innocent and guilty?

Pittsfield, N. H., April 21, 1868.

Note by the Editor.—If innocent beings, or those who have not personally sinned, are to have a revival into life, it will not be because justice demands it; or that "injustice" would be done them by leaving them without revival; but, because God has freely promised such revival, to give such a trial for life, which they never had here. If the text Br. Young uses, 1 Tim. ii., 5. 6, means what he contends it does, then it may be regarded as proof of the resurrection—at some future time—of all our race who have not sinned—or all such as die without personally having transgressed any law: but such revival would be an act of grace or favor. If it is God's pleasure to bestow such grace, we shall rejoice in it; but we do not see sufficient proof, in that one text, to warrant faith in such an event. See our remarks on "A Question," in another column.

What Are We Coming to?

It would almost appear to the careful observer, as he sends his thought abroad over our own country, and the nations of Europe and the world, that the times of tribulation spoken of in Scripture as annunciatory of the latter days, had already come. The foundations of industry, order, prosperity seem to be tottering. Governments are corrupted, people rebellious, enterprise paralyzed, trade and commerce languishing, and individuals bankrupt. Suffering and distress prevail everywhere to a most unusual degree. Wars and rumors of wars, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places, increasing wickedness, and heart-sickening casualties and crimes startle the community, and lead multitudes to exclaim, What are we coming to? The answer seems plain. The world is hastening to its destiny. Prophecy is fulfilling, history completing. The kingdoms of this world are being disorganized that they may become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ.

The nations are filling up the cup of their iniquities, which shall turn in their hands into the cup of the Lords fury. Leaders of false religions are binding upon their followers heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, which are designed to be thrown back with crushing weight upon their own heads. Communities are laying up for themselves "wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God," and individuals, sinning with a high hand against knowledge and love, are provoking the Almighty to a just retribution. Let the Lord's people be awake, zealous, and active for the Master, vigilant and uncompromising against evil, waiting for his appearing, by the brightness of whose coming the man of sin is to be finally destroyed.—Advocate and Guardian.

The Elements in Commotion.

We learn by the Chicago dailies that the new Advent meeting-house at Ionia, Ill., was destroyed by a tornado the evening of Sunday the 3d instant. We had hoped to receive particulars from some of our correspondents there; but have not as yet. The telegraphic report says that services commenced at 4 o'clock p. m. As the people were wending their way from their farms and cottages to church, the sun was brightly shining although clouds were seen in the heavens. Eld. G. W. Hurd's discourse was not interrupted until it was nearly through, when the evidence of the coming disaster began to be apparent. First it was perfectly still, and then a noise was heard in the distance as of the roaring of a mighty cataract. The windows began to shake, and some one called out from his seat —"Mr. Hurd, a bad storm is coming up." The minister answered, "Never mind the storm: there is a day coming when there will be a storm compared with which this will be nothing. I will be through soon." Just then the hail and wind commenced breaking in the window lights, and in almost an instant the windows of the church, sash and all, were torn out.

The only two persons who succeeded in getting out were George Vern and Harrison Wixer, who were instantly killed. The building reeled like a drunken man, but none could get out. Wives clung to their husbands, children to their parents, brothers and sisters to each other, and despair was depicted on every countenance. Suddenly the crash came, and with a deafening sound, mingled with the shrieks of the pent up people, timbers, scantling, and all came down with a sudden crash upon the devoted heads of the congregation, men, women, and children. Some had skulls broken, others arms, others received internal injuries from which they can never recover. There are several who did not receive a scratch, but nearly all were more or less injured. Four persons were killed.

The Methodist house was also utterly demolished, but was unoccupied at the time.

The school-house, a building 24x36 feet, was lifted from its foundation, and dashed to pieces. Fifteen dwellings were destroyed, and seven others blown from their foundations.—Voice of the West.

Selections for a Newspaper.

Most people think the selecting of suitable matter for a newspaper the easiest part of the business. How great an error. To look over and over fifty exchange papers daily, from which to select enough for one, especially when the question is not what shall, but what shall not be selected, is no very easy task. If every person who reads a newspaper could have edited it, we should have less complaints. Not unfrequently it is the case that an editor looks over all his exchange papers for something interesting and can find absolutely nothing.

Every paper is dryer than a contribution box, and yet something must be had—his paper must be out with something in it, and he does the best he can. To an editor who has the least care in what he selects, the writing he has to do is the easiest part of his labor. Every subscriber thinks the paper is printed for his own benefit, and if there is nothing that suits him, it must be stopped—it is good for nothing. As many subscribers as an editor has, so many tastes he has to consult.

One wants something very smart and something sound. One likes anecdotes, fun and frolic, and the next door neighbor wonders that a man of sense will put such stuff in his paper. Something spicy comes out and the editor is a blackguard. Next comes something argumentative, and the editor is a dull fool. They do not reflect that what does not please them will please the next man; but they insist that if the paper does not suit them it is good for nothing, and will stop it right off.—Exchange.

To the foregoing oth er items may be added. Many manuscripts come so badly written, or so crowded together that, after a long and perplexing examination, they have to be given up in despair. The matter may have good points in it, but to decipher it and prepare it for the compositor takes a stronger head and nerves than the editor dare hope for; and yet the writer, doubtless, feels aggrieved that his article or letter does not appear in the paper. Others who write plain, sometimes use so many words, or descend into such particulars, that the editor feels obliged to abridge, or suppress it altogether. This is another cause of offence.

Others are so anxious to be editors themselves, that hardly anything can please them but a paper of their own. Such, perhaps, seldom write for a paper unless they can have unlimited license to write as they please and what they please, without allowing the editor any judgment in the matter.

How like the "comforters" Job was blessed with. Yet he must get used to it.

"Life from the Dead."
AND
"A Defence of the Bible."

We are now prepared at short notice, to supply any number of these works from one copy each to 1,000. We suggest to our friends everywhere to take hold of the circulation of these works systematically.

We propose the following method, where persons live at a distance from you, and you wish the work sent by mail. Write the person's name and P. O. address plain: send us 12 cents, and we will forward the above two works, and the two tracts "Can you Believe?" and "Twenty Questions on Immortality," all in one envelope, postage paid. How can you do more to spread the truth with twelve cents? Now is the time to work; and the poorest can do something.

Never, probably, has there been a time when we could accomplish more with small means than now. Many minds are hungering for the bread of life. They have been fed with "stones" till they are well nigh dead, or just ready to give up in hopeless despair of ever seeing a theology that harmonizes with the truth, "God is love."

Massawippi, P. Q. April 19, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I am still laboring "night and day," that, if possible, I may "not be chargeable" to any man, while I am also earnestly preaching the glorious gospel of the Son of God; and though despised and rejected of the church, I enjoy the love and confidence of those who love and obey the truth, and God blesses me in my work.

I am glad to hear once more, after so long a time, from Br. Weaver, my "father in" the glorious truth of life only in Christ.

Testimonies of the Past.

It is interesting to see the incidental "cropping out" of the truth, here and there, in past times above the sterile surface of popular orthodoxy.

I have before me an old book, written by John, Lord Bishop of Chester, fifth edition, published in 1683,—entitled "An Exposition of the Creed." On page 384 he says: "Having hitherto proved the certainty of this article, that there shall be a resurrection, and declared the verity and propriety of it, that it shall be the resurrection of the same body that was dead, we may now . . . . inquire . . . . to whom the resurrection doth belong? And here we find a great difference between the revelation of this truth under the law, and under the gospel; Christ proved out of the law that there should be a resurrection; but by such an argument as reacheth no farther than unto the people of God, because it is grounded upon those words, "I am the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob.' Job speaketh most expressly of the resurrection; but mentioneth no other than his Redeemer and himself. The plan of Daniel, which was always accounted the most evident and uncontradictory testimony, though it deliver two sorts of persons, yet it seems to be with some limitation. "Many of them that sleep," etc. From whence the Jews most generally have believed that some men should live again, and some should not; because it is written, many shall awake; not all shall awake. Nay, some of them have gone so far by way of restriction that they have maintained a resurrection of the just alone, according to that ancient saying among them, "that the sending of the rain is of the just and unjust; but the resurrection of the dead is of the just alone." Pity this Lord Bishop could not have seen that this was the truth, and that the testimony of all the prophets is to the same effect; but "great men make great mistakes."

Again, on page 390, he says: "Our first assertion (!) is, that the wicked, after the day of judgment, shall not be consumed, or annihilated, but shall remain alive, in soul and body to endure the torments to be inflicted upon them by the justice (!) of God, for all the sins committed by them while in the body. They who of late oppose the eternal subsistence and misery of the wicked, strangely maintain their opinion, not as a position to be proved by reason, as some of the heathens did, but as a truth delivered in the Scriptures!! as if the word itself taught nothing but an annihilation of the enemies of God, and no lasting torments."

It is curious and instructive to see the efforts by which the Bishop struggles to maintain his "assertion," but it is quite too lengthy to quote. The arguments on both sides were just the same then as now, only we live, thank God, to see the whole truth on this great question fairly laid before the people, and vast numbers of the honest and able men and women of the day, walking and rejoicing in its light, and no fear of the light growing dim again; but growing brighter and brighter until the now rapidly approaching, "perfect day." Truly yours in the truth.

Philadelphia, Pa. May 14, 1868.

Br. Storrs: Without the passport of a formal introduction, I feel persuaded to write you a letter, thanking you, and those who hold similar views with yourself, for standing up for the truth as you find it; and although I cannot trace back to any direct source or individual, whom I can thank for the doctrines I support, yet I gather here a little, there a little, "line upon line, line upon line."

I was born and bred a Moravian in the well known town of Bethlehem, (founded by one of the early missionaries of the church, David Nitschmann.) It was there that I received the first teachings in Adventism from Ambrose Rondthaler, principal of the Moravian Day School. A select few of the school preferring to learn the mysteries connected with the second coming of the crucified, dead, and risen Saviour, frequently met him at his house where he expounded to us the word of God.

It is now nine years since I became an Adventist; and until two or three years ago, I endeavored to force myself to believe that I was a complex being, composed of mortality and immortality naturally interwoven; but, thank the Lord, he has opened mine eyes; for my prayer has been, "Lord, open mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things in thy book." He has led me in a way that I knew not, blindly, but the scales are beginning to fall off; and with Goethe, I feel like saying "Licht! mehr Licht"—Light! more Light. Such were his dying words.

I must say that it is sufficient to cause the loss of earthly friends, church-members, who consider me a heretic, and whose church fellowship I left in a time of considerable excitement; but now I feel free to act, think, and believe as I see proper, the word of inspiration, and not ask, Does the minister think as I do?

As regards the non-resurrection of the wicked, I confess I feel compelled to almost admit that, I think them dead forever.

Since all "who are accounted worthy to obtain that resurrection, viz., made alive in Christ and live forevermore." The resurrection of the dead being on this wise—"Sown in corruption, raised in incorruption;" and if wicked men are raised, it must be in incorruption, which would represent an incorruptible sinner, if such were true.

Lord preserve us from error, and sanctify us by thy truth; thy word is truth. Let such be the words of our mouths and hearts.

Personal Identity.

BY ELDER J. S. WHITE.

"It is I myself."—Luke xxiv., 39.

Our Saviour, after his resurrection, gave abundant proof of his identity and personality. "He showed himself alive by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." Acts i., 1–6. He was not only seen of the apostles, at different times, but he was seen at one time of "above five hundred brethren." See 1 Cor. xv., 1–8. On the day of his resurrection he appeared to two of his disciples on the way to Emmaus, and after a long conversation he made himself known to them in breaking of bread. They immediately repaired to Jerusalem, and finding the eleven gathered together with others, related what they had seen. "And as they thus spake Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you. But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. They did not suppose that they saw a man, but a spirit, or something that looked like a man, an apparition or ghost. The Saviour, to convince them of their mistake, showed them the difference between a man and a spectre. In doing this he proved to them that it was he himself. What did he say to convince them of his personality and identity? He said, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself, handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." In this he referred to their knowledge of him before his crucifixion. Christ was now immortal, for death was to have no more dominion over him. He gave them the same evidence of his identity in the one state as in the other, namely, that he had flesh and bones. He appealed to their senses, sight and touch. They could see his hands and feet, and they could handle them and ascertain that it was he himself.

Why should not this be the evidence of his personality? That it was, from the cradle to the cross, is admitted by all. He was taken from the cross and laid in the sepulchre, hands and feet, flesh and bones. On the third day he arose, left the tomb, and appeared to the disciples; was with them at different times for forty days. He was received up into heaven, the declaration following.—"This same Jesus shall so come, in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." When he returns then, he will have flesh and bones, else it will not be that same Jesus—the I myself. If our Saviour does not possess these marks of personality, we have no evidence of his existence. To believe in a Saviour who has no hands and feet composed of flesh and bones, is to believe in no Saviour. For such a Saviour would not be the one who said, "It is I myself."

The evidence Christ gave of his own being, is true in its application to man. Man without a body does not exist. The Bible everywhere speaks of him as existing in this form, whether dead or alive. When God made the body he made the man. The body was the man. God breathed into the man the breath of life. The breath was not the man, but that which made the man live. Man sinned and died, and went to dust. The compact form which God made, has been distributed into dust, not annihilated. The body is there in the form of dust. And there is man, else he is nowhere, and the word of the Lord has failed; for the Lord said to the man, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." "Man lieth down and riseth not till the heavens be no more."

Said Jacob to Joseph—"Bury me with my fathers in the cave, that is in the field of Ephron the Hittite. There they buried Abraham and Sarah his wife; and there they buried Isaac and Rebekah his wife; and there they buried Leah." They did not bury their remains, and let their persons escape to go somewhere else. If what was buried in that field had gone to nothing, then has Abraham gone to nothing, for he was buried there. Their persons went down to the grave with flesh and bones, and they will come up with flesh and bones, else they will not be the ones who died. "Thy dead men shall live. Awake and sing; ye that dwell in the dust. Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake. I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness. I will raise him up at the last day. The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and come forth. Stephen fell on sleep. They that sleep in Jesus shall rise first.

In these passages, and others of the same import, it is the man that sleeps, dies, is dead, in the grave, in dust. And it is the same man that is to be raised from the dead. As man, this side of death, does not exist without bodily organs, so neither does he exist the other side of death without these organs. Or if he does we have no evidence that he is the man who lived here. Man without substance—flesh and bones, that can be seen and handled, we know nothing about. If there are such men, they are outside of the Bible. The Bible contemplates man as a literal, material being. As such he was made; as such he lives and dies; and as such he will live in the future state or not live at all.

The Bible alone Sufficient.

There is a balmy freshness, a lively glow, as well as absence of constraint about those authors who have bowed to be taught by no authority besides the divine word. Too many are immersed in the study rather of what is human about theology, than what is divine, taking but the survey of other men's opinions, and not acquainting themselves with its substance; and were all removed which is of man, what would they have left behind? As many, however, think it very much the same whether they imbibe their views of truth from the word, or from a gifted spiritual author, we would sound our earnest warning against so dire a sin and error. Having to do with the direct authority of God, his express word, his presence reigning in Scripture, we may not, without sin, enthrone another Lord upon the conscience; and to take the truth from man's lips, at the expense of the wisdom from above, and with the necessity of foregoing spiritual communion with the word, is an error leading only to increase of ignorance. The mind takes in divine truth, but cannot fully contain or hold it; and a human author, therefore, reproduces it, not in its untainted purity and manifold adaptations, but with such a lack of its original taste and power, so much impregnated and mixed, that it is given forth, in a few transmissions, little better than undiluted poison. For this reason, and from the fact that there is a stronger affinity in fallen nature for any impurity than for the truth itself, we should only, it is clear, lose life and impoverish the soul, were we to sift out from human treatises the truths of religion. The testimony of Bunyan to this effect is very striking; and the more so, as he is perhaps the most remarkable instance the world ever saw of the discipline we recommend.

"Neither trouble your heads," says he, "that you have not commentators and expositions; pray and read, and read and pray; for a little from God is better than a great deal from man. Also, what is from man is uncertain, and is often lost, and tumbled over and over by men—but what is from God is fixed as a nail in a sure place. There is nothing that so abides with us as what we receive from God; and the reason why Christians at this day are at such a loss for some things is, because they are content with what comes from men's mouths, without searching and and kneeling before God to know the truth of things. Things that we receive at God's hand, are as things from the minting-house—though old in themselves, yet new to us. Old truths are always new to us, if they come to us with the smell of heaven upon them. There belongs to every true notion of truth a power: the notion is the shell, the power, the kernel and life. Without this last, truth doth me no good, nor those to whom I communicate it. Hence Paul said to the Corinthians, 'When I come to you again, I will know not the speech of them that are puffed up, but the power.' 1 Cor. iv., 9. Search, then, after the power of what thou knowest, for it is the power that will do thee good. Now, this will not be got but by earnest prayer, and much attending upon God; also, there must not be admitted by thee that thy heart be stuffed with cumbering cares of this world, for they are of a shocking nature."—Edinburgh Presbyterian Review.

Living to the Glory of God.

"Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." 1 Cor. x., 31.

It is important to know what is the glory of God. God has many attributes, such as holiness, justice, truthfulness, omnipotence, etc, all of which are confessedly glorious. But why are they all of this character? Have we not seen and heard of men to whose hands great power had been entrusted, employ that might in such a way that it seemd anything but worthy of admiration? Because of the exercise of such might, the earth groans over all her bounds; tyrants tread down thousands upon thousands, and hold captives in hopeless chains. If God had been omnipotent, but with no equal attending goodness, he would assuredly have been destitute of true glory. But one attribute in particular makes the whole circle shine in a blaze of splendor: that one is love; it is the mainspring of his actions throughout time and the universe. Does he exercise his power? it is because he loves. It is his love, then, that is pre-eminently his glory.

When God created man, the perfection of his wisdom and power was displayed. We cannot look on our own form without being struck with wonder and admiration; we are led at once to the conclusion that the unseen Maker of such a noble piece of workmanship is possessed of matchless wisdom, energy and skill. These attributes are also brought into play in the giving of life, and its mysterious preservation. It is a matter of astonishment to us that beings made of dust should live by breathing; but mysterious, inexplicable as it is, by breathing we do exist, for stop the process of respiration, and life expires. We are, therefore, shut up to consider the whole organic machinery, as being presided over and worked by the great Eternal.

But think of the end God had in view in raising up such a beautiful fabric—in forming us so finely, and with such elevated capacities—and we shall get a clearer glimpse of his excellence. He made man to be sensible of his goodness, and to be grateful for it. This leads us to see the love of God shining in brightness on the face of all his works. His creatures are happy in the enjoyment of his love; and God, if possible, must feel his felicity increased, when he beholds them rejoicing in his mercy. Man was made for the glory of God, and by being holy, the end is gained. Now, to be holy is, in other words, to be whole as a moral character; and if man loves not God supremely, and his neighbor as if he were himself, he is not whole—he is unholy—and to be unholy is to be living in opposition to God.

It appears to be a fixed and unalterable law of heaven that none, except those who are like himself, shall inherit eternal being. Hence, he threatens with everlasting punishment, and that punishment is death, the transgressor who continues to dishonor him, and to insult his Son by refusing to be saved from sin and pollution. Let the reader consider well that he may be warned in haste, that death—non-being—is the production of impenitence; and that unless men are purified by Jesus "they shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them." Jesus is the bestower of life, and he imparts it only to those who allow him to refine them even as silver is refined. Oh, how foolish for any one to dream that he can live forever independent of Christ! Would you rob him of his brightest crown, as the immortalizer of saints? Awake from your delusive imaginings. Be assured that "if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die;" yes, die the death from which there is no resurrection. Come, then, and permit the love of God to renew you, until he beholds with delight his own image mirrored in your heart. Then will you reflect the glory of God. You will rejoice in his love, and work his will, and as sure as it is written on the page of God's book, you will be crowned when the Saviour appears with honor and immortality. W. W.

"The Glad Tidings."

A little group were gathered at Mount Olivet. Their hearts had been wrung with sadness, and the world had rejoiced over their sorrow. Their companion, their counsellor, and their joy, had been torn from them by cruel hands, borne to the judgment hall, and crucified. Like sheep without a shepherd they had wandered over Judea; and Peter, disheartened, had gone back to his fishing again; but often had the words of their Shepherd, in their loneliness and sorrow, rung in their hearts: "A little while and ye shall see me again." (John xvi., 16.) "But they knew not the Scripture, that he must rise again from the dead." (John xx., 9.)

But Jesus, in their sadness, appeared unto them as they were gathered together with closed doors, for fear of the Jews, and he breathed on them the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, which he had promised. Oh how their hearts must have leaped for joy when they beheld him that was dead, but liveth again! How every particle of unbelief must have vanished, when he told unbelieving Thomas to thrust his hand in his side and be not faithless! What divine light, what joy, and understanding must have been imparted to them during the forty days that Jesus was with them, "speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." (Acts i., 3.) But at last the time came for his ascension, and he was assembled with them on Mount Olivet. Their hearts were filled with joyful expectation, and they asked him anxiously, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" This thought was uppermost in their minds, though he had instructed them faithfully of his departure, to sit at the right hand of the Father. They could not comprehend it, for they confidently looked upon him as then come to be king. No doubt in the forty days he was with them he described in glowing words, the beauty, the glory, and the desirableness of the kingdom, and the longing desires of their hearts found utterance in this question. But how it must have filled their hearts with sadness when he told them they were not to know the times and seasons "which the Father hath put in his own power," but they were yet to be witnesses for him in the uttermost parts of the earth, thus informing them of his departure.

But while he is yet talking to them, behold a cloud receives him from their sight. Oh the cruel cloud that hides the Bright and Morning Star from their gaze—the Shepherd who had bound up their wounded hearts—their counsellor—their leader—their light and prince of life. Steadfastly looking toward heaven, they try to pierce through the cruel veil, and get one more glimpse of the desire of their hearts, and the one altogether lovely. But in vain. He is borne away by angel bands, and is welcomed in heaven amid the joyful acclamation of all the heavenly hosts, who sung a new song unto the Lamb that was slain. (Rev. v., 9.) But Jesus would not leave them comfortless. While they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold two men stood by them, clothed in white apparel. Oh listen to the good news—the glad tidings with which they comfort the hearts of the disappointed and saddened ones! "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you shall so come again in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Oh what comforting news! Is that glad tidings to you, dear reader? It could comfort their hearts; does it comfort yours? This same Jesus shall so come again "in like manner." What a blessed promise! It is not a spiritual coming, but a literal coming in the clouds of heaven. It was not a spiritual ascension, so will it not be a spiritual coming; for he will come in like "manner."

Oh I want to see this Jesus arrayed in his glory as king, and sing with immortal tongue:

'Tis the very same Jesus
That the Jews crucified.

Then, arrayed in his likeness with David, I shall be satisfied.—The Glad Tidings.

A Rule for Talkers.—No one who wishes that conversation should be pleasant to his neighbors as well as himself, should speak more than two or three sentences at once. However much he may have to say, it will be all the more agreeably said for giving others the opportunity of assenting illustrating, qualifying, or even contradicting. The ball needs to be returned by the opposite player to make a lively game.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Seed.—A seed is one of the most wonderful things in the world, containing not only the first principles of the plant, but holding the power to lie, as it were, asleep, until the fitting period for the expansion of the germ, and meanwhile withstanding influences of destruction such as totally destroy objects that have no life in them.

The Christian life is not an engagement by contract between the master and his servant. It is the union of two hearts—that of the Saviour and the saved—by the endearing ties of the most intimate love.

Tent Meeting.

"If the Lord will," the Life and Advent Mission tent will be pitched in Rahway, N. J., for meetings to commence Wednesday, P. M., June 3d, and hold over the following Lord's day. Br. Littell will arrange for a lot and for seats.

S. W. Bishop will accompany the tent to preach the word; the Editor of the Herald of Life has been invited, and other preaching brethren are expected to be present. Being of easy access from New York, Newark and Monmouth County, too, it is hoped that many will come to give zest and energy to the effort.

Those who know man's nature and destiny, and the coming of the Lord, "at the door," occupy responsible positions, with great duties and privileges: a world to warn, a kingdom to receive; a moment to labor; unending years of rest.

Those who may want the tent in their neighborhood, will please communicate with Br. Macdonald, of New York; or, Br. Bishop, of Oceanport, N. J.

Lines

On the death of my sister, with a few of her last words. By Mrs. L. A. Mirick.

"The sweat is gathering on my brow,
Please wipe it all away;
And something seems to press my brain,
How strange I feel to-day.

"Oh fan me—fan me, sister dear,
And bathe my head once more;
The heavy air seems so impure,
Please open wide the door.

"My limbs are growing cold and chill,
And I'm so sleepy, too;
And so distressed for breath, alas!
I know not what to do.

"And I am weary—oh! so tired—
So faint—do give me rest!
Smooth back my pillow once again
'Tis all that I request."

These words my sister spoke, nor knew
This weariness was death;
Closing her eyes to seek for "rest,"
She yielded up her breath.

Her last smile rested on a babe,
Her last kiss, pressed the fair,
And manly cheek of a dear son,
Grateful for all her care.

Hers was a life filled up with toil,
And care, and anxious thought;
But in the closet's deep recess,
The Saviour's face she sought.

And so we mourn, not without hope,
But on fair Eden's shore,
Expect to meet the loved and lost,
Where sickness comes no more.

Sweet "rest," quiet eternal rest,
Will there be surely given:
'Tis promised those who sleep in Christ,
When he returns from heaven.

And she will come from yonder grave,
To meet him in the air,
And saints from every age and clime
Will all be gathered there.

Eden will be restored again,
And Jesus ever reign;
His own soft hand shall dry our tears,
And banish every pain.

Ah! that sweet plaintive voice of hers,
How will its soft notes ring;
I fain would sit in silence there,
And hear my sister sing.

She'll blend her notes with angel choirs
And with them equal be:
In that blest land we'll meet again,
And live eternally.

Be Sure Your Sin will Find you Out.

"Mother, mother," said Mary Jay, running into her mother's room, "I believe I've found out what makes Clinton sick every day. I saw him just now out in the garden, behind the lilac-bushes, with big Fred Saunders; and Fred was smoking a cigar."

"Did Clinton have a cigar?" asked her mother.

"No; I didn't see any. I just saw them a minute. I think they did not see me."

"I will go and see myself."

Saying this, Clinton's mother put on her bonnet and walked out into the garden. There the children stood in a shady corner, each with a cigar in his mouth, and Clinton with a bundle of matches in his hand.

The two boys who were with him ran when they saw her; but his mother called Clinton in a loud voice to stop, so he stood still. He knew he had been doing wrong, and his first impulse was to get rid of the cigar.

What do you suppose he did with it?

It is very strange, but it is true, that people who are caught doing wrong, never act as they thought they would if found out. It is true of grown-up people as of children. It is very easy for persons to make up their minds what they will do, if caught in a crime; but strange to say, they seldom do the thing they planned, and most often do the very thing that proves them guilty.

Clinton might have thrown away his cigar, I suppose, before his mother reached him; but, instead of that, he thrust it under his dress, and pushed it under his belt. He did not do this because he thought it the best plan, or because he thought at all; it was what is called an impulse.

"Clinny," said his mother, "have you a cigar?"

"No," said the little boy. One sin always leads to another.

"Clinton," said his mother, solemnly, "is this the truth?"

"No, mother, I have not got any," persisted he. "Fred and Benny had, though."

Just at that moment a little blue smoke came curling from under Clinton's dress, just above his belt. He turned pale as he saw a hole burning in his pinafore; and there was the burnt end of a cigar under it!

Ah! Clinton, your sin found you out!

I will not tell you how Clinton was punished; only you may know he did not smoke any more cigars.

"I think he was a silly fellow to put a lighted cigar under his clothes," some child says. "I would have hid it better than that."

No you wouldn't. You don't know what you would have done. Unless you have been a great while learning to deceive, and grown cunning, you would not have been any wiser.

When a child or man who is generally honest, commits some sin, and wishes to hide it, the very thing he does to hide it quite becomes the means of his being discovered. It is very remarkable how often this is the case. It is one of God's ways of detecting crime. He has made the mind so, that when the conscience is guilty, it cannot act as when it is clear. It is never safe to say, "I shall not be found out." Yes, you will; and most likely you will tell of yourself, as Clinton did.

When you want to do wrong, remember that God can see you, for he is in every place; and you may be sure your sin will find you out.—Well-Spring.

"Mamma is too busy to go with us, and Katie won't wait, so we have nobody to say prayers to." So said a bright little girl nearly ten years of age. Who was to blame that she knew no more of the object and duty of prayer?

There may be some mothers who feel it to be a self-denial to leave their parlors, or firesides, or work, to put their little children to bed. They think that the nurse could do it just as well—that is of no consequence who hears the children say their prayers.

Now, setting aside the pleasure of opening the little bed and tucking the darling up, there are really important reasons why the mother should not yield this privilege to any one. In the first place, it is the time of all times when a child is inclined to show its confidence and affection. All its little secrets come out with more truth and less restraint; its naughtiness through the day can be reproved and talked over with less excitement, and with the tenderness and calmness necessary to make permanent impressions.

If the little one has shown a desire to do well, and be obedient, its effort and success can be acknowledged and commended in a manner that need not render it vain or self-satisfied.

We must make it a habit to talk to our children, in order to get from them an expression of their feelings. We cannot understand the characters of these little beings committed to our care, unless we do. And if we do not know what they are, we shall not be able to govern them wisely, or educate them as their different natures demand.

Certainly it would be unwise to excite young children, by too much conversation with them, just before putting them to bed.

Every mother who carefully studies the temperament of her children, will know how to manage them in this respect. But of this all mothers may be assured: that the last words at night are of great importance—even to the babes of the flock. The very tones of the voice they last listened to, make an impression on their sensitive organization.

Mother, do not think the time and strength wasted which you spend in reviewing the day with your little boy or girl: do not neglect to teach it how to pray, and to pray for it in simple and earnest language, which it can understand.

Soothe and quiet its little heart, after the experience of the day. It has had its disappointments and trials as well as its play and pleasures. It is ready to throw its arms around your neck, and take its "good-night" kiss.—Selected.

Letters and Extracts.

From Dr. J. F. Lee.

Monroe, Union Co., N. C.

Dear Brother: Our only unerring guide for Christian doctrine and practice is the Bible. It alone unfolds the character of the Christian, and brings to light the wickedness of the ungodly. What does it profit a man if he attain all wisdom and knowledge, and knew all the Bible by heart, if he lives a disorderly, ungodly life? Many, no doubt, whose knowledge of the Scriptures is quite limited, lead a holy, righteous, and godly life. They believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and keep his commandments. They love one another. They love God. They understand the nature of charity, and feel its divine influence. It is manifest in all their words and acts and deportment. It makes them kind, tender-hearted, courteous, benevolent. It makes them (in spite of the refinements or the want o those refinements of a liberal and thorough education, which the world prizes so highly), the most polite, refined, and dignified people, in their manners, I have ever seen. Their politeness is sincere, genuine, real, flowing from a heart renewed, sanctified by our Lord, and Master: that of the world is artificial, deceptive, a miserable pretence, full of affectation. The humble Christian learns of Christ whatever is true and lovely. He abhors deception; the worldly man believes in the necessity of dissimulation, and, unfortunately, many professors of religion say that a little deceit is necessary, and that they cannot get along in the world, any how, unless they practise deception. This notion does not tally with the voice of inspiration or the feelings of a candid sincere Christian. "I hate and abhor lying; but thy law do I love." "Speak truth." How amply might this subject be illustrated by appropriate and apposite passages of Scripture. How common is deceit, deception, dissimulation, imposition. It is almost ubiquitous. It is a great evil. Let us call it devil. Is it not as great an evil as the spirit of wine? Alas! how men deceive themselves, and lose sight of the evil that lurks and rankles in their hearts, without any agency of a fancied or imaginary devil. Let the real evil be eradicated out of their hearts; let them know themselves, deny themselves, govern themselves by truth, and the evil of falsehood will vanish: resist the evil, it will flee. Study moral, natural, and intellectual philosophy, the philosophy of the schools, and what does it all amount to, compared to the philosophy of the Bible? It is true that self-cultivation, intellectual-cultivation is very desirable. But if any man wishes to improve his mind, and know himself, he must go to the Bible. Then he may learn in what true wisdom consists, and how he may obtain a good understanding. The humblest Christian on earth, though he may not know the meaning or derivation of the word philosophy, is scientifically and practically the greatest of true philosophers, little as he feels in his own estimation. Science without religion inflates, puffs up, excites, the evil within the man, called pride—a dangerous evil—or if some will have it so, a devil; but true philosophy humbles, elevates, and exalts. Pride is destructive—humility is honored. How contrary is this to the wisdom of the world; and yet behold how even the proudest worldling tries to imitate the affable, the courteous, the kind and humble. Here evil would appear as an angel of light, vainly endeavoring to imitate the pure in heart, that he may allure the simple to deceive, and the lovely and confiding to destroy. Search the human heart thoroughly, by the light of the Scriptures: see it as it is there revealed, and how many evil propensities, or proclivities, may you not discover, that may be, by personification, yclept evils, devils or legions of devils.

I have been young and now am sixty-seven years old. I have wandered alone o'er many parts of this earthly ball; how oft I may have erred or gone astray, is a matter of no importance or inquiry to others; and have mixed, at times, with all classes; but never, never have I attributed any fault, foible, mistake, or sin of mine to that being who is so much slandered by thousands. I have never tried to exculpate myself, or palliate any of my transgressions by casting the blame on the devil, as most people do.

I have not had the pleasure of perusing the work called "The Theology of the Bible, by Hon. C. S. Halsted," but judging from the few extracts I have read, I am satisfied in my mind, it is well calculated to promote the truth. It seems to me he may, at some future day, review it, and give a new edition that will read more smoothly and pleasingly, according to the idiom and genius of the English language, so that the common reader will more easily understand a production worthy perusal. At a proper time, should I live, I expect to procure the work. At present, for certain reasons, I decline sending for any production how valuable soever it may be. I am not ashamed to assign the reason. I have not procured the work or ordered any others, for the past two years. Silence sometimes is proper and prudent. And in truth, it is to be feared that, too many cry, murmur or complain, looking for human sympathy and aid, before they are seriously hurt—and not trusting in God, and crying to him, believing in the name of Jesus.

However, I do not judge others. I know that some folks do eat the bread of idleness, not working with their own hands, or trying to make an honest living; but receiving public contribution or alms, and consuming it on their own lusts. This thing of laziness, self-indulgence or do-nothing-ism is a dreadful devil.

Do not Christians love one another? How then, is it that some, in our day, who are, I doubt not, Christians, are vilely, foully persecuted by some Baptists, Methodists, and almost by all denominations? Well, well, be it so; for if any man live godly in Christ Jesus he shall suffer persecution. "Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?" Blessed are they that suffer persecution, etc. Then let me inherit the blessing, and bear, suffer persecution. The truth I love; and it is but a small matter with me how many enemies I make by telling the truth in love. It seems to me that the Christian has great cause to rejoice when persecuted and all manner of evil said against him falsely. He has much reason to pray and reduce all his religion to practice; this leads to perfection; it works patience, experience, hope, brotherly kindness, forgiveness, charity.

See what a lengthy letter I have written to you at this time; and often have I desired to visit you and hear you preach or converse. Some may, possibly, for want of true vision, murmur and repine, because, forsooth, they cannot go to see you, or any other whose views they admire. I wonder if they learn wisdom and discover that some of their imaginings are rather bordering on the sinful order of things? Perhaps they spend hours in grieving because they cannot go to the great Chestnut Tree, take a leaf of it, not once thinking this is sliding slowly, easily into what? "O, but"—but what? They are so anxious to see — —; and a number more not necessary to name. God bless the dear souls, I do not blame them for such anxiety, if it be tempered with moderation, truth and wisdom. But whence comes our instruction, or comfort, or consolation, or hope, or faith, or repentance, or forgiveness, or any or every blessing we realize here, or hope to inherit at the last day, the resurrection? Who has given us all these, and who will freely give us all things? Do we wish to see him? to converse with him? to hold audience with him? Do we want any good thing? Let us ask him, believing, and in the name of Jesus. God will give it. Do you ever think there is any danger of setting too high an estimation on any man, and too often forgetting him of whom you should learn?

Poultney, Vt., May 1, 1868.

Br. Storrs: Please allow me for the truth's sake, only to respond very briefly to your kind notes in the Herald of April 29.

1. To your quotation of John iii., 36; vi., 53–58, I am more than reconciled. Nay, I am delighted with it; and I hope in the accomplishment of such wonderous grace to the heirs of promise to be glorified by it in Divine "honor and immortality." My acceptance of such precious Scripture was embraced, by my intention, in the primary statements of my published letter. The discerning reader, I trust, will have seen this. However, it seems most becoming in me to respond promptly and emphatically to your agreeable call, thus avoiding all ground and occasion for doubt that may have been implied in that call or requisition. Yes, sir! This poor child is, I think, in this more than "reconciled." I go still further in that direction and teach that, the policy of the gospel is life. In this I concur with you right heartily. Yes, with downright, and I trust, with upright gladness. We both may "joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ" on this point. But John "did outrun Peter;" John xx., 4, and now as grace is given you, Br. George, you may outstrip your less gifted Br. John (J. B. C.). But to avoid all stumbling blocks, we need to accept "the engrafted word." It is spirit and life; it is power and victory. I may add that my light for fifteen or eighteen years has (through great grace as I trust) enabled me to see and to say, I am "reconciled" to the doctrine of John iii., 36, and vi., 54, quoted by you.

2. But you, I humbly conceive, overlook or suppress the context, while I durst not. To me John iii., 19–21 asserts a "condemnation" that is specially adapted to the unjust—agreeing with John iii., 36, v. 28, 29; Acts xxiv., 15. Please let these texts be weighed still further by your readers.

3. The quotation of Heb. x., as to "sorer punishment" was simply in my case, for the convenience of that inspired language. It seemed expressive of the Holy Spirit's mind touching the unjust and their condemnation, which underlies and pervades John iii., 19, 21, 36; v. 28, 29; Acts xxiv., 15. Were these left out of the primary gospel, or New Testament statements, then the criticism on Heb. x., might avail and be in place. But my stand was taken on the above unmistakable words of truth.

4. The writers (if I do not mistake) in your view make the primal law in Eden, the law that condemns and holds its victims, even those under the gospel; thus tacitly, but really ignoring John iii., 19, and all like Scriptures. Hence they do their cause (assuming it to be the cause of Bible truth) a disservice; for "a house divided"—a witness self-contradicted—"cannot stand." Hence my quotation seemed in place. "Be ye reconciled to God"—context and all. Jas. v., 19, 20. We need "a good foundation against the time to come: that we may lay hold upon eternal life." 1 Tim. vi., 19. Let us not make holes in our own wall.

5. "The essential baptism" was a phrase adopted in courtesy by me; yet as precisely expressive of the truth set forth Acts i., 5; ii., 1–12. My point, though not clearly seen, was this—That the most ample and miraculous gifts of God's grace were, by authority, made the qualification for water baptism. Thus did he who had the "keys of the kingdom" to Jew and Gentile. Acts ii., 38, 41; x., 44, 48. I should fear that I was not in the true line of succession, from either Peter or Paul (Acts ix., 18, xviii., 8), the Jew or Gentile, were I to demur. Nay, were I not constrained to conform to such authorities: based as they are on the command and example of the Judge. Matt. iii. 13–17; xxviii., 18–20; Mark xvi., 15, 16; 1 Pet. ii., 21. The grace first given in faith and repentance, is dispensed by means of the gospel ministries, "for the obedience of faith." Rom. vi., 3–5; xvi., 26. "Faith," etc., by the Spirit, 1 Cor. xii., receives Christ as an act of "the heart;" but in baptism we put him on. Gal. iii., 26, 27. Fraternally yours, for the truth.

Note by the Editor.—We have given our Br. Cook the benefit, of his explanation, and the further statement of his position; and we are perfectly willing to let it all go to our readers without any direct comments of our own. The topics have been so often and so fully discussed by us, heretofore, that we feel no disposition to repeat what we have said. We will simply remark that we do not yield to any man in our respect for "the context" of any text we use. It is because we respect "the context," and the general tenor of Scripture, that we stand where we do to-day on both questions at issue in Br. Cook's letter above.

On Dwelling in God.

By Lucretia B. Lamb.

"He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God and God in him." What an atmosphere this. Who, and where shall we find this privileged class? The humble and contrite. With such the High and Holy One delights to dwell. How serene and tranquil the heart of such a dweller. How inspiring and elevating. It is truly inexpressible joy and glory. In this we are all invited to share: yea, to feast abundantly as the beloved of the Lord. Who has not marveled at Abraham's faith, when tried so intensely: called to sacrifice with his own hand the dearest object of his earthly love? Never, probably, did his love for his son burn with such intensity as when winding his sorrowful way to Moriah's summit; his mute, obedient son submissively yielding to his father's will. How must love's flame have almost sundered every fibre of his heartstrings? We may well imagine as he raised the knife for the fatal blow he would turn away his face from the touhcing scene. A higher love than that for his son was the controlling principle, the fruit of faith, that moved him for the work.

This is but a type of a fathomless, unbounded exhibition of love in the gift of the Father's beloved Son. Never, I conceive, did that love burn with such intensity as when Jesus hung bleeding, as if a malefactor, between the heavens and the earth. As its keen edge pierced the Father's heart, he turned away his face; the meek sufferer cried out, "Why hast thou forsaken me?" Yet no higher power did, or could avert the blow and change the agonizing scene to one of triumphant joy. No, the work in all its bitterness was finished, and the sufferer bruised and crushed. He trod the wine-press alone; and of the people there were none with him. Jesus for the joy set before him endured all this. So the Father, who is the embodiment of love, views the world, with its teeming millions, going down to death without the hope of recovery, in the fulness of love found a ransom; and his only begotten Son volunteered for the work. How was the love of the Father and the Son rekindled as they contemplated the earth renewed with more than Eden beauty, peopled with pure and holy beings, redeemed from death's power, made like unto his beloved Son, a joyful, happy company, living in love, feasting continually on that which the heart of man has as yet never conceived?

There is no true liberty where love is wanting. The Christian who has failed to reach the height where love is the controlling principle is still under bondage. He may act from a sense of duty, and do many things right in themselves, yet he is as tranger to the liberty of the loving Christian who dwells in God and God in him. Perfect love also casts out fear; for the realization of perfect confidence there must be perfect love: fear begets anxiety, fearful forebodings; yea, all that is comprised in the term torment. Can perfect love be ours, dear friends? Is there any possibility that we can be sharers in it?

Would it not pay well for the investment if every power were employed to their utmost capacity? a life-giving fountain, springing up into eternal life?

If such love is lavished upon us, shall we not in return love one another? its life-power be seen in our countenances? heard in our voices, marked by our footsteps? Instead of frequenting the places of mirth and festivity, teaching the ignorant, alleviating the suffering by the bed of the sick and dying. Our conversation on heavenly things: no evil speaking, but the manifest fruits of the Spirit; love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness: then may we fully understand what it is to dwell in God and God in us.

St. Paul, Minn., May 2, 1868.

How His Sermons Grew.

A lay brother made the following remark of his minister, whose pulpit talents were quite ordinary;

"Our pastor comes to the pulpit Sunday morning and preaches a little sermon; and in the afternoon he comes again and preaches another little sermon. In the evening he comes into the prayer-meeting full of love, and we all have a good time, praying, singing and exhorting. Then on Monday, after spending the forenoon in his study, he goes out and sees a family of his congregation, and talks to them about Jesus; he does the same on Tuesday and each day of the week and by Saturday night the little sermons on Sunday have grown into big ones."

One can easily conceive how a people would be satisfied with such preaching. Reverse the matter. If great sermons on the Sabbath become little ones during the week by manifest inconsistencies, would it not destroy all pulpit efficiency?—Canadian Independent.

The Vine.—What a beautiful and appropiate type does the vine afford of the mystical body of Christ—that sacred and spiritual corporation, composed of Christ, and of all who have been united to Him by a living faith as the living Head—belonging to every age and country, belonging to every class and denomination, living and dead! This spiritual body belongs to one organization; but, like a coral cluster, it is composed of numberless distinct and separate individuals. This sacred vine is a unity; but, like a natural tree, it is made up of countless separate plants. The union between Christ and His people, and between each of themselves, is of the closest and most vital description. Each member has his own personality, his own individual existence; and yet, living or dead, he is regarded as a scion, or branch, of one common stock—a component and integral part of one tree. The same bond unites each to all, the same sap pervades all, the same life animates them all. Christ is not the trunk or the branches, but the whole vine; they are members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones. They are His fulness, in the same sense that all the separate plants growing on a tree, and the remains of those that are dead, make up the outline, and form, and substance of that friend.—Guthrie's Sunday Magazine.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity; by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or, The Wicked Dead remain eternally under death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letters to a Clergyman; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburg, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for 2 cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our own expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.
ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:
GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the POST OFFICE, COUNTY, AND STATE must be given, and written plainly; and if a CHANGE is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD:

WHAT CONSTITUTES IT: OR, OF WHAT WILL IT CONSIST?

THE kingdom of God, when restored, or set up, will consist of a King, Associate Rulers; Citizens, Dependencies, Territory, and Laws.

1. A KING: Jesus the Messiah.—God has demonstrated his pleasure in this matter by raising up Jesus from the dead. If the fact of Jesus' resurrection from the dead is established, the fact of his Messiahship is put beyond controversy, and his kingship is undeniable.

2. ASSOCIATE RULERS:—These consist of such as have suffered with Christ, made immortal; no more subject to death, but, like their king, endowed with endless life by virtue of their union with him, so that they will reign forever and ever.

3. THE CITIZENS:—These are restored Israel and Judah, constituted once more "one nation," and will be the inhabitants of the territorial kingdom. In proof of this we have only space now for one or two out of many texts. Jeremiah thus records the Lord's will in this matter, Jer. xxiii., 5–8. "Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will raise unto David a Branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute justice and judgment in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely," etc. In the 3d verse the "Lord God of Israel" had said, "I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds; and they shall be fruitful and increase." After having said, verse 6, "In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely," etc., he adds, verses 7 and 8, "Therefore, behold the days come, saith the LORD, that they shall no more say, The LORD liveth which brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt; but the LORD liveth which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them, and they shall dwell in their own land." Ezekiel is still more particular; and the LORD, after describing their restoration, and becoming "one nation," saith—"And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt, and they shall dwell therein, they and their children, and their children's children, forever," etc. These, then, constitute the citizens, or inhabitants of the territorial kingdom of God.

4. DEPENDENCIES:—These are the "left of the nations." They are not citizens of the kingdom, but are under its dominion and government, and will be required to submit to that government; or, if any refuse, they will be destroyed. But we have not space now to enlarge on this topic, and pass to notice—

5. THE TERRITORY:—The kingdom of God has its territory, and is not the whole habitable globe, much less up "above the stars." It is that described to Abraham, Gen. xv., 18, "In the same day the LORD made a covenant with Abraham, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates." It is elsewhere also described, but this is sufficiently definite, as the kingdom of Israel and the kingdom of God are identical. Besides, it is clear from the words of our Lord, Matt. viii., 11, that all the territory of the earth is not embraced in the territory of the kingdom of God. He saith—"Many shall come from the east and west and shall sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven:" words which can hardly be reconciled to the idea that all the earth is the kingdom proper. The dominion is over the whole world, or habitable globe: "from sea to sea, and from the river [the great river Euphrates] to the ends of the earth." Thus Daniel saw given to one like the Son of man, "Dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Dan. vii., 13, 14.

Let it be understood, then, that while the dominion is universal, the kingdom proper, or territorial kingdom, is between the river of Egypt and the river Euphrates. On this territory was the kingdom of God "prepared from the foundation of the world:" there was fixed the throne, first occupied by Adam, but forfeited by him, afterward occupied by the kings of the house of Jacob, finally lost by them, and now remains to be occupied by David's Son—the second Adam—the Lord from heaven, when the throne first established by God in Eden will become permanently occupied—the kingdom be duly organized, the dominion be universal, the reign eternal. One thing more is to be noticed, viz.—

6. THE LAW:—This will go forth from Zion, the seat of empire and throne of the King. Thus the prophecy of Micah speaks: "But in the last days . . . . the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem. And he shall judge [or rule] among the people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more; but they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree; and none shall make them afraid, for the mouth of the LORD of hosts hath spoken it."

The laws are such as to secure peace, and will promote prosperity, universal contentment and happiness. Such is the teaching of the Bible in relation to the kingdom of God, and the happiness consequent upon its re-establishment and full development. Here is reality—not fancy—not a flying "above the stars," no one knows where, but an inheriting the earth, as Christ our Lord and king said the meek should do. Let us make haste to secure a part in the "Royal Priesthood." If we reject this offered mercy and honor, we have nothing to expect but ruin and death. Our guilt will be terribly aggravated, and our doom fearful and unalterable, even to "be punished with everlasting destruction."

THE REGENERATION.

CHRIST said to his sorrowing disciples, "Ye who have followed me, in the regeneration shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." When that oft-promised day comes we shall witness the consummation of that blessed hope in the renovation and redemption of the world. What is the glory and what the blessedness of that day?

God has given to his people "an earnest of the inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession." Even "the mystery of Christ" hid from ages, that the gentiles should be fellow-heirs with the seed of Abraham in the same glorious kingdom, is now made manifest to his saints. Yet God is able to do, and doubtless will do, "exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think." Hence while some things have been revealed, it is equally true that no description can fully reach and develop the magnitude and riches of the inheritance, and the glories of the latter day.

That there is to be renovation and redemption at the times of restitution of all things, the Scriptures clearly teach. What then is the nature and extent of each?

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth. . . . . And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new." This accords with the cheering promise made to the prophet of old, "For behold I create a new heavens and a new earth." Upon this new earth and in these new heavens, "Jerusalem is to be created a rejoicing, and her people a joy." Then "they shall build houses and inhabit them and they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them."

But what is meant by this new creation, the new heavens and the new earth? It is important here to ascertain the meaning of the term heaven; in what sense is it used in this connection? In the beginning God made the firmament; this signifies expansion, and is called heaven. Heaven is put for the atmosphere which surrounds the globe; for the air we breathe. Fowls were made to "fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven." "The windows of heaven were opened." "The rain of heaven." "The dew of heaven." "The winds of heaven." "The four winds of heaven strove upon the great sea." "Who stayeth the bottles of heaven." "Who stayeth the dew of heaven." In a multitude of other cases the word has the same meaning. As the stars are placed in the firmament on high, they are called "the army of heaven," "the host of heaven." Heaven in all such cases denotes that mighty, illimitable expanse in which they are to be found. It is also used to represent the residence of the supreme and everliving Jehovah: "Heaven is my throne;" "who walketh in the circuit of heaven." This is said to be the dwelling-place of angels. Enoch and Elijah ascended thither, as did the Lord Jesus Christ, whom the heaven must retain till the time appointed. There are hence three primary senses in which the word is used. It is also put for the over-reigning Deity himself: "That thou mayest know that the Heavens do rule."

It must be perfectly obvious that the heaven of heavens, the holy habitation of the uncreated Godhead, needs no reforming. Nor is there any probability that the ever-beautiful vaulted canopy, in which the starry hosts are placed, needs reconstructing. Not a particle of evidence is to be found showing that the curse consequent on the fall reached any other world, or in the least affected any other system of worlds. Hence the new creation must respect solely the habitation of men. The atmosphere purified, and the earth renewed; the whole perfectly renovated and freed from the curse of sin; and nothing left to hurt, or destroy, or make afraid. "Sing, O heavens, and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains; for the Lord hath comforted his people. . . . They shall not hunger, nor thirst; neither shall the heat nor sun smite them." "And he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them . . . and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." This new creation, the new heavens and the new earth, will become as the garden of God, and teem with the nations of them that are saved.

But is not the world which we inhabit to be burned up and blotted out of existence? Shakspeare says, as Plato before him,

"The great globe itself . . . shall dissolve,
And, like the baseless fabric of a vision,
Leave not a rack behind."

Is this, then, to be its destiny? No, verily; Solomon says, "The earth abideth forever." The sweet singer of Israel declares in respect to it, and the same of the sun and moon and all stars of light, "He, (the Lord Jehovah) hath established them forever and ever; he hath made a decree which shall not pass." It is said of the kingdom of the Messiah that it shall continue "as long as the sun and the moon endure." But this kingdom is elsewhere declared to be "an everlasting kingdom;" and his rule on earth to be "forever, even forever and forever." The earth must hence abide as long as that kingdom and rule continue.

What, then, shall be done with this passage in Psalm cii.? "Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thy hands. They shall perish, but thou shalt endure; yea all of them shall wax old as a garment; as a restorer shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed." One single remark will set the meaning of this passage in a clear light. In the structure of Hebrew poetry, the latter verse limits, controls and defines the first. "They shall perish." How? The latter verse tells us. "They shall be changed;" not annihilated. "The fashion of this world passeth away;" while the earth abideth. But the passage in Peter—how are we to dispose of that? Precisely as the apostle himself has disposed of it. He has explained and limited its meaning so that no one need misapprehend its import. The passage begins by referring to what had already been revealed. The Psalmist foretells a waxing old and a change. Isaiah tells us that the heavens and the earth shall dissolve and new ones formed. Malachi forewarns us of the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord that shall burn as an oven. Zechariah foreshadows a great geological transformation. Yet scoffers will appear and plant themselves on the stability of nature, and deny his coming. "For they are willingly ignorant of this: that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of water and in water, through which the world of that time was destroyed. But the present heavens and earth by the same word are treasured up for fire; reserved to the day of judgment and destruction of the men that are impious." . . . . "The Lord is not dilatory; . . . . but the day of the Lord will come as a thief, in which the heavens will pass with a rushing noise; and the elements being kindled will melt; and the earth and the works on it will be burned. As then all these are to be let loose, what manner of persons ought ye to be . . . . looking for and earnestly awaiting the day of God, in which the heavens being inflamed shall be let loose, and the elements being fired shall melt." "Nevertheless there comes the reconstruction, the new heavens and the new earth, in which righteousness is perpetually to dwell."

This imposing scene is to be witnessed on the coming of Christ. Then, doubtless, it is that he will pour upon Gog and his legionary bands "an overflowing rain and great hailstones, fire and brimstone." "And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives . . . . and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof . . . . and the earth shall shake at his presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground." By such terrible enginery of his wrath will he sweep the congregated impious nations from the stage. The scene is laid on the mountains of Israel—after which "all the land shall be turned as a plain . . . . and men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction; but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited." The earth will no more be destroyed by the mighty shaking of it, and the dreadful volcanic eruptions, and the burning, than it was at the time of the flood, but "remaineth" and "abideth forever." Instead, that "great and dreadful day of the Lord" is for the express purpose of visiting "the multitude of the terrible ones . . . . with thunder and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire." The whole is for the perdition of ungodly men.

This was the view of the Reformers. In one of their confessions they say, that "our Lord Jesus Christ will come from heaven . . . visibly . . . . burning this old world with fire and flame to cleanse it." Professor Hodge admits, "that the curse consequent on the fall has affected the state of the external world. The consummation of the work of redemption may be attended with its regeneration." Calvin says, "of the elements of the world I shall remark only this, that they will be burned merely in order to their putting on new qualities, and that their substance will remain." Fuller declares, "The Scriptures give us reason to expect, that the earth, as well as its redeemed inhabitants, shall at a future period be purified, and reunited to the holy empire of God . . . ." James has the following, "Creation will not be destroyed . . . . but only purified. The vast and splendid machine will not be thrown aside, broken up and consigned to oblivion." Jay adds, "Heaven will probably be our present system renovated." So the eloquent Chalmers: "We do hail the information, that in addition to our direct and personal view of the Deity, when he comes down to tabernacle with men, we shall also have the reflection of him in a lovely mirror of his own workmanship; and that instead of being transported to some abode of dimness and mystery, so remote from human experience as to be beyond all comprehension, we shall walk forever in a land replenished with those sensible delights and those sensible glories which we doubt not, will lie profusely scattered over the new heavens and the new earth."

It is safe to affirm that both the Jewish and Christian church, in the brightest periods of their history, unhesitatingly and universally believed in this glorious renovation and consequent perpetuity of the earth. Dr. Hodge concedes, "that this doctrine of the renewal of the external world, derived from the language of the prophets, was a common doctrine among the Jews, and also that in the early Christian church, this opinion was prevalent. Why, then, abandon this part of that blessed hope for the vain imaginings of men, whether of the idealistic, pantheistic, or atheistic school?"

But there is also to be redemption. When the Lion of the tribe of Judah prevailed to open the book, a new song was heard: "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals; for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God, kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth." The redemption purchased by Christ, by the one offering of himself, includes in it, entire sanctification, and deliverance from the penalty of law; from the power of the grave, and victory over death. If man had eaten of the tree of life, it is said, he would have lived forever. The second Adam restores the tree of life.

One most expressive passage sets forth the nature and extent of that redemption. "There is now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus." They are in him new creatures, and walk in newness of life. "If children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if so be we suffer with him, that we may also be glorified together. . . . For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope. Because the creature itself shall also be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, who have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

No passage has been so mystified as this. The word translated creature three times, and creation once, has been applied to four-footed beasts, birds and creeping things; to the Jews, to Gentiles, to the saints; to the wicked, etc. Yet none can be found more concise, more clear and determinate in its meaning. Paul is not speaking of all manner of creatures; but of the saints, the new creation in Christ Jesus, the heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, who have lived and are still living, who have suffered, and are still suffering for his sake, and the glory to be revealed. Such, and such only, have waited, earnestly desiring the manifestation of the sons of God. Here they have been made subject to vanity, to corruption, disease, decay and death; still in hope; in hope of what? of deliverance into the glorious liberty of the children of God. No others are to be delivered. The whole race of true believers have travailed in pain till now; not only so, even we, who have an earnest of the inheritance, groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body; for we would not be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be changed into life.

Rapt into future time, the prophet had a glimpse of that day, when "he will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces, and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth, for the Lord hath spoken it. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him. We will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."—Selected.

A FIRM faith is the best theology; a good life the best philosophy; a clear conscience the best law; honesty the best policy; temperance the best physic.

A WORD OF WARNING.

THE word of God is very plain in its declaration that in the last days the power of the enemy to deceive shall be great, and the danger even of God's elect is manifestly not little. "Yea, truth faileth," may be said of the present day, in some sense, perhaps, as fully as of any other period of time which man has known; and Jesus says to his own disciples, "Take ye heed."

The whole system of the world is an intricate machinery of deceit and trickery. Underneath the show of rule and order, fearful injustice exists; underneath the mask of propriety, the most degrading vice; under the world's profession of friendship, bitter hatred and fierce jealousy often reign; words, smiles, and kind wishes are understood to mean nothing.

In trade it is the same: borrowed capital is its unreal foundation; adulteration and imitation are rife; and few things are what their name implies; the whole is threadbare, and the stamp of the father lies is upon them. A strange sense that matters cannot last long in this state is growing upon us, and "men's hearts are failing them for fear."

The profession of religion is, in the main, equally unsubstantial. The world is all outside show, all shell and husk, and the worldly religionist is so too. He prays to be seen of men, not to be heard of God; he sings to accompany the voices of men, and not to sound the praises of God; he attends his place of worship for years together, and comes away with as little rational intercourse with God, as though he were some heathen idol without life or power.

But how is it in God's family, among those who are—and know they are—his children? Can there be unreality here? Where light is, can darkness be? or can even error lurk where truth exist? Surely the follower of Christ has lost his taste for all which is not of God. The bait of the world's glitter cannot be a temptation to him, he seeks only Christ. Alas, so far from this, the warning is still needed, "Take heed, lest any man deceive you."

The enemy mocks the Spirit of God, and assumes to take of the things of Christ and to show them unto us, saying, "Lo, here is Christ, or lo, he is there." The Ritualist points with solemn awe to the consecrated bread and wine, and says in a whisper, "Christ is here" and he believes it from the bottom of his heart, forgetting that he who desired to be thus remembered until he come, hath said, "This is my body, this is my blood," not myself. Did they but know the power of his blood to cleanse from all sin, they would not need to make material that which is divine, or use another means than that of obedient faith to reap the blessings he bestows. But look, they exclaim, at our services, with all their solemn ritual, our zeal for the frequent rendering of that worship which is due to God, our reverent care for the place where his name is named. Surely Christ is here.

Jesus! is there aught in thee which accords with these gaudy trappings and colored vestments, these pompous processions, and these marks of homage to thy professed representatives? Wast thou not of no reputation, and the form of a servant was thine, and meekness and lowliness of heart thy wonted character? O how would the Lord Jesus appear in the midst of so much ceremonialism, which vaunteth itself and is puffed up!

Again, men point to a preacher of the gospel; he is called our advocate of pure doctrine, a defender of the truth, an enemy to popery, a popular preacher, throwing all the vehemence of nature into his own view of things, not weeping over, but declaiming against those who differ from him, instead of saying with Jesus, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." But he draws such numbers, he preaches such a free gospel: "Lo, Christ is here."

But the One whom the world knew not was of a different spirit, and has taught us in lowliness of mind each to esteem other better than ourselves. Is there not reason to fear that there are some who indeed preach Christ's doctrine, and proclaim the freedom and fulness of his salvation, and yet know but little of his mind and spirit, and have little acquaintance with himself?

But as regards those holy Christian sisters, who have given themselves up in body and in spirit to God's service, who in the truest sense may be called sisters of mercy: for none but Christ would they thus renounce the world and live apart from comfort and from home! And truly the dedication is most lovely, and the testimony against the world most blessed, if God has called for it. But "to obey is better than sacrifice;" and in many cases, obedience to all the hard struggle with the world and the flesh in a common ordinary life, acting therein after Christ's example, is neglected and shunned, while self-chosen crosses are self-inflicted by some who are indeed truly converted women, but unmindful that whatever of the structure they thus rear which God hath not wrought, must at the last be burned with fire, as hay and straw and stubble, even though the foundation standeth now. Where there exists the devotion of a woman's life to God and to her fellow creatures, let it be a daily offering how and where God calls her, else it may not be said of that one's spirit, "Lo, Christ is here."

The Broad Churchmen recognize the moral beauty of the human life of Jesus, and point it out to their followers, and say, "Lo, Christ is here;" and they boldly dare to imitate the divine model with the poor uncleansed spirit, and the poor untamed will, which belong to the natural man. They pride themselves on their success, and on their strict morality and philosophic views of things divine.

But the warm life is wanting. The whole is a hollow mockery: a vain imagination spurs on the arrogant spirit to lash itself into moral purity, to strain up to an ideal, and to flatter itself that the object is attained, when, alas, like the overthrow of Babel, confusion must creep in, and a confounding of the tongues of those rationalists must be the inevitable result.

The blood to cleanse and to give life—the blood of Jesus—is wanting; the debt of love for the giving of his life. The imitation is an icy one—the intimate communion and conformity, eye to eye and heart to heart with him, is unknown.

Christ is not to be found in the waste desert of the strife of parties, but he declares that his dwelling is with him that is of a contrite and humble spirit. O how it behooves us in these days of danger to take heed, and to be on the watch, discerning with the keenest vigilance, all which is, or is not, of Christ, that being acquainted with him thus himself, we may "abide in him, and so have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."—Selected.

READING THE BIBLE.

AN intelligent reading of the Bible is necessary for the highest development of its usefulness to the Christian, either as a manual of devotion or as a means of instruction. It is not enough for this purpose that a certain measured portion be read every day, or that the whole volume be read through in a given time. This is all very well, provided the reader does not get into the habit of daily reading as a matter of routine, and so go through his task mechanically, his eye on the page, and his mind on business. "Understandest thou what thou readest?" said Philip to the eunuch. It is better to read a single verse understandingly than a whole chapter for the mere purpose of getting through it in a certain time.

This division of chapter and verse, by the way, though a very great help in finding isolated passages, is often a very great hindrance to the sense. Robert Stephens, "the learned printer," who is credited with having devised the present arrangement, in the sixteenth century, seems to have made it without any regard to the connection of different parts; and we are quite inclined to believe the story told of him by Horne, that he accomplished his task while riding on horseback. This may account in part for the disjointed paragraphs and broken sentences so often found. These artificial divisions are to be lost sight of in interpreting the Scriptures, a single thought sometimes running through several verses, and occasionally even overleaping the boundary which separates the chapters.

The intelligent reading of the Bible will be very much helped by the use of maps of Bible-lands. New light will thus be often thrown on familiar passages, while some passages not understood will be made clear.

We hardly know of a more intensely interesting employment for a lover of the Bible than to begin at Genesis, and read through, map in hand, finding every place mentioned (so far as Scripture localities can now be found), as the reading progresses. Some of the driest details of the historical books of the Old Testament will be found to have a richness of meaning not before anticipated; while the travels of our Lord and of the Apostles will be wonderfully intensified in interest.

Names of places will not then seem to be mere arbitrary signs, like numbers or mystic symbols, but will be associated with localities and relative positions of places.

A knowledge of the relative chronology of the different parts of the Bible will add very much to the interest of the Bible-reader. True, there are many vexed questions in Bible chronology; but leaving these for the doctors to discuss, we can find enough firm, undisputed ground on which to tread. How much more interesting the prophecies of the Old Testament become when we read them in connection with the historical books! We thus ascertain the contemporary persons and incidents, and can more readily see the force of the predictions uttered by men inspired of God. So, also, in the New Testament, if we read the Epistles, especially those of Paul, in connection with the Acts of the Apostles we have a better understanding of them than if we read each epistle as an independent work.

The manners and customs of Bible-lands also afford very great help in reading the Bible. Fortunately for us, the Orientals are so stereotyped in everything that pertains to outward life that we may easily learn the customs of Bible times by learning those of the East today. Vastly different as these are from those we see at home, it is no wonder if persons unacquainted with them are often puzzled to find out the meaning of some passages in the Bible. A knowledge of Oriental customs will often explain clearly what would otherwise be a dark and incomprehensible text. It must not be forgotten that these illusions, so mysterious to us, were perfectly clear to those who read or heard them. Books of Eastern travel are so common in our day, that we may easily become acquainted with Eastern manners.

One very interesting and profitable way of reading the Bible will be found in the use of the marginal references. It will thus be seen that, in many cases, the Bible is its best interpreter. Many a dark passage is made clear by comparison with parallel texts. The comprehensiveness and unity of the Scriptures are also made evident by such comparison. There is seen to be a wonderful relation of the different parts to each other; and though these books were written by different hands in different ages of the world, there is here plentiful evidence that they were inspired by the same Infinite Mind.

We could give abundant illustration of each of the points here briefly touched were we writing an essay instead of a newspaper article. Our design is, by a few hints, to call attention to some of the modes by which Bible-reading may be made more interesting and profitable than by a mere rapid routine reading. This is better than nothing, we admit, but not what we ought to aim at in these days of increasing intelligence. A diligent reading and understanding of the Bible will be found a great help in religious life.—The Methodist.

The Coming Crisis.

What! still another crisis? many will say. Yes, dear reader, nothing can be more sure than still another crisis, and such an one as will throw all that has gone before in our world's history quite in the shade. Verily this is the very thing of which "God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

There is at the present time, a host of the wise and good, scattered over the whole world, who are earnest students of prophecy, learned, humble and honest persons, who claim that we are now living in the "time of the end," when, according to the word of God, by the mouth of the prophet Daniel, there shall be such light on what was before "closed and sealed," that the wise should understand when these things should come to pass, even the completion when the blessed shall come to the thousand three hundred five and thirty days, when Daniel will stand in his lot with them. Yes, a host of watching, praying ones, believe that we are very nearly there, and that the next great event in our world's history will be the coming and kingdom of our Lord, when the righteous dead shall be quickened, and the living changed in a moment and "caught up to meet the Lord in the air." Surely none who are prepared can object, and those who are not prepared, as in the days of Noah and Lot, have grave objections, for they are not ready. But what if he does not come? Still watch and wait, as when some dear and most valuable earthly friend did not come just when expected; let the desire become more intense, as with the bride expecting her lord; surely in his return is our only hope. Long and weary ages have proved this true.

What a world ours still is—how abortive are human efforts when put forth to regulate and cure its evils. We need no revelation to teach us that the curse rests upon it. The power of evil is everywhere in the ascendency. The pestilence walks abroad at noon and night. Earth's history is still written in blood and tears—its constant dirge, wails, sighs and groans. Mildew blights and the insect makes the tiller's soil precarious. Perishing in want and neglected, many lie down and die. The dominion of man has long since departed and the beast rises up in rebellion against his former ruler. Everywhere we see where lie the dead, and death sways his sceptre over the universal empire. Indeed it would seem that all with one accord should ever pray, "Even so come, Lord Jesus."—Northern Independent.

The Man of Sin.

Who is he? Look at Paul's prophecy (2 Thess. v., 1–8), and then read the following:

"Pope Pius IX, in a recent response to some Romanists who presumed to offer him some advice, forgetful of his own impotence and of the enlightened age in which he lives, dared to claim the power and prerogatives of Christ, while denouncing those who do not acknowledge his power. He said, 'Alone in in spite of my unworthiness, I am the successor of the apostles, the vicar of Jesus Christ. Alone I have the mission to conduct the bark of Peter. I am the way, the truth and the life. Those who are with me, are with the Church; those who are not with me are out of the Church; they are out of the way, the truth, and the life. Men must be made to know this, that they may not be deceived and led astray by the words of people who call themselves Catholics, but who will and teach otherwise than the head of the Church wills and teaches.'"

—Need we ask, who is the man of sin?

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MAY 27, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The Work Going On.

It is only a short time since the work of scattering Life from the Dead, and A Defence of the Bible was commenced, and we have printed three thousand of the first and two thousand of the last named works. They are all paid for, and we are sending off the last thousand of each. Soon other editions must be printed. Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due time we shall reap, if we faint not. Who will help to print the next thousands of these works? It must be done soon. Fifty thousand of each is what we may and can scatter in the next few months, and the funds and labor can hardly be better expended; and the tract on The Judgment, which will be ready in a few days, should go with the others in all places. Let every one, who can, do something to keep this work in motion now that it is so well under way. After the Herald of Life nothing promises to be productive of so much good in making known the Life views as this enterprise. Ye lovers of this blessed truth, help, and help now, and keep this engine in motion. Let the sound go out into all the world, and the words of "Life only in Christ" to the ends of the earth.

Going to Heaven at Death.

OR, THE PENITENT THIEF'S CASE CONSIDERED.

The thief "said unto Jesus, Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily, I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Luke xxiii., 42, 43.

This text is claimed by the advocates of "going to heaven at death" as teaching that an entity called the soul, in a disembodied state, goes immediately to heaven at the instant of dying. This assumption will be found to be without foundation in this text, when it is carefully examined, as well as irreconcilable with the general tenor of the Scriptures.

1. What did the thief ask? Was it that Jesus would have mercy on his soul? There is not a word said about such an entity in the conversation. "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." The common theory overlooks entirely the thief's prayer, and turns the truth into a falsehood by making it read, "Lord, take my soul into heaven with thy soul when we are dead." But nothing of this kind is uttered. The thief spoke of a kingdom—"thy kingdom," the kingdom of Messiah; the kingdom, of course, which God had promised him. We need not travel through all the promises of the Old Testament—which are many—where God promised to give Messiah the throne of Israel; but let us come to one in the New Testament which is so plain that no one need mistake the promise of God in reference to what throne, and hence what kingdom the Messiah, the Christ, is to occupy.

Said Gabriel to Mary, "Thou shalt bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus .... And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David," etc. Luke i., 32, 33. It is plain what throne Jesus—the Jesus the thief addressed—is to occupy. Was that throne in the theological heaven? The answer must be, "No;" for David never had a throne in that locality—he does not now, and never did have a throne there; for inspiration declares, "David is not ascended into the heavens." Acts ii., 34; consequently he had no throne there. Where, then, was his throne? It was on earth, on Mount Zion, in the city of Jerusalem, and nowhere else. That throne was cast down when the Babylonians took Jerusalem, and carried captive the last reigning king of David's line, and the Lord said of that throne and kingdom, "Take off the crown .... abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi., 26, 27.

Here we find the throne of David, and the kingdom which God had promised with an oath to give to David's Son; and Jesus was that Son, as Gabriel affirmed. That throne he has not yet occupied; that promise of God has not yet been fulfilled; yet, "I will give it him," said he who cannot lie.

If the thief prayed, or spoke understandingly, he had reference to the time when Jesus would occupy David's throne, on "Mount Zion, in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv., 23. That time is clearly marked in prophecy, not at death, but when "He will swallow up death in victory .... and take away the rebuke of his people from off all the earth; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Isa. xxv., 8. This, inspiration tells us, will be, not when saints die, but "at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible," etc. 1 Corth. xv., 52. And our Lord saith, "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi., 40. Again Jesus saith—that "same Jesus" who hung upon the cross—"When the Son of man [the Son of David] shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matth. xxv., 31.

Thus we have a combination of testimony, invulnerable as the oath and promise of God, that the throne and kingdom of Jesus are yet in the future, and are on the earth, and not to be possessed by him till the resurrection "at the last day."

Again, we ask, What was the thief's prayer? "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Archbishop Whately says, "Into is a mistranslation: it should be in thy kingdom. The meaning is—at thy second coming in triumphant glory."—p. 324 of Whately's "Future States." The prayer, then, is distinct and clear; it is a prayer to have part in the resurrection "at the last day." To be remembered, after death, is to have a resurrection: not to be remembered, is not to have one. Thus Job says, "Drought and heat consume snow waters; so doth the grave [sheol] those who have sinned .... he shall be no more remembered." Job xxiv., 19, 20. To be remembered is to live again from the dead. Thus Job speaks, "O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave [sheol], that thou wouldst keep me secret until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldst appoint me a set time, and remember me." Job xiv., 13. The connection shows that, with Job, to be remembered was to "live again;" verses 14, 15. Other texts show the same facts. David speaks of some whom "God rememberest no more:" Psa. lxxxviii., 5.

Thus we come to an understanding of the thief's prayer. He asked Jesus to give him life again, at the last day, when he should come in his kingdom. We may now contemplate the reply. "Verily, I say unto thee today," etc. Our first inquiry is, What day is spoken of? The original word is semeron; very generally translated this day. What does "this day" refer to? Was it the day they hung upon the cross? or, was it the day of which the thief had just spoken? We take it to be the latter; as though our Lord had said, "You ask me to remember you in the day that I shall come in my kingdom. In this day of which hast spoken, thou shalt be with me in paradise."

We take this view for several reasons: 1st. The paradise of the Bible was not in existence at the time of the crucifixion, as we shall presently show: 2d. The thief did not die in the literal day that Jesus did: 3d. Jesus himself did not go to heaven that day in which he died, and the advocates of the "go to heaven at death" theory affirm paradise and heaven are identical.

1. The paradise of the Bible was not in existence at the time of the crucifixion. The term paradise occurs but three times in our translation of the Bible, viz., in the text; in in 2 Corth. xii., 4; and Rev. ii. 7. It signifies a garden of delights, hence theologians apply it to the Garden of Eden. That paradise was lost by the first Adam, but paradise will be restored by the second Adam, which is Christ; but it is not yet restored, that is a self-evident truth. In 2 Corth. xii., it is spoken of as synonymous with "the third heaven." Paul's man, spoken of, was "caught up to the third heaven," verse 2, and of the same event, verse 4, it is said, he "was caught up into paradise." Thus the third heaven and paradise are seen to be one and the same place. The scene was a "vision;" a manifestation of "things which shall be hereafter," as it was said to John in Rev. There is to be a paradise —a third heaven; and Paul's man in rapture, or vision, saw it. Can we tell what it is? and where it is to be? Peter tells us, "the heavens and earth were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water; whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished; [that is the first heavens]: but the heavens and the earth which are now [this is the second heavens] . . . reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men;" but, says he, "nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for a new heavens [that will be the third] and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Pet. iii. Have we not found Paul's third heaven, the paradise? John saw in vision this "new heaven," Rev. xxi., 1, "and a new earth;" and he saw the "new Jerusalem coming down from God," etc., and he "heard a great voice from heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God;" [Paradise restored]; and Jesus saith, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Rev. ii., 7.

Thus we find what paradise is, where it is, and when it is to be entered; not at death, nor at any period short of the new creation by Christ, and the glorification of his people at the last day; when he shall come in his kingdom, and the promise to the penitent thief will be fulfilled in "this day" of paradise restored, and the second Adam Lord of it, having the right to give the fruit of the tree of life to all who have accepted him as their Life-giver.

Here we might rest the question, but some need line upon line to remove their traditions received from men. We say, therefore, in the next place, it cannot be proved that the thief died in the same day that Jesus did; and, hence, did not meet him in paradise, whether that place was heaven, or a fancied conscious state somewhere else. Jesus died at three o'clock in the afternoon, or the ninth hour of the day. The day ended at sunset, as the Jews reckoned time. The thief was still alive, and it was evening when his legs were broken to hasten his death. He did not die in the literal "to-day" when the promise was made him.

But, lastly, supposing heaven is paradise, and that the death of both parties occurred in that literal day, how is it to be proved that they went to heaven? Paul saith, "Christ died . . . and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day;" ect., 1 Corth. xv., 3, 4. This language forbids the idea that he went to heaven during those three days; and Jesus himself testifies that he did not go there; for after he rose from the dead, he declared to Mary, John xx., 17, "I am not yet ascended to my Father." He did not, then, ascend to paradise the day he died, and had not for three days after; and hence, if the thief went there, he did not find Jesus, and the promise failed. There is no evading our Lord's words to Mary by saying, "Jesus meant he had not been to heaven in his body." He speaks of his personality—"I am not yet ascended," etc. Jesus—the person—had not been to paradise. He said to the thief—"Thou shalt be with me." Not, thy soul shall be with my soul. Three days after the same me saith, "I am not yet ascended." Here is demonstration of the incorrectness of the common construction of this Scripture. There is no proof from it of the survivance of a conscious entity called the soul, in death. Jesus saith nothing of a soul or souls in the entire account. We might extend our remarks greatly on this text, but we judge enough has been said to show its utter irrelevancy as proof of the common theory of going to heaven at death.

The Controversy: Disallowed of Men: Chosen of God.

"But chosen of God, and precious." Who is God's choice? Jesus Christ. For what did he choose him? To be the foundation and head of a new and spiritual creation. The animal, or Adamic foundation gave way, and the race were going out of life—perishing. God has chosen, elected, selected, accepted, approved, a new foundation or head; Jesus Christ, the second Adam, on whom to build a spiritual structure; one that shall be durable, eternal. The first Adam was a foundation of the earth earthy; liable therefore to fail; but the failure would show to men that they need a more substantial and permanent foundation.

The second Adam is of heavenly origin; possessing, by the gift of the Holy Spirit without measure, a power which enabled him to overcome the animal nature, which he possessed in common with the first Adam and his posterity. Thus prepared, he triumphed, and the animal nature being crucified, he rose from the dead, by the power of the eternal Spirit, wholly a spiritual being; and God hath chosen him as the foundation and head of a new and spiritual creation or building from among the children of men. A spiritual nature, immortality, incorruptibility, eternal life, are all derived from him, and from no other source can they be obtained by any of the first Adam's race.

Here is the Controversy: God has made his choice, as he had the right to do; and he calls upon all men, everywhere, to harmonize in the choice, assuring them there is hope from no other quarter; no future life, or life from the dead; no spiritual nature; no immortality; no incorruptibility; no endless life, except by a union with this foundation or living head of the new creation. "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we can live." Acts. iv., 12.

Here is the whole controversy between God and men. Men disallow, disapprove, reject God's choice. They will to enter on a future life, and pretend they have an immortal soul, a spiritual nature, a deathless element that inheres in themselves; and thus virtually set aside God's chosen method for the bestowment of a future life, immortality, and incorruptibility. They refuse to yield their fancies and wills to God's will; and thus the controversy goes on. God is well pleased with his choice of a living Stone—Jesus, the Life-giver. In his sight that Stone is "precious," honorable, highly esteemed, costly: but men are dissatisfied with it, and cast it aside: it is too humiliating to them to admit they are of the dust, and have no higher principle in their nature: their proud hearts would "be as Gods"—spiritual, immortal, without being dependent on God's chosen medium—Jesus—for such qualities.

One or the other of the parties in this controversy must yield, or eternal dissolution must be the fate of man. Does any man think God will yield to their impious claims, and approve of their contempt or neglect of his "chosen and precious" Life-giver? Are any desperate enough to suppose they can successfully contest this matter with the Almighty? Alas, for such, they will soon find they must bow to the Divine will or perish forever "like the beasts that perish." All the efforts of men to arrive at a future life, immortality, incorruptibility, endless life, except in Jesus Christ alone, are as fruitless and vain as if they should attempt to blow out the sun by the puff of their breath. They must submit to God's terms, or go back to the dust from whence they came, and eternally "remain in the congregation of the dead:" Prov. xxi., 16. All the efforts of men to arrive at life future and eternal by any other means or method than that God has chosen, will be as fruitless as the attempt at Babylon to build a tower up to heaven: and the confusion of language at that time was no greater than the vexations that men now inflict on themselves and each other in efforts to make it appear that they are what God has never given them power to be, aside from the regeneration by Christ Jesus and the resurrection. They would now, "be as Gods;" or, be immortal and live forever without Christ.

Those who acquiesce in God's "chosen and precious" Stone, or foundation, become as "lively stones"—stones having life by their connection with it—and "are built up a spiritual house," a dwelling, a mansion, a house of God, "a temple of the Holy Spirit," and thus will be brought into the future and endless life: die no more, and be forever with the Lord. Let the Controversy end, now and forever.

Resurrection of the Wicked.—No. 5.

BY DR. N. FIELD.

(1). If Rev. xx., 4 is to be understood in a figurative sense, it follows, nevertheless, that all who have no part in it will die the second death. If it took place more than a thousand years ago, so much the worse for all who have lived since.

(2). But as Br. Storrs is not certain as to what kind of a resurrection it is, or whether it is in the past or in the future, let us suppose for a moment that it is a resurrection of none but martyrs, as he thinks it may be, then all who have not suffered martyrdom will not be raised, but remain under the power of the second death!

(3). We have always believed that this resurrection comprehended not only the martyrs, but all who "have not worshipped the beast and his image; or have not received his mark in their foreheads, or in their hands," including the saints who shall be alive on the earth when the Lord comes. But if none but the martyrs are to be raised, the rest of the dead saints, as well as the living, will be lost, for there is to be no second resurrection, according to Br. Storrs' views of this chapter.

With these brief remarks I will dismiss Rev. xx., and present some other passages of Scripture affirmative of the resurrection of the wicked.

(4). Dan. xii., 2. "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

It is generally, if not universally conceded by all commentators and critics, that a literal resurrection of the dead is affirmed in this verse. The events preceding it, as presented in chapter xi., bring us down to the time for our blessed Lord to commence his reign on earth. Two classes are mentioned as awaking from the dust of the earth. There is no mistake about this. The word "many" includes both classes. Many shall awake from sleep. Some shall awake to everlasting life, and some shall awake to shame and everlasting contempt. Thus it reads when the verb understood is expressed. If such declarations as this can be explained away, there is no certainty in language. Every declaration in the Bible could be explained away or mystified upon the same principle of interpretation.

If those who are destined to shame and everlasting contempt do not awake, the verse ought to read as follows: Some of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake to everlasting life; and some shall sleep on forever under the power of death, and their names held in everlasting contempt. This phraseology would express the ideas of the believers in the non-resurrection of the wicked, and leave no room to doubt the correctness of their doctrine.

Jeffersonville, Ind., May 14, 1868.

Response to Dr. Field.

Again we reply to Br. Field by prefixing figures to the matter responded to, to save repetition.

"(1)." It does not follow that all die the second death not embraced in this resurrection. The 6th verse saith, "On such the second death hath no power." Does it therefore follow that it hath power on all others? By no means. By this resurrection, whatever it is, the class named are secured against the second death, whatever that is; but it does not follow that none others will ever be secured from it.

"(2)." Br. Field entirely overlooks our statement about the resurrection of martyrs only, when he says, "he thinks it may be." We expressed no such thought. He had contended that the resurrection of Rev. xx., 4–6 was literal, and the language in this text was literal, etc. We replied as follows:

As to the book of Revelation "abounding in literal expressions," we do not assent to it. That it has some, we do not deny; but there must be something more than assumption to prove them such, and especially to admit such to be literal as are found nowhere else in the Bible. Our credulity is not large enough for that.

Whether the resurrection in Rev. xx., 4, be literal or not, does not settle the question of a resurrection of wicked dead a thousand years after. Supposing it to be literal, Who are the persons embraced in this first resurrection? Let the text tell us: . . . "Them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads nor in their hands; and they lived," etc.

Will any man say, all that will ever have eternal life are embraced in this description? Surely, if so, what becomes of all the Old Testament saints, who died in peace, who never lost their heads, and had no temptation to worship the beast or his image? And what is to become of Dr. Field and ourself, with many others, who have not yet been "beheaded" for any of the reasons named?

It will thus be seen, what we did say was only on Dr. Field's supposition that the language must be literal. But we did not say or "think" that the martyrs only might have a resurrection, but just the reverse, as the extract given shows. It is his theory that confines it to the martyrs, and not ours. It is our Br.'s view that makes all but the martyrs die the "second death;" and we entreated him to abandon a theory which would exclude himself and us from eternal life, unless we, each, are so fortunate as to get our head taken off for the witness of Jesus.

"(3)." It makes no difference what we "have always believed;" if the language of this text is to be taken strictly literal, it cannot embrace all the saints, of all ages; for besides the martyrs, it clearly includes none others except such as lived cotemporary with "the beast and his image" and refused to worship that power.

The statement of Br. Field that, "there is to be no second resurrection, according to Br. Storrs' views of this chapter," is an entire mistake. We admitted the difficulties of explaining the chapter, but said,

One thing is tolerably clear: Rev. xx. is a symbolical representation of the final triumph of the church of God, at some stage of its history, and of the complete overthrow of all its enemies, especially of all those earth-born governments which have been the chief instruments in persecuting the true church. Above all these dragonic powers the church is to rise, or have a resurrection, but whether this is all to be accomplished at one time, or at several, making two or more distinct periods of the triumph, we presume not to determine with certainty, nor is it essential that we should, so long as the symbols make the triumph certain, and finally complete, putting "down all rule, all authority and power" that oppose the supreme rule of Christ. See 1 Corth. xv., 24, 25. We think the whole structure of the symbols employed in Rev., from chap. xii. to the end, shows a mighty conflict of the church with wicked civil and ecclesiastical organizations, which tread her down, so that she is symbolically represented as dead, but finally, either in several divisions, or all at one time, she rises victorious over all these wicked organized bodies of her oppressors.

Surely this is not saying "There is to be no second resurrection:" nor does our "theory" demand or necessitate such a conclusion.

We are glad our brother has at last got out of the symbols, where his and our opponents always go to prove eternal torments, which neither of us believe is taught there; but it is as really as the literal resurrection of the wicked dead.

"(4)." This then (Dan. xii., 2) is the first text in which "the affirmative of the resurrection of the wicked" is taught in the Bible. We have looked in vain for an affirmative text in proof that the wicked dead will ever live again. On the text before us, we need not dwell long.

"Many of does not mean all; and Br. Field contends the event here spoken of is at the commencement of our Lord's reign. If this event includes all men, then where will he get his second resurrection? and where will he get his "second death?" for this text imports the permanent state of all raised, or all spoken of. There, most certainly, is some "mistake about two classes awaking from the dust of the earth." We regret that our friend is so ready to assume that, if his view of a text is not the correct one "there is no certainty in language." We do not give up the Bible because we do not at once understand it all.

As to what "critics" may say, admitting the text relates to a literal resurrection, there are some of the first class of Hebrew scholars, men who believe with Dr. Field in the resurrection of the wicked, who have shown that the wicked are not embraced in the awaking in this text.

The true sense of the text may be expressed in the translation of Prof. WHITING, who is a firm believer in the living again of the wicked. He says—"There is an obscurity in this passage, produced by an improper rendering of the Hebrew words 'ailleh—weailleh.' They are translated in this instance, 'some—and some.' Now, the phrase, composed of the pronoun ailleh, with the conjunction waw (and) joined to ailleh, is the proper expression for these and those." He then translates the verse thus: "And many from the sleepers of the dust of the ground shall awake; these to everlasting life; and those to reproaches and everlasting abhorrence." "Those" are such as do not "awake;" and hence seem to remain unawakened in "everlasting abhorrence." Prof. BUSH renders it these and those, and says: "The awaking is evidently predicated of the many and not of the whole; consequently, the 'these' in the one case must be understood of the class that awakes, and the 'those' in the other of that which remains asleep."—Valley of Visions, p. 59.

Such being the facts, no argument in favor of the wicked dead being made alive again, can be strengthened by using this text; for when translated according to WHITING and BUSH it is against the wicked's living from the dead.

Whether the true rendering of the text, by the two Hebrew scholars named, does not "express the ideas of the believers in the non-resurrection of the wicked, and leave no room to doubt the correctness of their doctrine" judge ye. We confess in our mind there is no "doubt."

With high esteem and brotherly love we submit our response to Dr. Field.

DANIEL XII., 2.

SINCE concluding our remarks on this text, in reply to Dr. Field, we have been looking over Judge HALSTED's work on the THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE, and present the reader with the following extract from his remarks on the text. He says:

"In Dan. xii., 2, we have only to insert are before 'to (a) life eternal,' and are after 'others,' and this verse teaches what all Scripture teaches, namely, the resurrection of just, the and the non-resurrection of the unjust. The Hebrew Scriptures rarely, almost never, use the substantive verb, to be in any of its parts. Hence we have are, shall be, is, was, were, etc., inserted all through the different versions, including the English. And many such insertions are found in this very book of Daniel. And in this chap. xii., alone, we have inserted in the English version, verse 1, that shall be; v. 6, was, and it shall be; v. 7, was, and it shall be; v. 8, shall be; v. 9, are; v. 11, there shall be. And in this very verse, James' Ecclesiastics actually did insert a word, and that a word wrongly inserted; the Italian having inserted e, which is generally rendered and, though the English version sometimes renders it yea. The Italian gives, the ones to life eternal, and the others to infamy (e) to infamy eternal; the Latin gives, alii . . . . alii; to be rendered, some . . . . others: the Douay gives, some . . . . others: Greek, houtoi, these . . . . houtoi, others. The English version could insert a word it had no right to insert, but not a word which the sense requires to be inserted or to be understood, and which it inserts in numberless instances all through the Bible. And orthodoxy not only will not insert the proper word, nor agree that it is to be understood; but, in the first place, refuses to read these . . . . others, as if perceiving that these would refer to the 'many' that shall awake; and, next, (as it so becomes necessary it should do), for many, reads, all shall awake; and thus insists that this verse teaches, not only the resurrection of the just, but also the resurrection of the unjust, to orthodoxy's eternity of misery; and, having got thus far in its attempt to derive its dogma from this verse, (which is its standard Old Testament text for the dogma), it must of course crucify—subdue—the verse to the end, and insist, that shame (and) everlasting contempt, mean, eternal conscious misery. The insertion of are once in the verse, that is after these, is sufficient: these, that is, the 'many' who shall be awakened, are to a life eternal; but others, (necessarily meaning those who will not be awakened) to contempt eternal. Indeed, without inserting are at all, the verse is perfectly plain: Hebrew, yea many sleeping . . . . shall be awakened; these, i. e., these 'many,' to a life eternal; others, i. e., those who will not be awakened to contempt, etc., the word are would necessarily be to be understood after these, and after others."—Theo. of the Bible, pp. 580, 581.

To our mind nothing can be plainer than that "many of," excludes some from being awakened; and that those who are not awakened "remain in the congregation of the dead," Prov. xxi., 16; and remain to everlasting contempt; being "like the beasts that perish" . . . "like sheep they are laid in the grave" . . . . "the grave being the habitation of every one of them," (margin); "they shall never see light." Psa. xlix. In conclusion we may ask, would there ever have been a resurrection of any one if Christ had not died and rose again? There cannot be but one answer to this question by any Christian; and that is, No. Well, then, did Christ die and rise again to awake from the dead such as could awake only to die again or live in eternal torments? "God is love." That answers this question. Such an awaking is impossible. "Love" could never devise or suffer such a revolting absurdity.

FIFTY HYMNS.

THE need of a few select precious hymns, bound or in sheets, has long been felt; especially for tent and woods meetings; and can be used with advantage in all new places where the larger collections of our hymns are not used; also; in Sabbath schools.

In view of this, and in order to create a community of interest; it is proposed that the friends of the truth each select one or more favorite hymns, (naming the air,) and send with them one dollar for each hymn; in return for the same to receive the book at first cost. They are to be bound in convenient form and stereotyped.

In the event of the same hymn being sent by two or more, the right to choose another will be claimed, in order to save time or return the money. Let there be an immediate response, for the season has arrived to use them to advantage. Address E. WOLCOTT, Oceanport, N. J.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We commend the forgoing object, and hope all concerned, who favor it, will respond immediately. A friend says, "I will pay for three Hymns for B. Matthias." Let there be no delay in the matter.

OPPOSITION.

BY ELD. D. J. WEAVER.

BR. STORRS: I thought I must write a few thoughts on the subject of opposition. As all are well acquainted with the meaning of the word, I shall come directly to the subject.

When we go to the Bible, we find opposition has been from the commencement. Adam and his companion had a trial of it, and were overcome in the trial. But, thank God, there have been some that have stood the storm of opposition and come off victorious. As Jesus had it when on earth, shall we expect to get rid of it? No, never as long as we have the truth, and stand boldly for it in all its bearings; and especially when we hold forth the great crowning truth of the plan of redemption. Men may have opposition in their business transactions but they will contend and try to rise above it, and will succeed and come off victorious. Shall we not succeed if we contend for the right and do it in harmony with the gospel rule that is laid down for us? I think so. What will opposition do for us? It will make us the more firm for the right. We may have opposition and be in the wrong ourselves. But what is the cause of the opposition? Is it merely because you assume a position different from others, and then contend for it without positive proof to sustain the doctrine? If that be the case, you had better give it up, and just take a position that will stand an investigation. But when we are opposed for believing the plain, positive proof that is brought forward to sustain the doctrine that we believe, and have our names cast out as evil, then is the time that we need grace of God to withstand the opposition. But thank God his grace is sufficient and it will lead us to search more and more into the truth.

I suppose opposition is necessary for us, to prove us, and lead us the more carefully to investigate all the different points in our doctrine. We are not the first that have had an experience in those things. Jesus, the Captain of our salvation, had trials in that direction. And he plainly tells us that we are not above our Master. "If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you." From what source does this opposition? Mostly from those that profess to be Christians. Who was it that opposed Jesus? It was those that professed great things. But that did not make them good, any more than it does now. When truth is presented to the minds of people, in the love of it, it will do them no good to try to get a substitute for the truth in order to get rid of the opposition they might have to meet. When God has revealed the course we should pursue in order to get life in the future, it will do no good for us to try to get it some other way, in order to get rid of the opposing elements; for that would be contrary to the light we have received; and in the rejection of that light we shall get into darkness; and the result if persisted in, would be death, without recovery.

We must expect opposing elements as long as we are in this world; but, thank God, the time has almost arrived when it will be over. Opposition to the truth works in various ways. When they cannot meet the arguments, they will treat you as they did Christ. How was that? At one time they told him he "cast out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils." At another time, when brought into a straight place where they could not meet the argument, what then? "We are not born of fornication;" just as though that was enough.

Well, do we find any of that spirit now-a-days? I think so. Yea, I KNOW so. Such a course is not argumentative nor manly, to say nothing about christianity. The Lord have mercy on them; show them their ignorance and unchristian course. What is this all for? Because they do not believe the wicked dead will have any future life. Simply because they believe just what God declares in his holy word, "They are dead, they shall not live; They are deceased, they shall not rise." Positive language this, and I believe it. I should have thought the prophet would have said something about their dying the second time, if that was not the end of them. But he has not said any such thing, and with all the rest, he did not believe it, and neither do I, although men may assert it. But, thank God, opposition makes us the stronger and more firm in the truth. Glory to God, the pathway is bright. Amen.

MISSION TO THE FREEDMEN.

WE select the following from a communication of D. D. REED, who is connected with the mission in Memphis, Tenn. It gives us pleasure to learn of the prosperity of all such labors among the colored people. We are glad to know that the gospel of Life and the kingdom is published among them, and pray it may abundantly prosper and spread. Mr. REED says:

We are still in the field warring a good warfare. We are in the new chapel, and the Lord is with us. We are having a glorious reformation. God is well pleased with this movement. The word of God is running and being glorified. There is a great work being done in this place. They believe that Jesus is soon coming. It would do you good to be here at our meetings. We have been holding meetings every night for some time, and do not give them up, the interest is so great to hear the word of God. The Lord gives us great liberty in expounding the Scriptures of truth.

I expect to leave soon, the heat is so great I can not hold meetings in my tent, for the reason the canvas draws the sun, and makes it so hot. I intend to go about fourteen hundred miles with my tent to a new field where it is cooler. Pray for us.

Br. Leslie and Sr. Northrup have about two hundred and seventy scholars in the school. All hands are full. We hope to be found at our post when our Lord comes. Do not forget us, far away from home. Yours, looking forward to a better land.

OBITUARY.

FELL ASLEEP IN JESUS—In Gerry, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., May 13, 1868, Eld. JONATHAN WILSON—the old Pilgrim "BIBLEITE"—aged ninety-one years, one month and one day.

He has been a minister of the gospel for about sixty years. He was formerly a Baptist minister, but, for eighteen or twenty years past, he has been a true and firm believer of the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, and of future life only through him.

During the full exercise of his mental faculties, which was up to a little over two years ago, the great doctrine of life only through Christ was his constant theme. He has resided for the last sixteen years with his son, W. R. WILSON; who, together with his wife, has done all that could be done for his comfort while he was passing down to the tomb; especially after his mental or reasoning faculties totally failed, when he needed much care and watchfulness.

A discourse was delivered by the writer from Rev. xiv., 13, which was by his own request and selection, made by him nearly four years ago. Truly a good man has gone down in a good old age; and left the savor of a Christian life behind him to bless and comfort the world. He rests from his labors and his works do follow him. They pass down through society, and among us, as ensamples for us and others to imitate. If all would copy the example of Father WILSON, in their social and religious life, there would be but little sin and wickedness in our world. Hundreds now rise up and call him blessed, and the Holy Spirit says, he is "blessed" in the Lord.

To show the moral and religious condition of his mind, I quote from a letter received from him in Jan. 1864. He says, "I enjoy the comforts of life without pain or disease upon me. But the evidence of the near coming of Christ thickens fast. I have the happiest meditations on the Scriptures that I ever had in my life. Yet I discover more of proneness to evil in myself than I ever did before. This enlarges my view of the virtue in Christ to save sinners. Yet my hope remains strong, and without a doubt that I shall at last, through grace alone, inherit the kingdom of God."

Again, he said, "My main business now is to prepare for my death and burial. This is my warfare which death will end. Amen." Again he said, "I have lived long enough, and have done all the good I could, therefore, may my amen be felt by us all."

"God of my childhood and my youth,
The guide of all my days,
I have declar'd thy heav'nly truth,
And told thy wondrous ways.

The land of silence and of death,
Attends my next remove;
O may the poor remains of breath
Teach the wide world thy love!

When I lie buried deep in dust,
My flesh shall be thy care;
These with'ring limbs with thee I trust,
To raise them strong and fair."

He leaves a large circle of children and grandchildren and friends to mourn their loss, but not without hope.

C. W. LOW.

Fredonia, N. Y., May 17, 1868.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—The foregoing from Br. Low is the first we have heard from our much loved Br. WILSON for near two years, at which time his son informed us that his father's mental faculties had failed. We have often wondered, since, that we heard nothing from him, and have many times had it on our mind to write to some one in that vicinity to inquire concerning him. We expected the event which has occurred, knowing that after his reason gave way he could not long survive. Though the event was expected, we feel a sort of sadness come over us, as we see our aged associates yield to mortality, and sink down in the grave. We knew for several years before the final failure of his mental faculties that those powers were becoming impaired. Still, he bore up manfully, and his strong faith, doubtless, helped to prevent their giving entirely away at an earlier period.

Our first knowledge, or personal acquaintance with Br. WILSON was some twenty years since, at Canandaigua, N. Y., where we had an appointment to preach for a week. He came some seventy-five miles on purpose to see and hear us; and our interview was of the most interesting and comforting character. He was then about seventy years of age. From that time onward the most cordial feeling existed between us. Though our personal interviews were few, they were sweet and comforting: we loved as brethren and friends of Jesus our Lord and LIFE-GIVER. In our Life views, so far as we know, there was a perfect agreement; and the cordiality and affection with which he always greeted us was well calculated to bind our heart to him with kindred love. He sleeps in Jesus, but he will awake at his Lord's call, when Jesus shall return "from heaven" to "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. iii., 20, 21. Then, we trust, we shall meet again to die no more.

In a private letter from Br. Low, accompanying the foregoing, he says:

"I send you an obituary of the death of our aged father JONA. WILSON, thinking that it might be a pleasure to you to give it an insertion in your paper. He thought much of you and of your valuable paper. I regard him as one of the noblest works of God, 'an honest man.' Hence, he has gone down to rest but a little while, then to come up in the likeness of Christ—and in the full beauty and glory of immortality, to enjoy eternal life in the kingdom of God. He has done a great deal of good in the world, and he is, therefore, worthy of a good name, which is worth more than silver or gold. It would give me great pleasure to have some remarks from Br. STORRS in connection with what I have written. My hope of life through Christ alone, and the resurrection, is still good. I am waiting and watching unto prayer for His coming. I am preaching a little now and then, here and there, trying to do some good in my Master's vineyard while he is absent; hoping to be received by him when he comes. I am, as ever, your brother in Christ, looking for him to come and bring in immotality, eternal life.

FROM ELD. E. B. TAFT.

STOCKTON, CAL., May 1, 1868.

BR. STORRS: The books, as per my orders, all came duly to hand; also, a good supply of tracts; all of which are being used as opportunity offers, and I trust doing a good work. Our numbers do not increase very rapidly, yet we are constantly gaining ground. The Life theme is becoming more and more precious and lovely, to our bretheren here. Elder Knapp's course here has only stimulated them to greater efforts to understand God's faithful word.

I keep hoping that I may find more to take our valuable paper, but you can realize how hard it is to make progress against the opposition and prejudice of the popular Christianity, "so called," extant. It is hard to eradicate error when it has such firm hold of the people. But we will not be discouraged. For we know we have the Truth, and God's word that he will bless it. May our great Redeemer's blessings attend you, in all your labors of love. From your brother in the Gospel of Hope.

HELP WANTED.

ELD. J. LEWIS writes, from Mode, Ill., that he is in great need of a fellow laborer—the calls for preaching are more than he can possibly fill. He says, Br. D. L. OSBORN, Findley's Lake, N. Y., is ready and willing to come into Ill., and labor for six months, or longer; but cannot command his money, at present; yet he will go, if any person or persons will loan him $20 on $25. Br. Lewis asks, "Who will lend a helping hand? The cause demands help here. Say, will you communicate with Br. Osborn, at his residence named above?"

PRIDE IN DRESS.

DIOGENES being at Olympia, saw at the celebrated festival some young men of Rhodes arrayed most magnificently. Smiling, he exclaimed, "this is pride." Afterward, meeting with some Lacedemonians in a mean and sordid dress, he said, "And this is also pride."

Of course, people are sometimes so circumstanced that they cannot afford even moderately good attire, but many, Christian people, too, wear peculiar styles of dress for no other reason than that they thus gratify a morbid desire for singularity in that respect. So long as people wear clothes they must have some fashion or other; and we think it an excellent plan to neither take the lead nor entirely disregard, but follow at an humble distance; so that while we avoid peculiarity we do not encourage extravagance. Some people are extremely particular, and some extremely careless respecting personal appearance. The former is an undesirable and expensive habit, the latter very repulsive; both being dangerous. The former, however, has the advantage of embracing cleanliness, which is a virtue, while the latter embraces the opposite, which is a vice. Cleanliness often exists without godliness, but no considerable degree of godliness is ever found without cleanliness; which, as it costs nothing, is a luxury all may enjoy. The fact should not be overlooked that the practice of extremes in point of dress and personal appearance in general, are alike the offspring of pride, and neither practicer nor observer need be deceived.

THE GREAT AIMS OF RELIGION.

WERE a man (says Dr. Barrow) designed only, like a fly, to buzz about here for a time, sucking in the air and licking in the dew, then soon to vanish back into nothing, or to be transformed into worms, how sorry and despicable a thing were he! And such, without religion, we should be. But it supplieth us with business of a most worthy nature and lofty importance; it setteth us upon doing things great and noble as can be; it engageth us to free our minds from all fond conceits, and to cleanse our hearts from all corrupt affections, to curb our brutish appetites, to tame our wild passions, to correct our perverse inclinations, to conform the disposition of our souls and the actions of our lives to the eternal laws of righteousness and goodness.

It putteth us upon the imitation of God, and aiming at the resemblance of his perfections; upon obtaining a friendship, and maintaining a correspondence with the high and holy above; upon fitting our minds for conversation and society with the wisest and purest spirits above; upon providing for an immortal state; upon the acquisition of joy and glory everlasting.

FRIENDS AT HOME.

THE Friends present a model of interior home life. They cultivate the amenities, the consideration, the cheer, and the abundance which make a home happy. They speak to one another with surpassing gentleness; they smile upon one another with a sweet benignity; they welcome the visitor to astounding hospitality. Their religion consists in creating happiness in the household. They are gentle, loving, and attentive to children. They seek to promote like docility and cheerfulness among the "rising generation." They are equally attentive to old age, with a chastened respectfulness of manner which exalts the self-respect of declining years. Whatever can be done to make a home comfortable and cheery is first to be done. Other Christians deny to themselves home comforts for the sake of preaching the gospel to the heathen, but the Society of Friends believe that charity begins at home. Their gospel is one of home peace. Their heaven on earth is to win some foretaste of the "rest which remaineth for the children of God." They exemplify what the Christian fireside ought to be—warm without heat, cheerful without excitement, bright without dazzle.

PRAYING FOR THE POOR.

WE are taught in the Bible to pray for the poor, but in the Scriptures a great deal more is said about giving to the poor than about praying for them. Probably no class of people are more frequently remembered in prayer than the congregation of the Lord's poor, and yet it is to be feared that most of those who pray for the poor do but little if anything to supply their wants.

A farmer whose cribs were full of corn was accustomed to pray that the wants of the needy might be supplied, but when any one in needy circumstances asked for a little of his corn, he said he had none to spare. One day, after hearing his father pray for the poor and the needy, his little son said to him: "Father, I wish I had your corn."

"Why, my son, what would you do with it?" asked the father. The child replied:

"I would answer your prayers."

We can answer our own prayers oftener than we think. With regard to the poor, Jesus says: "Ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will, ye may do them good." How many answers to prayer depend on our willingness to do good!—Sunday School Times.

A FAITHFUL WITNESS.

JOHN JAY, when ambassador to France, was once in a company of infidels at Paris. They talked on recklessly, venting their spite at the Bible. Jay was silent. It troubled them. He did not pronounce their shibboleth. They could not go on while that grave, just, true man sat there a silent spectator, a sort of solemn judge, rivetting at their gaze. No wonder his bearing forced them to speak, and when they asked, as if to relieve themselves of their confusion and to provoke his acquiescence, "Do you believe in Jesus Christ?" his silence had prepared the way for his confusing and confounding answer: "I do, and I thank God that I do." He was silent at the right time, and spoke at the right time, and when he spoke, said the right thing.

LIVE FOR SOMETHING.

THOUSANDS of men breathe, move, and live, pass off the stage of life, and are heard of no more. Why? None were blessed by them; none could point to them as the means of their redemption; not a word they spoke could be recalled, and so they perished; their light went out in darkness, and they were not remembered more than the insects of yesterday.

Will you thus live and die? O man, live for something! Do good, and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the storm can never destroy. Write your name by kindness, love, and mercy on the hearts of thousands you come in contact with year by year, and you will never be forgotten. No, your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind, as the stars on the brow of evening. Good deeds will shine as bright on the earth as the stars of heaven. —Dr. Chalmers.

A ROMAN correspondent of the Independence Belge, when speaking of the present condition of Rome, says:—

"Misfortune, it is well known, has the power of humbling the pride of the court of Rome. The isolation in which it stands, and the perils with which it is threatened, might render it more tractable, if not more reasonable, and it would be desirable, to profit by its present position in order to impress upon it conditions. The Roman government is dragging out the last days of its existence painfully. Its authority is giving way; its prestige is vanishing, it is bending beneath the weight of its debt and its financial embarrassments; its friends are abandoning it, and its creatures are preparing to worship the rising sun. The old machine is out of order; it is time to renovate it. The clericals have lost their arrogance; they feel that power is escaping them. In vain do their allies, the Bourbons, hold their banquets, sparkling with the champagne supplied by Francis II. to celebrate the battle of Custozza; all these are begging humbly to say that an Italy, great and powerful, would not displease them, provided the rights of the church and the independence, of the holy father, which no one seeks to disregard, were respected."

THE BEAUTIES OF RELIGION.—IN conversing with those who have an aversion to religion, we should begin by showing them that it is by no means contrary to reason; in the next place, that it is worthy of veneration, to inspire them with respect for it; and after this we should describe it as lovely, to make them wish it to be true; and then we may demonstrate it to them by irrefragable proofs that it is true; we may show them its antiquity and holiness, its majesty and sublimity, and finally show them it is amicable in that it holds out to us the true good.—Pascal.

A WRITER in the N. Y. Evangelist conjectures that the ark may have sailed around the world during its five months' voyage; it would naturally sail toward the East; in going entirely around Noah would gain a day, making the sixth day the seventh; therefore Christ, in changing the Sabbath to the first day of the week, only restored it to its primitive place in the week before the flood. Such an imaginative writer need never be idle for lack of subjects for speculation.

LINES:

BY MRS. L. R. K. BISHOP.

Written on the death of J. Frankie Collins, only son of Mrs. J. Collins, Oceanport, N. J.

WHERE are the precious little feet,
Once busy all the day,
Skipping so lightly o'er the grass,
Like the sweet lambs at play;
Now tripping down the garden walk,
Where pussy waits his call,
And now his merry, ringing laugh,
Re-echoing through the hall.

And those fair arms, which used to steal,
In such a winning way,
Around my neck so lovingly,
Oh, tell me—where are they?
Methinks the magic of their touch,
Could I but feel them now,
Would drive the dull pain from my heart,
The shadows from my brow.

Oh, how intensely I have longed
(I know the thought is vain),
To press those sweet, those dewy lips
Unto my own again.
To feel once more, upon my cheek,
His fragrant breath, and hear
Him saying so caressingly,
"My darling mamma dear."

I mind me, how beside the gate,
He stood, so wistful, when
I left him, dreaming not that death
Had marked him, even then;
But when I clasped him to my heart,
In fond embrace again,
Fever was burning in his blood,
And raging in his brain.

A sickening sense of coming grief
Clouded my spirits o'er,
(E'en pussy waited anxiously Beside the parlor door;)
But yet I could not feel that death
Would claim my precious one:
Insatiate archer! he hath slain
The widow's only son!

The hopes I cherished, all the years,
While he was lent to me,
Are perished in that little grave
Beneath the cypress tree:
And now the world seems strangely dark,
But to faith's calm, clear eye,
The resurrection star lights up
The gloom-enshrouded sky.

Soon he who is the way, the truth,
The life, will come to reign,
And all his loved and loving ones
He'll cause to live again:
And when he gathers all the pearls,
And makes the jewels his,
He'll suffer little ones to come—
Of such the kingdom is.

DOG CARO.

"I CANNOT tell how it is," said Louis, "that our little dog Caro never seems to like me. He always growls when I go near him, and he never plays with me like does with you."

The two boys had a little black dog, which was generally very good indeed, but he knew very well how to resent an injury. His name was Caro, and he had been trained to practise a good many little arts. He could stand upon his hind feet and even walk on them a dozen steps; would carry a little stick in his right paw; wear a hat; take a little basket in his mouth and swim out in the pond with the end of a string, and so help to pull a little boat along. But he would not do these things for everybody; if he did not like certain persons, he would not pay the slightest attention to them, and if they came too near him, and interfered with him much, he would growl at them, and even seize hold of them.

Theodore was Caro's great friend, and it was he who had taught the little dog so many cunning tricks. Louis was in the habit of striking Caro if he did anything that did not please him; and if he walked across the room, and Caro was lying in the way, he would be just as apt to tread on his tail as not, though you would have thought that Caro's catching hold of him and tearing his clothes several times would have taught him better manners.

One day Louis was reading a story in a little book, which told about a dog that could catch a little apple in his mouth from the opposite side of the room. Just then Caro was lying not a great way from him, and Master Louis thought that he would try the experiment on him, so he took a little apple out of his pocket and said, "Caro, Caro! here, here!" and then, just while Caro was looking at him, he tossed the apple at the dog and hit him on the nose. It hurt Caro very much, and he jumped at Louis as savagely as if he was going to eat him up. Caro would probably have bitten Louis if he had not defended himself very well. A little while after that, Theodore came into the room, when Louis told him all that had occurred.

"Now," said Louis, "here is a story of a dog that would catch an apple in his mouth, and our Caro not only would not catch an apple that I threw him, but actually became very angry with me for doing it."

"I will tell you what is your trouble," said Theodore, in reply. "You don't treat Caro well, and that is the reason why he don't treat you well. When you threw the apple at him I expect he thought you were angry with him and wanted to hurt him, for I never knew Caro try to hurt anybody except in self-defence."

"But," said Louis, "he does everything that you tell him, never gets angry with you, will help you sail your boat, will go and hunt up your knife if you hide it, will get up in the chair and take your hat off from the nail, will go and get your cane, and, in fact, will do almost anything you tell him. But he has never done anything of the kind for me in his life."

"I will tell you," said Theodore, "how you can make Caro do what you want him. Never tread on his tail, and never kick him; but give some nice little things to eat, occasionally. Pat him on the head and make him think that you love him. Just as soon as you have made Caro think that you really love him, he will do just as much for you as he has done for me—will never bite you, and will be your fast friend under all circumstances."

"I cannot think that," said Louis.

"But," said Theodore, "there is no more reason why he should not like you than me. A dog is just like a boy—he likes the people that like him and treat him well."

"How long will it take to treat Caro well," asked Louis, "in order to convince him that I like him?"

"Oh! I don't know," said Theodore; "it depends on the way you act toward him. It may take a month or it may take longer; all that depends more on yourself than on Caro."

Louis promised that he would do everything that he could to make Caro his friend, and so he began at once to pat him. The first time that Louis put his hand on Caro's head to pat him, the dog snarled and growled as angrily as he had ever done before, for he was almost sure that Louis was going to strike him. Louis let him alone for that time, but every day he showed some little attention to Caro, and finally could pat him and show himself friendly to him without Caro's ever barking or appearing to be angry at him.

During the first month that Louis treated Caro well, the intimacy between them strengthened very much, and after six weeks had expired, Caro would follow Louis out into the street, would go and get his cane for him, and would also get his hat from the nail, just as he had been in the habit of getting Theodore's hat. So, in due time, Caro became just as much a friend of Louis as of Theodore.

Theodore had noticed this wonderful change that had taken place in his brother's treatment of Caro, and said to him:

"Now, didn't I tell you that Caro would love you just as much as me? all you had to do was simply to treat him well in order to gain his good feeling. Now you have it, and he is just as willing to play for you, and practise his little tricks to amuse you, as he is to do it for me."

"You are right," said Louis; "and, though you are younger than I am, you have taught me a very useful lessen. To the latest day of my life I shall know that if I want to gain the goodwill of either a dog, or a boy, or a man, I must first of all show them that I do not hate them, but love them."

Thirty years made great changes in the history of these two boys. They both had been very successful in their undertakings, and were engaged in extensive business, though one lived in Berlin, and the other lived far off in Switzerland. It had been the custom of the brothers to write to each other on the anniversary of their birthdays, and at the last anniversary of Theodore's birthday, I will tell you something that Louis wrote to him:

"The memory of your kind treatment of our little dog, Caro, so many years ago, has always been very useful to me. I firmly believe that the hour when you told me that I must treat Caro well, if I would have him treat me well, was the real turning-point in my life. When I found that even a little black dog which had always hated me before, became fond of me because I showed him kindness, it made me think that not only brutes but even men would be good to me if I showed them kindness. I have never been disappointed, and I must thank you, my dear brother, though we are both in middle life, for the lesson that you taught me when I was a child. As I have practised it from the time you taught it to me to the present, and have, in so many instances, been benefitted by it, you may be sure that I will not now forget it. Receive my congratulations, and please accept an oil-painting, by the best French artist, which you will probably receive by the expressman the same evening that you receive this letter."

The picture arrived not more than an hour after the letter was received. What do you think it was? Why, it was a beautiful oil-painting, one side of which represented a boy throwing an apple at a dog, and the dog in the act of springing at the boy. The other side of the picture represented the same dog and boy as friends. The dog was standing on his hind legs, holding a cane in his right paw, and doffing his little felt hat, and bowing to his new friend. This picture recalled still more distinctly than the letter had done the incident that had occurred in the history of Louis and his brother so many years before. His eyes filled with tears of gratitude that he had been the instrument of doing a little good, and he said to himself: "If a little thing can do so much good, how much more good should I now do, with my riper judgment and increased opportunities!"—The Methodist.

THE VISIONS OF DANIEL.

IN reading the book of Daniel, without looking through other people's glasses, serious questions have arisen in my mind as to the applications which many have made of the visions of Daniel. That the book is but partially understood, is obvious from the difference of opinion which exists among those that have studied it most. When we have reached the time when that it is to be understood, events will mark it so plain that the wise need not differ. So it seems to me.

Those that have a theory in which to bring about a certain event in a given time, can and do, with a good degree of ingenuity, find a fulfilment in the past of all prophecy relating to events which were to take place prior to the second advent of our Lord.

I believe that all commentators and writers on this book are agreed in the interpretation of the great image which Nebuchadnezzar the king saw. We pass to chap. vii., 21, and it declares this little horn "made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of days came . . . . and the time that the saints possessed the kingdom."

Question. Where is now, or has been in the past seventy-five years, war upon the children of God?

We will next notice the second vision of Daniel. The question is asked, "How long shall be the vision concerning the daily, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?" Ans., "Unto two thousand three hundred days, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." As Daniel was somewhat disturbed, and in doubt about the matter, the angel says unto him, "Understand, O, son of man; for at the time of the end shall be the vision." What vision? Why, the vision which Daniel saw, and which Gabriel was commanded to make him understand; the vision of the treading down of the sanctuary and host, to continue 2,300 days. For some reason, not given, Daniel went to sleep under the preaching of the angel; and after being awakened, the angel says to him, "Behold, I will make thee to know what shall be in the last end of the indignation." Here again the vision is spoken of as being in the time of the end. Question. If the time of the end began since 1792, where has there been a fulfilment of the vision?

We will next come to the third vision of Daniel. In chap. x., 14, the angel declares, "I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days! for yet the vision is for many days."

Question. Who are meant by "thy people?" Daniel's people? Are they Christian Jews and Gentiles, who have suffered from papal persecution in the past? or are they the literal descendants of Israel? now scattered among nations of the earth, though long since having ceased from being a nation, yet have retained their individuality unto the present time; and who are to be gathered to their own land as Gentile rule and domination come to an end.

I have not seen an exposition of the latter part of chap. xi., from verse 40. What is there recorded was to take place in the time of the end. Has it taken place? If it has not, no one need ask if it will. "For not one jot or tittle shall pass from the law till all be fulfilled."

I have read in the Crisis a severe criticism upon Br. Thurman's "Sealed book of Daniel opened;" and since, a challenge from Br. Thurman to the Critic to meet him in a public discussion of the subject. This seems right. If the work will not bear investigation, let us know it. If it be generally grounded in truth, although containing more or less errors, let the errors be sifted out, that the truth may shine the brighter. Your brother, searching truth.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The foregoing was written for, and sent to, the Crisis, but its insertion was declined; we publish it by Br. Ellsworth's request.

IS THE POPE, OR THE PAPACY, ANTICHRIST?

[Written for the Crisis, but declined. Will the HERALD OF LIFE give it an insertion?]

THIS question seems to be gaining in importance, and as it is a question on the minds of many; it becomes the Bible student and searcher after truth, to examine the subject carefully.

The solution and correct understanding of who is, or is to be the antichrist power, which was to be developed in the last days, is of vital importance to us at this time, that we may know our proximity to the day of our Lord's second coming.

That the papacy is not the antichrist of the last days, I am satisfied can be shown, with scarcely a shadow of doubt. Let us proceed to compare the papal power with what is written in the word of God, and see if it will fill the mould of prophecy.

First, I would remark, that the spirit of antichrist and antichrist personified, the son of perdition, are very different in their characteristics. The disciple may have, or manifest the spirit of his Lord, and yet be only the disciple. The Jews manifested the spirit of antichrist, in that they denied that Jesus Christ had come in the flesh. 1 John iv., 3. In chap. ii., 18, we are told that there are many antichrists, i. e., the spirit of antichrist manifest in different phases.

We will now turn our attention to Rev. xiii., 11, and onward. To prove that the papacy was antichrist, and that the prophecy under consideration had its fulfilment in the past, it has been shown that there was a time when the papal church was prohibited from buying or selling, or transacting any business with those who were regarded as heretics by the church of Rome. This does not fill the mould of prophecy, by any means. The decree is, "That no man might buy and sell, save he that had the mark of the beast."

Here is an entire prohibition, that no man could buy or sell, or transact any business whatsoever, except he had this certain mark. And more, whomsoever would not bow down and worship this image of the beast, should be killed.

I am inclined to believe that those "souls under the altar" are waiting still for "their fellow-servants also, and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled."

Then, again; this wicked one, this Man of sin, that should be revealed in the last time, is to be destroyed, by the Lord, with the spirit of his mouth, and with the brightness of his coming. 2 Thes. ii., 10.

By a careful reading of Revelation, concerning "mystical Babylon," we discover that her judgment and desolation comes upon her after the resurrection of the dead saints, and translation of the living ones.

See chap. xviii.; and in verse 20, the redeemed apostles and prophets are called upon to rejoice over her having seen the judgments which God had brought upon her. In chap. xix., 1, John says, "I heard the voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia," etc.; and in verse 5, "A voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him both small and great." "Dead men praise not the Lord," and it will be necessary for them to be raised before they can witness the judment upon the great Harlot.

The writer of the article in the "Messenger," which appeared in the Crisis of March 4, headed, "Spiritualism: what is it, and whence is it?" after showing conclusively that Paul was prophesying concerning the very subject under consideration, found in his first Epistle to Timothy, iv., 1, "That in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of demons," etc., turns to 2 Thess. ii., 3, which speaks of the man of sin and says, "Which undoubtedly refers to the papacy," finds in the continuation of the subject in verse 9, the very prophecy which he concedes, and believes to apply to modern spiritualism.

The foregoing is submitted for the candid consideration of the readers of the Crisis, the writer only desiring in meekness and humility to know the truth as it is in Jesus.

THE STATE OF EUROPE.

THERE has been for the last ten months a comparative quiet in European political affairs.

Garibaldi's repulse in Italy served to delay the hostile complications which then threatened. But the lull of battle has not been unimproved in preparations for new and more terrific outbreaks.

From an article in the April number of Lippincott's Magazine, written by Louis Blanc, one of the most observant, thoughtful and impressive writers in Europe, we have a statement of the present status of public affairs on the Eastern side of the Atlantic, which shows an oppressive condition of the political atmosphere there, presaging an unprecedented and sweeping hurricane from one quarter or another.

France is saddled with an army bill confessedly intended to make the French army an irresistible engine of destruction. The term of service has been increased from seven to nine years—five years to be spent under the colors, and four in the reserve. 800,000 men will be called upon to enable France to "hold her head up in Europe." In addition to this, a movable National Guard is created, with a view to garrison all the country in war-time, and strengthen, by 400,000 men, the fighting resources of the empire. Thus the army bill places 1,200,000 drilled soldiers at the disposal, not of the people, mark you, but of one man. And this is not meant only to provide for remote contingencies: no; it is well understood that the provisions of the bill are to come into operation at once. The young men hitherto exempted from military service, and now doomed to from part of the movable National Guard, which Marshal Neil significantly declared to be "destined to have a great future," are all available. They can be drilled within a few months—can be summoned to their respective battalions immediately. Fortresses have been repaired. The artillery is in a perfect state. Twenty thousand cavalry horses, purchased in Hungary, have been forwarded to Trieste, and thence to Marseilles. Gun-makers are busy manufacturing those Chassepot rifles which did, at Mentana, such fearful execution, and are expected to meet with advantage the Prussian needle-guns.

But a few days ago a placard was posted on the walls of the Ministry of Finance, in Paris, announcing that, in a few weeks' time, the Government will be prepared to receive tenders for the supply of 2,588,800 powder-boxes. Nor are warlike preparations confined to the land forces. The greatest activity prevails in the French maritime arsenals. Thirty-nine ships of different sizes are at present in course of construction. When they are built, the fleet ready for sea—which already comprises three hundred and forty-eight men-of-war steamers and one hundred and sixteen sailing ships—will amount to five hundred and three vessels. It is asserted by the Kronstadt Wiestnik—the official organ of the Russian admiralty—that every arrangement has been made at Toulon to embark forty thousand men. So much for the naval forces. As to the land forces, France before long will be armed to the teeth, and Napoleon III. will have at his command a more formidable army than that which, under his great uncle, invaded Russia.

Now, what are they doing on the other side of the Rhine? Baron von Beust is said to have sent to foreign governments a circular informing them that "Prussia was effecting considerable and threatening increase in her armament." It is also given out that she is sending needle-guns and officers of instruction to St. Petersburg. At all events, one may safely infer, from the eagerness with which Count Bismark strives to tighten the bonds of German unity—as shown by his sharp remonstrance to the Government of Hesse Darmstadt on its separate acceptance of a European conference—that the German Premier clearly foresees a stout contest, and that he intends to make ready for it.

Russia could not remain behind her neighbors in preparing for battle. She also found it necessary to improve her guns, and the Invalide Russe took care to acquaint the world with the fact that the Russian Government had decided on adopting the Karl breech-loader—a weapon the accuracy of which, we are told, is not impaired by thirty thousand shots.

The reported reduction of the Austrian military force is contradicted point blank by the Gazette Naradowa of Lemberg, stating that in Austria, military preparations on a vast scale are being pressed on; that Austria's stores are full of provisions; that by spring there will be a concentration of troops around Cracow; that the hussars of Count Halley's corps have received notice to have their stores ready and to be prepared for a campaign. "Should any power presume to attack Austria," exclaimed, the other day, Count Andrassy, the President of the Hungarian ministry, "it would be found that Austria backed by us, is not to be ranked among invalid nations." Meanwhile, numbers of Austrian workmen are described manufacturing Wentzel guns and moulding bullets and casting cannons. The effective of the regiments cantoned in Gallicia is about to be completed, and they will be reinforced by Hungarian troops as soon as the Carpathian Mountains, at present snowed up, become passable.

Whether there be any foundation in the boast of the Neapolitan papers that Italy is in possession of a new rifle invented by Cav. Badiole da Prota, Captain Domenico Gamanna and Signor Domenico Antonio Scarfo, which is capable of being fired at the rate of fifty shots a minute, may require some further elucidation; but that Italy is boiling with rage is a matter of course. What can be more characteristic than a letter written the 22d of December by Garabaldi to the survivors of Mentana: "I have received from a lady the following motto: 'Victory is achieved by perseverance.' I hope Italy will remember this motto next spring." It is obvious that the Italians have not forgotten how effectually the defeat of Custozza happened to contribute to the victory of Sadowa. They bide their time till the French difficulty becomes the Italian opportunity.

And what about England? England, if not smitten with anything like war spirit, is, at any rate, worried into hankering after the discovery of the best means by which her army, her militia, and her volunteers might be brought shoulder to shoulder in defence of the kingdom. After having, during ten years of uninterrupted peace, considerably increased her naval and military establishments, she feels rather inclined to measure her necessities by the bloated armaments of the military nations of the continent. Seeing that Prussia, with a population of nineteen millions only, had been able at a cost of less then £7,000,000 to put into the field half a million soldiers, well-equipped and trained, the Times, one fine morning, complained bitterly that the United Kingdom could do nothing of the kind with a population of thirty millions, a revenue of £70,090,000, and the power of spending upon the army £14,000,000, instead of £7,000,000. Ever since, the complaint has been echoed by almost every organ of public opinion. Are, then, the shores of England defenceless? Is her military organization effete? Never was, in this country, the fact so generally and so sharply asserted. I have before me a letter of Lord Ranelagh, in which he does not hesitate to term the English volunteers "a mere crowd of coated playthings." So keenly alive is England to the impending danger, that the prince of her peace-loving philosophers has begun to sound the note of alarm. In the last session Mr. John Stuart Mill went so far as to call upon England boldly to disown the declaration of Paris of 1866, respecting the right of seizing enemies' goods in neutral vessels. The strengthening to the utmost of naval powers Mr. John Stuart Mill was heard to advocate, on the ground that now-a-days military powers must by all means be checked; warring against the commerce of the enemy, he, a great economist, recommends as the weapon which England ought to resume without delay, because it is for the general interest of the world, if there is to be fighting, that every power should fight with its natural weapons and with its best strength. In the meantime, the English fleet in the Mediterranean has, according to the last accounts, received orders to take in provisions and to be ready on a short notice; many officers on furlough have been recalled, and all ships on foreign stations ordered home that could possibly be spared.

Such are the prospects of Europe. True, soothing assurances are not wanting; so much so that, if language had not been invented, in M. de Talleyrand's phrase, for the express purpose of concealing thought, we might rest and be thankful. Nothing, for example, can be more pacific than the present declarations of Prussia, and it is quite edifying to see how cordially the Berlin press grasps the cordial hand held out to it by the Vienna press.—Selected.

THE foregoing is anything but indicative of peace. The signs of the times may well be observed. Ambition, thirst for power, is seen on every side, at home and abroad. Let Christians be warned that the end of this age is near, and keep themselves in the love of God.—ED. HERALD.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life but of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY; by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTERS TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburg, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for 2 cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our own expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price, 5 cents.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

INHERENT IMMORTALITY.

THE doctrine of the immortality of the soul of man, in a separate state of being from the body, lies at the foundation of the various systems of theology that, at the present day are taught in the schools, and in the nominally Christian church. This assertion needs no proof; as no one who is in the least acquainted with the nature of the subject and with the facts in the case, will presume to deny it. Indeed, so closely is this doctrine interwoven with the different creeds of the church, and so essential an element is it in their very foundation, that they cannot be separated, and with it they must stand or fall.

But notwithstanding this is so, and therefore the minds of many may be shocked at anything like a denial of this, their darling and fundamental dogma, we shall prove, both from reason and the word of God, that the sentiment or doctrine that the soul of man survives the body at death, and continues to exist in a conscious state of happiness or misery is utterly false and of mischievous tendency.

"Infidelity!" cries the sectarian bigot, "he denies a future state of reward and punishment." Well, before we have done, we will show that the very fact that the immortality of the soul is regarded as indispensably necessary to a future state of conscious being, proves the doctrine to be mischievous in its effect, inasmuch as it bases all hope of eternal life and blessedness upon a false foundation.

The gospel that was preached by Christ and his apostles does not make the hope of the Christian to depend, for its consummation, upon death and the soul's immortality, but upon the resurrection of the dead. In Luke xx., 37, 38, our Lord says, "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living." Here we are taught by him who cannot lie, that inasmuch as the Lord is the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and yet he is the God of the living and not of the dead, those ancient patriarchs named, who were dead, must live again. The declaration of the Lord that he was their God, proved their resurrection. But if their souls were then in conscious existence, was he not their God even without their resurrection? Most certainly. But as without this resurrection he could not be their God, it follows that they were not then in conscious existence.

Again in John vi., 39, Christ declares, "And this is the Father's will who hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." And in Luke xiv., 14, he says, "thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Thus taught our Lord Jesus Christ, and whoever teaches a contrary doctrine is antichrist. The apostles also, in all their teachings, made the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ and the resurrection of the just, the grand theme—the only blessed hope. To the Athenian philosophers Paul seemed a setter forth of strange gods, because he preached unto them Jesus and resurrection: and in the fifteenth chapter of his first epistle to the Corinthians, he declares plainly that if the dead rise not, then they that had fallen asleep in Christ were perished. But if the soul be immortal, how does it follow that the sleeping saints were perished, even though the dead should not rise? Certainly they are not perished if in a state of consciousness and bliss. Therefore the only hope for the child of God is the coming of the Lord and the resurrection: and whoever teaches that the soul of the believer enters into a state of heavenly blessedness at death, preaches another gospel.

Thus we see that the theology of the schools and of the professing church, and the teachings of Christ and his apostles, are directly opposed to each other. The gospel of Christ bases the hope of the church upon the sure foundation of Jesus and the resurrection, while scholastic theology places it upon the fable of the immortality of the soul. As the teaching of this other gospel is calculated to make the true hope of the gospel regarded as of no consequence, or at most of but secondary importance, and to lessen in the mind the value and importance of the true foundation or object of the believer's faith and hope, its natural and necessary tendency and results are evil and evil only. Therefore the doctrine is false. Let then the gospel taught by Christ and his apostles stand in all its original purity and glory; while the false and pernicious gospel of a fancied heaven at death, "beyond the bounds of time and space," (!) falls to the ground.

But it is said that if the human soul be not immortal, man is no better than a beast. To this we answer that there is just as much superiority in a living man above a living beast, as there is a greater degree of the likeness of God, and no more. The mental faculties of man are superior to those of the brute; but this does not prove his immortality any more than the superiority of the mind of the dog to that of the snail proves the immortality of the dog. But as it regards a dead man, it is true that he is no better than a beast. And to this agrees the word of God. See Eccl. iii., 19, "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth so dieth the other, yea, they all have one breath, so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast." Again, Eccl. ix., 5, "For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten." Thus by the word of God it is proved that a dead man is no better than a dead beast; and that without the resurrection there is no reward after death. But inasmuch as the sleeping saints shall rise again to eternal life and glory, God is not ashamed to be called their God. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Even so, means in the same manner. There is no other way.

How false and foolish are the notions of those who imagine that to the Christian,

"Death is the gate to endless joy,
And dying is but going home."

How absurd and ridiculously horrible the description given by Watts of a soul descending to its place of eternal torment, after ascending to heaven to be judged!

"Then swift and dreadful she descends
Down to the fiery coast,
Among abominable fiends,
Herself a frighted ghost."

Such is the trash that has been palmed upon the people in the name of Christianity. Thus have even the sheep of Christ's fold been led astray and fed with spiritual poison. And, as a consequence, how often have weeping friends stood around the bed of the dying, and, as soon as the last agony and the last gasp were over, have exclaimed, "He knows more than all of us now: whereas the word of God positively declares, "The dead know not anything." Nothing is more clearly taught in the holy scriptures than the entire unconsciousness of the dead; and that a future state of existence depends, not in part, but altogether, upon the resurrection.

It is asked if the scripture does not say that at death the spirit returns to God who gave it? It does, but what is the spirit? Certain it is, the spirit is not the soul; for Paul declares, in Heb. iv., 12, that the word of God divides asunder soul and spirit. And in 1 Thess. v. 23, he says, "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless." So then, if the spirit be immortal, that does not prove the immortality of the soul any more than of the body. The Hebrew word is ruach, the Greek pnuema. Both are rendered by translation, air, wind, breath, or spirit; and, as applied to man, mean the principle or power of life. In Gen. ii., 7, we read "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Surely this does not teach us that man was made in two distinct parts, and then joined together. Nor does it teach that a part only of man was formed of the dust. It was man—the whole man; though until the principle or power of life was imparted from God he was not a living man. As a beautiful and glorious piece of machinery; complete in all its parts, he needed only the motive power to put this perfect mechanism in action, thus constituting him a moving sentient, reflecting, acting being—in short, a living soul. Such he became, when the life-giving God breathed into his nostrils the ruach or spirit of life. And when the dust returns to dust, that principle or power is withdrawn, and thus returns to God. The whole fabric called man is, therefore, "of the earth, earthy," and became a living soul by having the principle of life imparted from God, by means of the breath inhaled from the surrounding atmosphere. The life in the blood which is kept in action by the breath, and from which life, motion, and the power of thought, are imparted to the brain and nervous system and to all the various organs of the human frame, thus producing all the phenomena of life, both mental and physical. And it is this alone that constitutes man a living soul. Consequently, when the breath or spirit of life is withdrawn, he ceases to be a living soul. Then everything appertaining to man is resolved into its original condition and element. The body returns to dust, the spirit or principle of life returns to God who gave it, and as the soul, that is, animal life, cannot exist without the presence and life-giving power of the spirit, it is extinguished, like the flame of a candle. Therefore, if there be no resurrection, there is no future life.

THE VOICE OF WITNESSES.

"O, CHRISTIANS! do you know that your Lord is coming? In such an hour as ye think not, the Man who once hung quivering on Calvary will descend in glory; 'the head that once was crowned with thorns' will soon be crowned with a diadem of brilliant jewels. I do look for his pre-millennial advent, and expect he will come here again."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

"The second advent of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ is copiously spoken of in the Holy Scriptures. And no wonder; for it is the crowning subject of all, toward which every intermediate subject tends. It is the final chorus, in which all the harmony of prophecy combines. It is the ocean into which all the streams of Revelation empty themselves as their great home. Sin and misery till he comes; righteousness and happiness at his coming; groanings and agony till he comes; songs of triumph at his coming! Faint glimmerings of hope, amidst surrounding and prevailing darkness, and desolation, and despair, till he comes; everlasting light, and life, and joy, and love at his coming! These are the cadences which continually fall upon our ear from the sacred harp."—Rev. Hugh M'Neil, D. D.

"The time is fast running out; and soon He that shall come, will come and will not tarry. And then, no longer will the darkness contend with the light, no longer will the struggle seem to be doubtful, or the throne of the universe to be in obeyance; no longer will heavenly truth throw out its scattered and broken beams upon our sin smitten earth; but out of the midst of the fearful convulsion and tremendous storm, with flame of devouring fire, shall the sun of righteousness arise in mid-splendor, with healing under its wings, and bless our creation to its remotest bound, with his everlasting and unclouded light."—Rev. C. J. Goodhart, M. A.

"In the birth-week of creation, the outlines of God's providence in redemption are set before us. In six days these lower heavens and earth were made, and on the seventh God rested from his works. So for near six thousand years, the mystery of redemption is carried on, till at length, on the sounding of the seventh angel, the mystery of God shall be finished, and the Millennial Sabbath shall complete and hallow the new creation of God."—Rev. T. R. Birks, M. A.

"This day, then is at hand. The judgment of the righteous . . . is now very near. The time of judgment may come before, in the ordinary course of nature, the younger among us might die. Never could it be so emphatically said as now, 'Stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Behold the Judge standeth before the door.' Live, then, in constant contemplation of this coming judgment. Act in the constant view of its solemn decisions. Dread, above all dread, being unprepared to meet your God. Desire, above all desire, to be ready for the coming of the Son of man."—Rev. E. Bickersteth.

"At this present closing crisis of the world, alike in the evidence of prophecy, in the signs of the times, in the general agitation of Christendom, and in the increased and increasing expectancy of Him by his people, the Saviour's voice seems to be heard, distinct and clear as perhaps never before, 'Surely I come quickly.'"—Rev. E. B. Elliott, A. M.

"When faith's backward gaze on the bright obscure of Calvary is clear and strong, then hope's prospective glance penetrates into heaven itself with animating anticipations of the day when He shall 'rend the heavens and come down.' . . . Even now there is a sound of his chariot wheels upon the mountains. He is on his way back to rescue his weary bride from the conflict."—Rev. B. Philpot, M. A.

"We watch; for we know of no interval between us and the Lord's appearing. The hour of our meeting with him, and with those whom we have loved and lost, may be nigh at hand."—Rev. H. Bonar, D. D.

"We are led from all signs to infer that the meeting-place of all the lines of God's providential work on earth is very near. Paganism is breaking up all over the East. Mahommedanism is in its death struggle, in vain attempting to avert its waning. Popery is artificially propped up, and preparing to take its exodus to eternal night. . . . We stand on the margin two ages; we hear the dying moan of one, and catch from afar, the awakening anthem of the other."—Rev. J. Cumming, D. D.

"O, glorious Messiah! Soon wilt thou again appear, 'without sin unto salvation,' and present to the Father a church 'without spot or blemish, or any such thing!'"—Rev. A. A. Bonar.

"This, I conceive, is the next great event that we are to look for. So far as I can discern, no further signs are to be expected; as it seems to me we have entered into that last period of awful expectation, during which the church is likened unto ten virgins."—W. Cunningham, Esq.

"And can we see and feel these awful signs of the times crowding around us, and never hear the whisperings of a yet more awful voice that seems to break, more and more distinctly every day, on the attentive ear: 'Behold, the Bridegroom is coming! Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour when he will come!'"—Rev. H. White, A. M.

"Who, that is alive, may not live to see that awful time arrive, in one universal and instantaneous burst of astonishment! There fore, in the words of Peter, in reference to the same time, 'seeing that we look for such things, what manner of persons ought we to be, in all holy conversation and godliness!'—and how diligent ought we to be, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless!"—Rev. J. Scott.

Rev. John King Lord said on his death-bed, "Tell the church to hold on till Christ comes."

WHO SHALL STAND, AND WHEN.

"For the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand." Rev. vi. 17.

For example, I heard, not long since, a preacher (of doctrines) prove to his own satisfaction, and probably to the satisfaction of many of his hearers, the immortality of the soul from these words, "I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain;" with "Life and immortality and brought to light by the gospel;" also, he said that a certain king was asked for something to convince him of the immortality of the soul, and he was recommended to read Plato. His reply was, that he had read Plato, and when he had closed the book all seemed dark to him. I thought, Yes; "Cursed is man that trusteth in man." But this preacher of doctrines (beware of doctrines) was thankful that in the Revelation of John, he could find consolation; and your humble writer can, with a full heart, thank God that while salvation, or immortality is free, it is conditional; and that by a patient continuance in well doing, we must seek for glory, and honor, and immortality and eternal life; and those who do not, will receive indignation and wrath, and their wages, which is death.

"For the great day of his wrath is come." How has it come? Let us turn back to this Revelator and see chap. i., "Things which must shortly come to pass: which bear record of all things that he saw. How did he see them? John says he was in the spirit. What does John mean by being in the spirit? I understand it to be the faithful spirit; or, "The Spirit of the Lord God was upon him." Rev. ix., 17. "Thus I saw the horses in the vision." Then it was in the Spirit and in the vision that John saw things that must shortly come to pass; and it was in this heavenly vision, that John saw the great day of his wrath must shortly come to pass; then why should learned men make this blessed vision bend to suit "My Doxy?" Why do they not make their theories bend to suit THE doctrine of the blessed Master, which is the true doctrine, that if they are acounted worthy, they will receive a crown of glory in that day. Paul will then be able to stand, because he fought a good fight, and kept the faith; so, also, will Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all who obtained a good report through faith, but received not the promise. God made provision that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, should not be made perfect until all shall have "fought the good fight and finished their course, and have kept the faith." "So run that ye may obtain." Obtain what? Immortality, says one. But why run if you already have it? The truth is, you have not, and never will get it, unless you receive it as a gift; and it will not be given to you unless you seek for it by a patient continuance in well doing. Yes, but life and immortality are brought to light. True and there are men starving and dying because they have nothing to live on; but just down on the river bank a company is paying $5 per day for laborers, if they can get the kind they want; and you will not go to them that you may try to do as they direct. The consequence is, you stay away and die. O come to the LIFE-GIVER. Lay hold on eternal life, that when the day of his wrath shall come you may be able to stand. "Of a truth, God is no respecter of persons. He that feareth him, and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." But suppose we do not fear him, and do not work righteousness? Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord.

"If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii., 11.

If the Spirit that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell not in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead, will not quicken your mortal body by his Spirit that dwells not in you.

[We omit what this writer says on Dan. xii. 2, because we dwelt so largely on that text last week.—EDITOR.]

But when Christ, who is the Christian's life, appears, then the Christian will appear and be able to stand with him in glory.

I thank God that this passage of Scripture in Dan. seems so plain to me. My desire is to know the truth; but it must be self-sustaining; that is, Bible truth, sustained by Bible truth. But that the wages of sin is death, and the gift of God is eternal life, I have no doubt; and I think I understand the Scripture definition of death, and of eternal life. Both are eternal, or perpetual; and I don't understand anything about a "death that never dies," or a life that never lives." When I see a dead man, and a live one standing by him, I can understand that; and by faith I am permitted to see my LIFE-GIVER, and he is my understanding of eternal, immortal life; and by faith in Christ I am permitted to see those wicked ones, of which it is said, they are deceased, they shall not rise. This is my understanding of life and death.

But there are some that will not be able to stand. Who are they? Look about and see if you cannot satisfy yourself. If in a moment the trump shall sound, would you or I be ready? This is a solemn question. Are we ready to meet the blessed Saviour? Let us be ready to hail the glad day.

Then the text must refer to those who are upon the earth when he shall come to make up his jewels. He will gather the jewels, and the floor will then be thoroughly purged; those that have fallen asleep in him, will be raised to immortality; and those who have not the Spirit indwelling will not see life; but will sleep a perpetual sleep. Then one shall be taken and another left. Then will Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with Paul, Stephen and John, be made perfect together. Then the meek shall inherit the earth; then will they delight themselves in the abundance of peace; then will the glory of the Lord fill the whole earth. Then will the kingdom be established under the whole heavens. Then will the redeemed have in their hands the white stone. They will have entered through the gates into the city; then will they have a universe unstained by sin, misery, or death. O, say, reader, shall we all meet there? God help us to make our calling and election sure. AGAPEE.

"FEAR NOT."

WHAT though, looking from mere human standpoint, all around and before us is dark, dark, because that iniquity abounds, wickedness is exalted into high places, and hand joins hand to defeat the execution of justice and the triumph of right? What though men, having gained the confidence of their fellows and become the subjects of high trusts and unbounded reliance, do falsify their obligations, dishonor friends whose trusts they betray, turn traitors to their most solemnly avowed purposes and principles, and prost i tute high and important duties to the base uses of political intrigue? Did all things come by chance? Is the universe without a ruler? Is there not one whom the heavens canno contain, and who looks down from his high and holy habitation, controling the affairs of men, and marking well all them who through lovet to him stand firm in truth and right? "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help," is a divine injunction, the necessity for strict obedience to which, sad experience daily exemplies. What though the church, having opened wide its gates to the admission of error and grown weary in its efforts to seek truth, "the deep things of God," now sinks into fatal repose? What though the "lust of the flesh" and "pride of life" have entered it, and fostered in its bosom loathsome corruption and death? The establishment of truth depends not upon the purity and faithfulness of human organizations, else might we well despair. If eighteen hundred years ago God was able of the very stones to raise up children unto Abraham, we may not doubt that he will now, as ever, raise up those who will faithfully bear the standard of truth. Professing Christians, followers, so called, of the "Lamb that was slain," may make their belly their god, and their glory their shame, but notwithstanding this, the coming of our Lord and the setting up of his eternal kingdom are events that will transpire in God's appointed time. What, then, though we are in "perilous times," a period of confusion, turmoil and strife, in which society is shaken to its very centre, wickedness in all its most revolting forms increasing with fearful rapidity, men proving recreant to every duty, and false to every trust, even professed followers of the humble Jesus suspicious one of another, puffed up with pride, "having a form of godliness," but knowing nothing of the power thereof, given over to covetousness, seeking official power, patronage, or popularity at the expense of gross violations of the plainest and simplest requirements of Christian brotherhood, "wars and rumors of wars," the very atmosphere so filled with strange forebodings of evil that each sighing breeze bears its fear exciting freight, the earth itself, as if in mortal agony, yielding to the mighty throes of its pent up forces, and vomiting forth long hidden fires, as it tremblingly pursues its flying course? Though other men's hearts fail them "for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth," all who trust in the living and true God, whose promises are sure, and whose word is yea and amen forever, may rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, knowing that these things must needs be, and that they, to no little extent, presage the speedy fulfilment of promises, a contemplation of which has assuaged many a grief, soothed many a troubled mind, and kindled sweet feelings of thanksgiving and praise in myriads of true hearts, from faithful Abraham until now. Wait, watch, labor diligently.

PRAYER ANSWERED.

DURING the last illness of a pious mother, when she was near death, her only remaining child, the subject of many agonizing and believing prayers, who had been at sea, returned to pay his parent a visit. After a very affecting meeting, "You are near port, mother," said the hardy-looking sailor; "I hope you will have an abundant entrance."

"Yes, my child; the fair haven is in sight, and soon, very soon, I shall be landed on that peaceful shore, where pilgrims meet to part no more."

"You have weathered many a storm in your passage, mother; but now God is dealing very graciously with you, by causing the winds to cease, and by giving you calm at the end of your voyage."

"God has always dealt graciously with me, my son; but this last expression of his kindness, in permitting me to see you before I die, is so unexpected, that it is like a miracle wrought in answer to prayer."

"Oh, mother!" replied the sailor, weeping as he spoke, "your prayers have been the means of my salvation, and I am thankful that your life has been spared till I could tell you of it."

She listened with devout composure to the account of his conversion, and at last, taking his hand, she pressed it to her dying lips and said: "Yes, thou art a faithful God; and as it hath pleased thee to bring back my long-lost child, and adopt him into thy family, I will say: 'Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation.'"

Prayer an answer will obtain,
Though the Lord awhile delay;
None shall seek his face in vain,
None be empty sent away.

WESLEY AT CHESTER.

"Crawfoot admired and loved the patriarch of Methodism, not missing an opportunity to hear him preach whenever he visited the city. He heard Wesley's farewell sermon in Chester, on Tuesday night, April 6th, 1799, and was honored by being present in the vestry when Wesley met the travelling and local preachers after the service. He concluded a farewell address to all the preachers present in that pathetic and pointed manner so characteristic of the man, and in these words: 'Fellow-laborers, wherever there is an open door enter in and preach the gospel; if it be to two or three, under a hedge or a tree, preach the gospel! Go out quickly into the lanes and streets of the city, and bring hither the poor, the maimed, the halt, and the blind. And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room.' Wesley then lifted up his hands, while tears flowed down his cheeks, and he repeated; 'And yet there is room, and yet there it room!' The divine influence descended, and this was ever after remembered by Crawfoot as 'a day of power,' in which he became more willing than ever to think, and act, and speak for God."

HOW RAMSAY PAID HIS RENT.

WIT is sometimes worth money, but then it is quite essential to have a good natured customer to deal with.

When Allan Ramsay, a well-known Scotch poet, began life, he was so poor that he could not meet his first half-year's rent. After it became due he met his landlord and explained his circumstances, and expressed his distress at his failure to meet his obligations. The jolly landlord was quite kind to him, and said that, as he was a lad of some genius, he would give him a chance to cancel his debt without paying a shilling. "If," said the creditor, "you'll give me a rhyming answer to four questions in as many minutes, I'll quit you the rent altogether." Allen said he would try. The questions were: "What does God love? What does the devil love? What does the world love? What do I love?"

Ramsay wrote:

"God loves man when he refrains from sin;
The devil loves man when he persists therein;
The world loves man when riches on him flow;
And you'd love me could I pay you what I owe!"

"The rent is paid" said the farmer, giving his ingenious tenant a hearty slap on the shoulders.

IT is from the remembrance of joys we have lost that the arrows of affliction are pointed.—Mackenzie.

Nearing Home.

What a blessed thought! How it thrills the heart of the waiting pilgrim! Yes, nearing home—to meet with the Lamb of God, our Redeemer. Oh what a meeting it will be—to meet with all the saints of God, and clasp glad hands in the kingdom of glory. What immortal music will echo over the glorified hills and valleys of the kingdom of God, when that immortal host raise their anthem of praise and thanksgiving, and the shout of "Alleluia," as the "voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings" rolls up before the throne of God. Do you wonder that we often get homesick when beholding those blessed scenes just before us? Do you wonder that the bride longs and sighs for the bridegroom's return?

But turn from these glorious scenes, and our eyes are saddened with the gloom of sin that covers the earth. All manner of iniquity abounds, and it seems really we are realizing the antitype of the days before the flood. God destroyed the old world because of the iniquity that filled the land; and Christ gives it as a type of the end of the present dispensation. We have passed the landmarks which were laid down, and through this gloom and deep darkness of sin comes the cry of the faithful watchman on the walls of Zion: "We're almost home!" It thrills through every sinew, revives the drooping heart, and brings untold joy and gladness. Oh ye waiting ones, take courage, and with joy press on through the perils and dangers which thicken on every hand. Jesus is coming! "Then the sick will bloom with health, the dumb sing forth the praises of their God, the blind receive their sight, the lame leap like an hart, and the earth be filled with the glory of God as the waters cover the sea."

But how do we know that we are almost home? We answer, by the evidence which our Lord has given us. Christ says: "When these things begin to come to pass then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke xxi., 28. What things are here referred to? See 25th verse, where it says: There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." These "signs" have been seen by the watchman, and consequently he speaks on divine authority—the authority of Christ, who says; "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." There can be no mistaking this, for we were to "know" when we were almost home. Oh blessed thought!

"Yes, we are almost home, What a blessed welcome awaits the pure in heart. They have the sure promise of seeing God, of being made like Jesus, of having a right to the tree of life, of drinking from the crystal river, of gazing upon the glittering domes of the vast city of our God, and walking its golden streets, sparkling in all the splendor of divine glory. No more sorrow, no more pain, no death; but a rest so sweet, so lasting. O blessed morn! hasten on and bring the promised rest.—Selected.

Genuine Experience.

Unhappily the experience of John Bunyan, or of some other person has been erected into a standard by which that of other men is tried, and in some regions a Christian will be asked, "Were you long in the Slough of Despond?" as though the slough of despond were a divine institution, and the only way of salvation lay through it. Andrew Fuller put the question to an aged saint, who replied: "I was never there at all, sir; I went straight to the Cross of Christ." That was the Scriptural way, and it is to be remarked that the Scriptures place nothing between the sinner and the Cross, nor do they clog the free message with a single qualifying condition. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Multitudes have deceived themselves by mistaking the agony of remorse, or the terror of hell, for conversion, and have found a false and transient peace in a confidence in their own sufferings, instead of true peace in a confidence in him who hath suffered for us, the just for the unjust.

The Tables Turned.—The late Dr. N. W. Taylor was wont to relate how, at one time, there was a member of the Seminary who seemed so dull and inapt that he felt compelled out of kindness to him and regard for the Churches, to advise him to look no longer toward the ministry as his calling, but betake himself to some plain, honest trade. Soon after the professor heard that his unfortunate student had been preaching at a place where he himself had officiated. Meeting a member of that congregation, he asked, with a little latent amusement at the expected answer, "You had Mr.——to preach for you last Sunday; how did you like him?" The parishioner did not recognize the person with whom he was speaking, and answered frankly: "We liked him well; much better than we did Dr. Taylor!" "Since that," said the doctor, "I have been careful about passing adversely upon the qualifications of young men for the ministry, or predicting that they cannot find a people to be pleased and profited by them."

W. H. Hanford will preach at Rahway, N. J., Sunday, June 7th; Oceanport, Sunday, June 14, A. M. and evening; in the afternoon at Eatontown.

Meetings in New York City.—Believers in the Second Coming of Christ at hand, and future Life for the Righteous at his Coming, meet for worship every Sunday, at Botanic Hall, No. 68 East Broadway. Service at 10½ A. M. and 3 P. M. Seats free.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JUNE 3, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"The Judgment."

The Tract on this subject is printed, and will be ready to send out in a few days. A very small portion of the expense has been provided for, as yet; so that we cannot commence any gratuitous distribution of it at present. Our readers know what the work is, and will use their own discretion as to its circulation. The price by the hundred will be $2.50, postage to be added, about 30 cts. By the dozen, 40 cents, postage included.

Church Organization: A Question.

"If it is not too much trouble, I would like to know how you harmonize Matt. xviii., 15–18, with no church organization?"

MISS G. S.

We believe in church organization. Our opposition is to human organizations called churches. Christ has organized his own church. "The Lord added to the church," is the divine testimony. Christ is the "rock" on which, saith he, "I will build my Church." All believers in him are, by virtue of their faith, "by one Spirit baptized into one body"—"the body of Christ." 1 Cor. xii., 13, 27. Love cements them together, and, if let alone, would continue a perfect organization; but men, who, too often, "seek their own, and not the things which are Jesus Christ's," set themselves to the work of dis-organization of the true church to make a sectarian, or partisan church, and set themselves up to dictate what these divided sheep shall believe, and what they shall not believe, and thus bring in heresies (that is, divisions), and then claim "ours is the church," thus deceiving and enslaving the Lord's free men, and forbidding them to grow in knowledge, unless they grow as these "lords over God's heritage" bid them, i. e., in harmony with their creeds of human invention.

Let it be distinctly understood, then, we believe in church organization; but we do not believe that any of the denominational organizations are churches of Christ, as such. They are just what they call themselves. They have taken the name that suits them, and thereby show their preference for it before the name of Christ. We believe in all these organizations there are those who truly belong to the church of Christ, but they are in bondage so far that they are not allowed the exercise of freedom to believe and communicate to others any new truth that may be brought to their attention. They are, therefore, in captivity in Babylon. We look for the great decree of him who is greater than Cyrus, to bring them out of their bondage ere long. Some few have a foretaste of that freedom, even now; but "they are men wondered at," Zech. iii., 8, but they must bear the burden of beholding the church's desolations, till the Head thereof shall come and restore all things; then shall every "lively stone" find its place in the glorious organization, and have its proper work and office, and the building shall be glorious. The party names, and self-constituted churches, will go "to the moles and to the bats," and be heard of no more forever. Let us take heed that we are, of Christ, "added to the church"—the true body of Christ.

Jackson City, Mich., May 24, 1868.

Br. Storrs: For some time have I wanted to ask you a few questions through the columns of the dear Herald, but have often thought they might not be worthy of the space they would occupy, and have tried to rid myself of these questions without troubling any one with my importunities, but as I cannot, neither satisfy my mind, I venture to intrude them upon your time, and should you deem them worthy, I would be thankful for any light you may present, for I want to know and do the will of my Father which is in heaven.

1. Do I understand aright by understanding the ten commandments to be the royal law of God? If so, am I not breaking this law by not observing the seventh day as a holy rest day, instead of the first?

2. Christ, in fulfilling this law, and honoring the law, does not make it of none effect, does he? If so, does he not require me to fulfil and honor it?

3. If any part of them is binding, are they not all binding? For he says we are guilty of all if we offend in one point. J. G. B.

Response to the Foregoing.

"1." "The royal law," James himself defines, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The law of love is the royal law. "God is love." That law of love guides him in all things, and is the law that is to guide us in all our conduct toward our fellow creatures. All the specifications named by James in this connection show that it is our conduct toward men the royal law applies to.

"2." As to the law-Sabbath, the great complaint of the formalists and hypocrites of his day was, that "He kept not the Sabbath day."

"3." Whatever Christ incorporated into the requirements of the gospel is "binding"—nothing more.

As to any binding authority to call one day in seven the Sabbath, or to observe one as such, in the ordinary idea of such a day, we have no evidence that Christ or his apostles have given any. To attempt to fix the seventh part of time upon the followers of Christ as a Sabbath and a binding institution, is to usurp the authority of Christ, and thus take the mark of the Man of Sin. No authority for any such thing exists under the administration of Jesus the Messiah. The attempt to fix the seventh-day Sabbath upon the followers of Christ, as of binding obligation, is of the same character as the attempt to fix upon them circumcision, and is often accompanied with the same spirit that is recorded Acts xv., 1. That is—"Except ye keep the seventh-day Sabbath, ye cannot be saved." All are doomed to perdition that do not believe and act as they do on the subject. We are happy to know there are exceptions.

When the apostles and elders came together at Jerusalem, to consider the matter in regard to observing the law of Moses, the decision was unanimous that those who were "turned to God from among the Gentiles," were "not to be troubled" with any such thing. See Acts xv. Let us give the words of that memorable council. They are as follows:

"Forasmuch as we have heard that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised and keep the law, to whom we gave no such commandment, it seemed good to us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul, men who have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. We have sent, therefore, Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by mouth. For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things: that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication; from which, if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well."

Here is no recognition of the Law-Sabbath, seventh-day Sabbath, or any other Sabbath. A very strange omission, if of such obligation as the advocates of that institution now maintain. But the "apostles and elders" do here affirm that the converts "from among the Gentiles" were not commanded to "keep the law," verse 24: and of course were not commanded to keep the Sabbath of the law. And Paul, who was a principal actor in that council, and in the controversy thus settled by authority, admonishes the Christians at Colosse, "Let no man judge you in respect of a holy day, or of the Sabbath," and adds, "Which are a shadow of things to come, but the body is of Christ." He asserts that Christians were "dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world;" which latter phrase signifies "elementary" principles—the lowest parts of knowledge. Such was the law economy, as given by Moses, and which Paul affirms, in this same chapter, Christ "took out of the way, nailing it to his cross;" and also affirms that one of those things taken out of the way and nailed to the cross, was "the Sabbath."

Not one writer in the New Testament countenances the idea that the Sabbath had any sanctity above any other day of the week. A Christian's whole life, and every day is to be consecrated to God. "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

When Paul wrote to a church composed of both Jews and Gentiles, as that at Rome was, he settles this question thus, chap. xiv. he says: "One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day;" and he adds: "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." In the result, he says—"Why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at naught thy brother? for ye shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ."

Here was one portion of a Christian community who were Jews, and had been brought up under the law commanding the observance of the Sabbath; and though now converted, they could not at once overcome all their Jewish prejudices, particularly the observance of one day above another, and Paul decides it was not necessary they should; while on the other hand, another portion of that church had been brought up Gentiles, with no observance of one day above another, and Paul affirms it was not necessary they should esteem one day more than another. Here is the true New Testament ground to stand upon—the ground of charity and forbearance, and caution against judging one another in these matters.

We forbear entering at length into this subject, but must content ourself at this time, with mere hints. A few words more shall conclude our remarks. If the Sabbath, as given by Moses, is binding now, it is so in all its claims and denunciations. Let those who strenuously contend that it is now of binding obligation, see whether they themselves are not condemned by the Sabbath law. "Whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death." Ex. xxxii., 15.

The Sabbath was, and still is binding on all who are under the law. They who are under the law will "be judged by the law;" Rom. ii., 12. All the curses of a broken law and violated Sabbath fall upon them. "But ye," believers in Christ, "are not under the law, but under grace." "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth (or the substance), came by Jesus Christ." John i., 17. The law was the shadow, Christ is the substance. Hence "We which have believed do enter into rest," etc. Heb. iv., 3; we have the substance in distinction from the shadow, which was by the law of Moses.

"Tell me," saith Paul, "ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?" Galatians iv., 21. He then says, "Abraham had two sons, one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman. But he of the bondwoman was born after the flesh, but he of the freewoman by promise." He then adds, "Which things are an allegory (an illustration); for these (two women) are (an illustration of) the two covenants; the one from Mount Sinai which gendereth to bondage, which is Hagar, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children." And why are they "in bondage?" Because they adhere to the Sinaic law as a covenant. But "Jerusalem which is above (represented by the freewoman), is free, which is the mother of us all" who believe in Messiah. "But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him after the Spirit, even so it is now." Those who will continue under the Sinaic law, or return to it after once being made free, manifest the same spirit, sooner or later, that the bondwoman's son did, viz., a persecuting spirit, showing a departure from the spirit of the gospel of Christ and his apostles. Let them beware lest they are "cast out" with "the bondwoman and her son."

We wish it understood distinctly, that what we have said is not designed to apply to those who honestly believe Sabbath keeping is obligatory on them, if they hold that view in charity to others who differ from them. But in many, who have been led under the law Sabbath, we have seen and been made to feel that there is a lack of honesty and integrity, which might justly be ascribed to the Ishmaelite spirit of the bondwoman's son.

If it be asked, "Is not the Sabbath law a part of the moral law?" We unhesitatingly answer, No. A moral law relates to what is unchangeably right in itself, and is something commanded because it is thus right. If there were no command, it would be binding on men to act according to this principle: that is, if there was no specific command we would be bound to act the same in relation to the object; for example, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" is morally binding on every man, though it had never been embodied in a formal law, because it is unchangeably right in itself, and is essential to the welfare and harmony of society.

The Sabbath law is a positive law, and the keeping of that law was binding on those to whom it was given, and to no others; it is right because it is commanded, and made right by the command; and is not, like a moral law, right merely of itself.

The moral law is binding on all people, everywhere, "written in their hearts," Rom. ii., 15. But the Sabbath law is not thus written in all hearts, and therefore is not of the moral law, but is a positive institution, and belongs only to the people to whom it was given.

A moral law has no such restriction; it is binding on all men, everywhere, and under all circumstances, and cannot be violated without sin; so that though they have not the writen law, their "conscience bears witness, and their thoughts accuse or excuse" their conduct. Rom. ii., 15. Not so the Sabbath law. A positive and known command alone can make that binding on any one. Under some circumstances it would be impossible to keep the Sabbath law, and that fact demonstrates it not a moral law. For instance, a slave of an ungodly master is converted to serve God; his master will not allow him to keep Sabbath; he is compelled to disregard it. If it were the moral law he should die rather than not keep it. But it is a positive institution, given to a people as a whole, and the master, as well as the servant, was obliged to keep it; that is, it was a positive law to Israel, as a nation; all of whom must keep it.

But when the gospel goes out to all nations, it deals with individuals, as such; it carries with it moral laws, and those only. These are all incorporated into the gospel precepts; but the gospel rest is the substance; and the Sabbath law is not incorparated into the gospel as an external observance. We that "believe do enter in rest." We enter into Christ, and find the true Sabbatical rest begun, to be consummated at the resurrection.

"Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." We esteem it a great mercy that the providence of God has so ordered it that one day in seven is observed as a day of rest. The influence of it is good, both physically and morally. But as to any positive law for its observance, there is none under the gospel economy. So we believe.

The Standard of Appeal.

There are those who cannot receive the views we advocate, because, say they, "Eminent men, and 'the Fathers' in early times held and practised differently." We have long since learned that the Bible is the standard of appeal, and is to settle all controversies about "faith and practice." That which cannot be clearly proved by this standard, may be tolerated, but is no authority, nor a test of Christian faith or character. It is beyond all doubt, in our mind, that all the heresies and false practices that have scourged the church from its earliest history, have grown out of a disposition to follow men instead of adhering to the unadulterated word of God. In this matter we are at perfect agreement with Dr. Adam Clarke, in his Commentary on Prov. viii. He says.

But of these ("the Fathers,") we may safely state there is not a truth in the orthodox creed that cannot be proved by their authority; nor a heresy that has disgraced the Romish church that may not challenge them as its abettors. In points of doctrine their authority is nothing to me. The word of God alone contains my creed.

Such is exactly the position we have occupied for near thirty years past; and which we shall endeavor to maintain to the end of our Christian course. So long as we have the Bible as a standard of appeal, it gives us no sort of uneasiness what can be produced from "the Fathers," or any other great or good men opposing our views. They are but men, and as liable to err as ourself. Let us have Bible testimony, and let its construction be regulated by the general tenor thereof and the known or revealed perfections of God. "God is love:" and any construction of his word that contradicts this testimony must be erroneous, however plausible it may appear.

Eulogy on Death.

An exchange paper contains some blank verses on "Death," eulogizing this monster, as is usual with believers in inherent immortality. It begins by the inquiry—

"Why should we picture death a thing of dread?"

We answer—Because God so announces it, by making it the penalty of sin. If Adam had dreaded it as he ought, he might have been preserved from its power. By believing the serpent's lie of natural immortality—"ye shall not surely die"—he had the "dread" of death removed, and fell into sin.

In the fifth line the following sentiment is uttered:

"Death is an angel—messenger divine!"

We do not wonder the writer placed a mark of surprise at the close of this line. Inspiration declares, that "sin entered into the world and death by sin;" Rom. v., 12. To call the "messenger" of sin "divine," is cause of surprise and astonishment. Next follows a "whitewashing" of the monster, thus:

"White-robed, though shadowed oft in dark disguise,
Stealing at midnight unto prison doors
Where weary spirits long in chains have pined,
And bidding them go forth to taste new life
Beyond the precincts of their dim abode;
While they, with many a sigh and groan of pain,
Reluctantly follow their mysterious guide."

This is strange enough. "White-robed," disguised in "dark" ones! Will the writer please tell us if immortality can be "weary?" We happen to think that weariness is not an attribute or accident that pertains to immortal entities. If the soul is immortal it cannot, in the very nature of the case, be "weary." To talk of an immortal "spirit" pining "in chains," is to talk unmitigated nonsense; and then for death to be represented as a white-robed thief, to steal out this chained spirit, almost caps the climax of folly; but a still greater one follows it. This weary spirit (immortal, of course) leaves its prison and chains "with many a sigh and groan of pain," and follows its guide "reluctantly." Strange jargon this. One would think the absurdity was at his height to suppose this chained spirit leaves its prison with sighs, and groans, without representing it as going "reluctantly." This immortal entity, going "forth to taste new life," ought to have been, in consistency, presented as shouting and dancing for joy, following its "guide" with the light-footedness of the young roe as it flies from its confinement, or from the pursuit of an enemy. But no! death—the "messenger divine"—is followed "reluctantly!" A plain evidence that the said soul has no knowledge of the fancied bliss we are told it is going forth to possess. Why do not our immortal soul theorists instruct these entities so that they shall behave better when the "white-robed" friend comes to conduct them to "new life?" Perhaps they are "fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the" deifiers of death tell them, and therefore "groan and sigh" in "following" him, and go "reluctantly." These fancy souls must be stupid things, after hundreds and thousands of the priests of death have so often declared the glories of death, and his amazing friendship, that they cannot "follow" him in a better manner. We have heard of many of these glorifiers of death that took every possible care to keep out of his way; and if they hear of one that follows death gladly, by suicide, they cry out, "insanity;" or "dreadful!" The fact is, the most devoted priest of death, after all his prating of death's friendship, will not trust him at all; and you will see them hasten after a doctor and swallow the most bitter dose rather than let death lead them into their imaginary paradise.

Away, then, with all this lying song of death's friendship! It is hollow and false as falsehood can be. No man really believes it, though many doubtless think they do; but it is all deception.

The writer of this eulogy on death next says—

"Death is a builder—architect supreme!
Pent in our clayey temples here we dwell—
One stroke of his rude hammer, they are dust,
And palaces immortal are our own."

"Great is Diana of the" immortal soul advocates. If death introduces us into "palaces immortal," what shall we do with them at the resurrection? The resurrection is the time and the way for this "mortal" to "put on immortality;" so saith Paul, 1 Cor. xv. But if death places us in immortal palaces we must leave those palaces at the resurrection, or it will be these immortals that put on immortality; that is, we shall put on that, at the resurrection, which, by the "stroke" of our friend death's "rude hammer," we had at death. Next—

"Death is a pilot—long in our treacherous seas,
While cloud-hung skies above us frown, we sail,
And many a foul Charybdis lurks beneath.
We spend the fleeting moments as they pass,
In ceaseless longings for the onward shore,
Eternal shores are dawning in our sight,
And Death's the friendly hand to guide us there."

Here death is made an all important "friend" "to pilot" us out of this life's "sea" on to the "eternal shores!" Enoch and Elijah could not meet that "friendly pilot" and so landed without his aid! Unhappy men! How dared thou venture without this pilot? Paul rejoices that God, on a certain occasion, "delivered" him "from so great a pilot;" and in that hour of trial he did not trust himself to that old ship-wrecker—death—for a pilot! No, saith Paul, our "trust" is "in God who raiseth the dead." See 2 Cor. i., 9, 10. The "pilot" death shipwrecks all that come in his power! God is the Christian's Pilot, and brings into "palaces immortal" by raising the dead. No thanks, and no praise to death. Old "death" has stood on the shore to deceive weary mariners, and to rob God and his Christ of the honor of conducting to "palaces immortal," for many long years. But the old black white-washed hypocrite is doomed to an exposure by the grand doctrine of "Life and Immortality only through Christ," that shall place him where his long series of crimes against God, Christ and truth demands; viz., Jesus Christ shall "destroy death." Heb. ii., 14. Then will the robber of God and man be no more deified by good, but deceived, men who have so long sung his praises. Yes, friends, your old "Pilot" is to go "into the lake of fire;" Rev. xx., 14. A just doom for all such "liars" and deceivers. His godship will then be seen in its true character.

In closing the stanzas to death's praise the following language is used—

"O! child of God! call death no more thy foe,
But picture him with love and all sweet things,
Fear not his voice—it is thy father's call,
Nor shrink from his embrace though cold and chill."

The first line is a rebuke of the great apostle who says, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death;" 1 Cor. xv., 26. But Paul did not know the wonderful good things death does; he was ignorant of "Death's friendly hand!" Mistaken apostle! Oh, if you had only lived in these days in which "the world by wisdom" has found out a better work for death than to keep him in the devil's employ! He is now transformed into "love and all sweet things," whose "voice" is not to be feared! "Death!" why it's only "thy Father's call!" If this be true, however, they are children of sin; for death is its voice.

This eulogist of death after dwelling on the "bliss that disembodied souls" are in, when the "friendly hand" of death has knocked the "clayey temple" to pieces, says—

"We then shall say of death, dread, ill, transformed,
Only an angel met us in the way."

We add in the language of Paul—"No marvel; for satan himself is transformed into an angel of light; therefore it is no great thing if his ministers" [of which death is one] "also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works:" 2 Cor. xi., 14, 15. The "end" of death we have seen portrayed by inspiration. If it is to "be destroyed" by being "cast into the lake of fire;" see again Heb. ii., 15 and Rev. xx., 14, when will man cease to be deceived by the theory of inherent immortality?

"A Better Country:" Words of Caution and Admonition.

These are "perilous times," and all true Christians need to be on their guard lest they "be led away with the error of the wicked." Religious and political movements are going with a rush which strongly indicates the great "breaking in pieces" cannot be far off. The following remarks are worthy of careful consideration, at this time, that we may all be put in a watchful position in relation to the events before us, so that we be "not snared in an evil time."

There are two classes of people with which, in greater or less degree, all may be rated. The one, an almost numberless majority, is looking and laboring for the advance of civilization, the perfecting of the arts and sciences, the extension of commerce, the increase of political liberty, and the general amelioration of the condition of mankind. The other class, a little flock, comprising only a small minority of even professing Christians, yet as true philanthropists as any others, is looking and praying for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ as the great remedy for every evil.

Let us inquire a little who comprise the first class. We find, first, devout men and Christians of every grade, who believe in the gradual conversion of the world. With minds unenlightened by the Spirit of prophecy, they behold the rapid advance of the arts, the new and wonderful physical accomplishments of man, and, above all, the sudden political changes, and tendency to political freedom in this country and in Europe, and think they see in these things the hand of God preparing the way for the Millennium. Thus discerning the signs of the times, they judge it their duty to forward these movements with purse, and vote, and bayonet, thinking thus to aid the coming of the kingdom. They have forgotten that the "kingdom cometh not by observation." Their kingdom comes by observation; they can tell any time how for we have got into it.

Next, we find the leading men of the age, politicians and statesmen, catching much of their inspiration from the nominal Church, they talk, too, of "the overruling Providence," and "the God of battles," while they labor for the "greatest good of the greatest number."

Then the so-called "liberal" religionists add strength and numbers to this first class. They believe that the history of man is one of progress and education: that God is gradually leading man up to a higher "spiritual plane;" that Christ was only a landmark in this progress, ushering in new truths, which are to "leaven the whole lump:" and that Swedenborg, Goethe, Rousseau, etc., are more recent landmarks of the same kind. These have much to say of the inherent dignity and manifest destiny of man, and teach it to be the highest of human virtues to labor, and vote, and fight for his political liberty.

Then come "the people." All of them who think, catch an inspiration from the "spirit of the age"—the principalities and powers with whom we wrestle (Eph. vi., 12)—and dream of halcyon days and a golden age, to be brought about by the united efforts of divines, politicians, and soldiers, preaching, voting, and fighting for the advancement of the race.

Shall we range ourselves with these? Shall we become part of that great image of Gentile power soon to be as the "chaff of the summer threshing-floors?" For the sake of contributing a little to the relief from oppression of our brother man, shall we do evil that good may come? We do all this and more when we indorse the "spirit of the age." Emulation, wrath, strife, and the "wisdom of this world," which "is foolishness with God." We become thereby a part of the miry clay of democratic power—of the very toes of the image (see Dan. ii., 31–45). We seek to make for ourselves a country, and to take to ourselves power to rule (or "judge,") which belongs not to us in this dispensation.

Dearly beloved of the little flock, have we then no country? "Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God." (Eph. ii., 19) "For our citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Lord Jesus Christ." We are citizens of the heavenly kingdom, sojourning for the present in "the promised land as in a strange country." What should be our civil position here? Let us inquire by illustration. You are a Christian of American birth, and with an American passport, dwelling for the time in Italy. Great changes are taking place there. The nation is full of enthusiasm upon the idea of national unity, which shall free from the yoke of the oppressor, incorporate the estates of the Church, and secularize the Church property: all this is to be accomplished by the bayonet and the vote. Your judgment approves the results to be attained. You are offered the privilege of becoming an Italian citizen; you accept it, and join in the popular voice—and what have you done? You have forfeited the civil rights of your American birth; you have become part of the ten horns, which shall indeed "hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire." (Rev. xvii., 16). But though "God has put it into their hearts to fulfill his will" in these things, yet they "shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them; for He is King of kings and Lord of lords, and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful." Can you be one of the "chosen and faithful," and also a part of the ten horns which are overcome? Can you have a part with the stone cut out without hands, and with the miry clay which shall be smitten by that stone? Where, then, is our faith, without which we cannot please God?

Abraham "sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country," not taking to himself any political power or ownership in it, waiting for God to give it to him, and died in the faith; and so did all the faithful of whom Paul speaks, "declaring plainly that they sought a country," and "desired a better country, that is, an heavenly," "wherefore, God is not ashamed to be called their God, for he hath prepared for them a city." "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs, according to the promise," (Heb. xi., 9–16; Gal. iii., 29), seeking the same country in the same way.

Let us then humbly accept the position of strangers and pilgrims, without political power or influence, obedient to the powers that be, as ordained of God, and waiting in faith till they be overturned to give "the kingdom, and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, to the people of the saints of the Most High" (Dan. vii., 37), and remembering the words of our Lord, "Hold fast till I come; and he that overcometh, and keepeth My works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations." (Rev. ii. 25, 26).

Exposition of 2 Thess. ii., 1, 2.

"Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand," etc.

This passage, as it stands in our English version, seems to indicate a complete change in the Apostle's mind, in regard to what he had so repeatedly declared of the second coming of Christ as nigh at hand, and that, too, as a ground of encouragement and hope to the suffering Thessalonian church. While on the other hand, we have the extraordinary anomaly of their being "shaken in mind and troubled" on account of their having looked upon that event as imminent in their day! St. Paul had exhorted them (1 Thess. i., 10) to "wait for God's Son from heaven," as those who being then "alive," might remain unto the the coming of the Lord, and so, together with the resurrection of the dead who sleep in him, might be "caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so ever be with the Lord!" And, although they had been all along held up as a pattern to all other churches as having professed this faith and hope in the Lord's second coming as imminent, here they are represented as terror-sticken at the very thought of the near coming of the Lord!

How then is this apparent contradiction in in the Apostle's teaching on this subject, and the extraordinary transition in the minds of these Thessalonian brethren from confiding faith and hope to the most agonizing fear in these premises, to be accounted for?

The reply is, that neither the one nor the other lay within the limits of explanation or reconcilement, on the hypothesis that the phrase, "at hand," in reference to "the day of the Lord," is a proper rendering of the passage in the original. But, if the true rendering is, "the day of the Lord is come," or "is present," then all is clear, as we shall show, after giving a true rendering of the Greek word as it stands in this passage.

Now this word is, not engike, as in Matt. iii., 2; Mark i., 15, and in eighteen other places, all of which are rendered in the sense of near, though not yet quite arrived; but it is enestekin, which occurs seven times in the New Testament, but in no other passage except this of 2 Thess. ii., 2, is it translated by the word near, or nigh at hand. In five out of the seven places, it is translated by the word present, in the sense of already come. Accordingly, the Syriac, the oldest translation extant, renders the phrase, is come. The Swiss version the same. Mr. Knight translates it hath come. Luther renders it, to be present, to exist at the time. Bengel says "means present." And Olhausen says it refers to what is present."

Obviously, therefore, our English translation of the word enestekin, is an erroneous one. The circumstances under which the Apostle besought the Thessalonian brethren not to "be shaken in mind, or be troubled," were the following. He had previously said to them that he "would not have them to be ignorant concerning them which are asleep, that they sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For," says he: "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord . . . shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." And he adds: "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

But in direct opposition to these Pauline statements, there were certain "evil men" who had "crept in unawares," and whose word "ate as doth a canker; of whom were Hymeneus and Philetus; who concerning the truth," as above stated, "had erred, saying that the resurrection had passed already, and thereby overthrew the faith of some:" (2 Tim. ii., 17, 18): the which, if so, it followed that Christ had already come, and was then present.

This error therefore, it was, that had so much disturbed and troubled the Thessalonian brethren. For, if Christ had already come, and raised the dead saints who sleep in him, and also changed and translated the living who had remained unto his coming, then . . . What? Why, they who, in the exercise of faith and hope in the near coming of the Lord; they who in patience and suffering had been so long "waiting for God's Son from heaven," were, after all, left behind, to be exposed to all the horrors of that great unparalleled tribulation—or that "hour of temptation which is to come on all the world, to try them that dwell on the earth!"

But so far from this being founded in truth, in order to remove from their minds the sad effects of this disturbing error, he says: Now, we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him,"—both of which events are still future,—"We beseech you . . . that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled," i.e., by such false teaching as that of Hymeneus and Philetus, "neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us," —for we, the Apostles, certainly have never taught you any such thing—as that the day of Christ is present, or that he has already come. Therefore, comfort yourselves. Dismiss your fears. For, when "He shall descend from heaven with a shout," "we," whether dead or living, shall be "gathered together unto him." For I now tell you, that, in accordance with what "all God's holy prophets have spoken since the world began," "the day of Christ," instead of being "present" "shall not come, except there come a falling away first, an apostacy, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition," etc.

Here then all is plain. The Apostle Paul is fully cleared from all inconsistency in his teachings on this subject, and the agonizing fears of the Thessalonian brethren are shown to have been without foundation.—Rev. R. C. Shimeall.

A Host.

A New York journal says, "that a learned German theologian has estimated that there are forty-four million, four hundred and thirty-five thousand, five hundred and fifty-six devils." Only think of it. Whether the learned gentleman's theory respecting the office of this many-membered satanic host makes them wander up and down on the earth like roaring lions, only quiet about it, seeking how much of what God has done they can undo, and how much they can prevent him from doing, the account does not say. The mission is an unfortunate one for many professed religionists, for could that point only be settled in the affirmative, many who have a chronic habit of yielding so temptation, the nature and consequences of which James so clearly sets forth in his Epistle i., 14, 15, would, as they are now more than half inclined to do, find it so very pleasant and convenient, especially if the offence be grave, to attempt a partial exoneration of themselves by representing to their dishonored and astonished brethren and sisters that some two, three, or half a dozen of these wicked, cunning intelligences suddenly set upon them, and, of course, for the time being, overpowered them. Then, too, it is so comforting to the more faithful to feel that after all, their offending associates, being creatures of peculiarly unhappy circumstances, are more unfortunate than blameworthy. More than forty-five and a half millions of devils! What a delightful crowd is that to have free range among the sons and daughters of men. It is a pity we are not informed respecting the basis of his estimation and how he comes to have an odd fifty-six among so many millions. If the amount of labor accomplished was not so immense we might think the fifty-six had for some time past been detailed to special duty in two certain legislative cities not hard to mention. Recent developments, however, utterly forbid that idea, the work being possible of accomplishment only by flesh and blood agencies more potent in the securing of such ends than any number of the immaterial nothing somethings that are by some said to exist. We think, therefore, the computer of devils has very much under-estimated the present condition of the world being overwhelming evidence of the existence of more than that number, real, living, breathing ones, and tangible, too, to everything but wholesome laws.

If people would only examine thoroughly, they would find themselves possessed of a devil, perhaps several of them, in the shape of lust or lusts, over which an earnest desire for truth, a watchful, prayerful mind, and faithfulness to all indications to duty will insure triumph. None who rightly strive to bring their wills into subjection to the divine will, thus securing victory over their lusts, will ever be troubled by devils in any other form than that presented by their ungodly fellow-bipeds. It is difficult to conceive how this demon calculation could have been regarded by its author as anything but a joke, but as it is quite as sensible as much that is said and written now-a-days on the side of so-called orthodoxy, we are inclined to think him in earnest. If professors of religion would devote less attention to fancied existences and more to the proper conduct of real ones, themselves for instance, less reproach would be brought upon the church, a great amount of error dissipated, and a far higher degree of Christian experience attained.

Freedom of Thought.

BY A. BOYNTON.

It is not the least interesting feature of the Herald of Life that it gives expression to free thought, and this encouragement is doing much to lead men to think for themselves, or independently, as much as may be. Keeping the church in leading strings has nearly obliterated truth from the earth. Thank God that these are being broken. We love to see original thought expressed: only let it be in love; not dictatorial, but suggestive. Let no one fear to search, think, and speak for themselves; thereby interest is excited and truth elicited. Thus prompted we write the following:

THE TREE OF LIFE, AGAIN.

In a former article, we rather hinted that this might be emblematical of Christ. Many take the ground that in the future age there will be a literal tree of Life for the purpose of healing somebody. Let us see what the Word says on this subject. In Prov. iii., 18. Wisdom is called a "tree of life to them that lay hold upon her; and happy is every one that retaineth her." "The fruit of righteousness is a tree of life." Prov. xi., 30. "When the desire cometh, it is a tree of life." xiii., 12. "A wholesome tongue is a tree of life." xv., 4. Them that mourn in Zion are "called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified." Isa. lxi., 3. Trees are spoken of as governments. "Behold the Assyrian was a cedar in Lebanon with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud, and a high stature, and his top was among the thick boughs; the cedars in the garden of God could not hide him; the fir trees are not like his boughs, and the chestnut trees was not like his branches; nor any tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty. I have made him fair by the multitude of his branches; so that all the trees of Eden that were in the garden of God envied him." Ezek. xxxi., 3, 8, 9. In chapter xlvii., we have a vision of a river issuing out from under the threshold of the house of the Lord, and also of many trees on its banks; it seems to synchronize with John's in chapter zxii. of Rev. Ezek. says, "And by the river, upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed; the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for bruises and sores." Mar. xii., 13. John saw a river of water of life proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb: on either side of this river the tree of life; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. Rev. xxii., 1, 2. This verb were seem to relate to something done in the past. True it is a supplied word, by the translators; but does not the context justify its use? A worthiness attained; a character perfected, seems necessary to an admittance where this tree grows. "He that is unjust and filthy; and he that is righteous and holy: let him be so still." See 11th and 14th verses. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, (those righteous ones spoken of above, we think), that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter into the gates into the city."

Now the question is, having been driven from the tree of life in our representative head in Eden, what do we need, and how is that need met? Life: a deathless, an immortal life is the craving of our nature. The want is met in Jesus. "He that hath the Son hath life." He is the commencement, continuation, and perfection of this life; and on our part, a faith in Christ, working by love and purifying the heart; an inward work with an outward manifestation of good deeds. Jesus is represented as our physician, bearing our sickness, touched with our infirmities; his body we are to eat; his blood, to drink; he is the bread of God; the water of life, etc. He teaches us that salvation consitss not in meats and drinks; things of an earthly nature; but they are spiritual; and so accords the experience of every child of God. Of what does Christian joy consist? What was the meat which Jesus ate of, and which he was always instructing his disciples about? Doing the will of his Father; or, in other words, experiencing the full radiation of the Divine mind, or image of holiness and love. This divine inspiration is our joy. This harmonious turning of the higher faculties of our being, so as to fit us to vie with the holy throng around the throne in pure and exalted strains of sweetest concord, is what constitutes Christian joy: it is spiritual.

When we put on the spiritual or immortal body, we suppose the food for it will be adapted to, and partake of, its likeness. Every dispensation seems calculated to elevate man more and more toward the standard of perfection, God; who "is a spirit" being. Paul tells us, "that is not first which is spiritual; but natural; and afterward, that which is spiritual."

We write not to oppose our more literal brethren, but to kindly admonish all to look from figures and emblems to Christ, who is our Life, and who is soon coming to give it to us more abundantly.

That we may have the eyes of our understanding enlightened, be renewed in knowledge, transformed by the renewing of our mind, feed on the hidden manna, eat the bread which came down from heaven, live by every word of God a faith life, waiting for our Lord from heaven to finish the work of grace wrought in us by the Holy Ghost, ever prays your affectionate brother.

Lynchburg, Va., May 23, 1868.

Br. Storrs: An Episcopal sister is desirous of taking the Herald of Life, but she has a large family; is poor in this world's goods, and don't think she can spare the money from her family. A brother of the Episcopal church has been holding meetings at her house every Lord's day at 3 P. M.; occasionally firing a few shots at myself, and the tracts I have been circulating. The result was, I could not sit still and do nothing while the truth was so perverted. I followed my Episcopal brother four evenings, on the Life theme. The congregation increasing each evening. On the last, I replied to the arguments of a Methodist minister, who spoke from the parable of the "Rich man and Lazarus," "the spirit returned to God who gave it," to prove that man is conscious in death, etc. After replying to the arguments of my two brethren, and the congregation dismissed, I distributed nearly a hundred tracts, which I gave notice would be done after the services were over. Some ladies expressed a desire to hear "more of the truth." One said, she had "held to the common notion, and never thought it could be proved unsound; but acknowledged her objections answered, and assured a friend, she was firmly convinced that there was no future life until Christ came." I have heard of three who were convinced by the presentation of the plain truth. So, you see that, under the blessing of God, a poor carpenter, who is more accustomed to his plane than writing or speaking, can do something. I thank you for sending another Herald last week. I hope its subscription list may increase and much good be accomplished by its teachings; at the same time, I know good wishes won't keep up the paper; so I will try and send you something soon as I can, more substantial.

May the Lord bless you and all who love his appearing.

Christ our Righteousness.

We can make no atonement for a violated law; we have no inward holiness of our own; the Lord Jesus Christ is the "Lord our righteousness." Cling not to such beggarly elements, such filthy rags, mere cobwebs of Pharisaical pride; but look to him who hath wrought out a perfect righteousness for his people. You find it a hard task to come naked and miserable to Christ; to come divested of every recommendation but that of abject wretchedness and misery, and receive from the outstretched hand of our Immanuel the riches of redeeming grace. But if you come at all, you must come thus; and like the dying thief, the cry of your heart must be, "Lord, remember me." There must be no conditions; Christ and Christ alone must be the only Mediator between God and sinful men; no miserable performance can be placed between the sinner and the Saviour. And now, my dear friend, no longer let false doctrine disgrace your pulpit. Preach Christ crucified as the only foundation of the sinner's hope. Preach him as the author and finisher, as well as the sole object of faith —that faith which is the gift of God. Exhort Christless sinners to fly to the city of refuge; to look to him who is exalted as Prince and Saviour, to give repentance and the remission of sins. Go on, then, and may your bow abide in strength. Be bold, be firm, be decided. Set Christ be the Alpha and Omega of all you advance in your addresses to your fellow-men. Leave the consequences to your divine Master. May his gracious benediction rest upon your labors! and may you be blessed to the conversion of very many, who shall be your joy and crown of rejoicing in the great day when the Lord shall appear. Lady Huntington to Henry Venn.

Eld. Rufus Keeler, Columbia, Cal., writes: May 8, 1868: A few of us here form a band of Christ's freemen. Several more are partly with us, and are free to read and converse, but are not active. Yet the light is steadily shining; and truth, precious, saving truth, slowly but surely advancing here and in other parts of California, truly the "Palestine of America." I have no fears for the future of God's truth; for he who is its author will take good care that it shall accomplish all whereunto it was ordained. And though He commits it to earthen vessels, poor and imperfect, still he holdeth those vessels in his hand, that they be not dashed to pieces and perish with their precious contents. May God keep us all and fill us with the precious life-sustaining oil. Yours in hope.

A. W. Bradford, Springfield, Mass., writes: Take courage and work on; the truth is making rapid progress in our midst. We cannot hear it preached from the pulpit; but some of the faithful ones are "letting their light shine." I know of six, who have become settled and grounded in the truth of "No life out of Christ," within a few months: and others are trying to advance into the marvellous light. I send you the name of one new subscriber, and will do all I can to get more.

Obituary.

Fell Asleep in Jesus, on Friday, May 22, 1868, after a long and painful sickness, which he bore with great patience and resignation, Br. Joseph F. Brewster, of Williamsburgh, L. I., aged 60 years and 9 months. Our Br. has been a humble follower of Christ for about 34 years; his conversion took place about that time. He united himself to the Episcopal Methodist church, and continued a faithful member, until in 1842, he heard the joyful tidings of the coming and kingdom of Christ; which, to him, was good news: and he fully embraced the doctrine of Christ's personal, literal and visible coming to reign on the earth; with the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead, and the final destruction of all the wicked; he was also a firm believer in the doctrine of a future life for the righteous only, by a resurrection, at the last day. He died in great peace; being firmly grounded upon the sure foundation laid in Zion. His last words were that he should not have to sleep long. He very quietly and calmly fell asleep, to await the sound of the last trump, when he will "come again from the land of the enemy," with all the redeemed host of God's elect. The funeral discourse was preached by Br. Geo. Storrs, on Sunday, May 24, to a very large and attentive audience when the precious truths presented were listened to with the greatest attention, and made a deep impression on the minds of many; and some said they never heard such truths before.

Our brother was taken from his residence, on Monday, to his last resting place in Stonington, Conn., to wait until his Master shall call him from his prison house, and clothe him with immortality and give him eternal life. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

Advice to Young Ministers.

In looking over a file of old letters dating back to the year of my ordination (1821) I find one from Rev. Leonard Woods, D. D., an ever to be honored professor in the Theological Seminary at Andover. Its perusal has brought to mind my gratitude to him for his excellent advice to me just entering the ministry, and the benefit I received from it, and I quote a few sentences with the belief that the sentiments are as applicable, and the principles as sound to-day as then, and with the hope that they may prove as useful and suggestive to some young minister now, as they were to me more than forty years ago:

"In all your prospects of usefulness and comfort I most heartily rejoice. You need the wisdom which is from above. Take care not to indulge yourself in the habit of complaining of the stupidity of your people; avoid this in public and private. It does no good, but much hurt. Say the best you can, and as to the rest, use the language of compassion, or of hope. Avoid harshness, but use great plainness—plainness united with kindness and tenderness. Many ministers ruin their influence by an air of severity and chiding in the pulpit. Indulge ardent desires for a revival—the more ardent and tender the better. Wait upon a sovereign God. Plant and water—that is your work; do it cheerfully and perseveringly, never give over, never be discouraged, God will give increase. When? He knows and he only. Dear young brother, the Lord bless and make you a great blessing to many ready to perish, and to many walking in the way to Zion."

It should be borne in mind that the above suggestions are not given in the way of systematic advice, but are a portion of a letter written in private friendship, and thus have a peculiar value.—Congregationalist.

Spring.

"Jerusalem the golden, methinks each flower that blows
And every bird that's singing, of thee some secret knows."

The mists of verdure on the trees
 Are quietly descending,
All rare and charming tints to-day
 Are with the landscape blending.

Through azure pathway to the sun
 The glad lark soars with singing,
And birds of varied name and plume
 To northern haunts are winging.

The mill-stream briskly pushes on,
 With laugh and merry chatter,
The wheel proclaims its work and speed
 With proud and cheerful clatter.

Spring? yes, and Spring's magnetic flow,
 Each human breast is filling,
The mystic pulse of life renewed
 Each quickened nerve is thrilling.

Whence is the power the springtime brings,
 Whence love's intensest yearning?
Where the true magnet that attracts
 Our spirits heavenward turning?

'Tis hope, which from the bursting buds,
 From promised fruits and flowers,
Looks to God's budding promises,
 And earth's prophetic hours.

Exultant sing, oh Hope serene!
 The week millennial closes,
Earth's frowning steeps and desert wilds
 Shall blossom like the roses.

The desolating tide of sin
 Be stayed by hands victorious,
Earth's work of reconstruction done
 By One both strong and glorious.

Our race its new career begins,
 Aided by love supernal,
While light divine shall bathe the world
 Through its long sweep eternal.

Then let us wait, and watch, and pray,
 Though Spring with Summer blendeth,
Though Autumn pales again with frost
 Our Winter quickly endeth.

The passing seasons still proclaim
 Our King just at the portal,
Whose word, from dust and death shall bring
 His saints in garb immortal.

Not Ashamed to Pray.

A LITTLE fellow, only about eleven or twelve years old, was the son of a clergyman. His father had got a situation for him on board one of those ships where boys are put, in order to be trained and educated for officers in the navy. This little boy's father and mother, being good Christians, had taught him to pray to God every morning and evening; and had told him to be sure and do this, wherever he might go.

When the little fellow went on board the great ship he found himself surrounded by a large company of other boys. Some of them were older, and some younger than himself. They were cadets and midshipmen who were to be his companions, and who were very fond of fun and play, as boys generally are. He got along with them very well till the time came to go to bed in the evening. A bell was rung as a signal for the boys to go their berths, as the beds are called on ship board. The boys were laughing and talking, and playing tricks of various kinds, while getting undressed.

George, as our little friend was named, looked around to see if none of them kneeled down to pray before going to bed, but not one of them did so. He remembered what he had been taught at home; he thought how God had taken care of him all the day, how only he could preserve him through the night, and he felt he could not go to bed without prayer. Then the temptation occurred to him—"but can't I pray as heartily when lying in my bed, as if I should kneel down to pray? and then the boys won't laugh at me."

But then the thought occurred that it would please his mother better, if he should kneel down to pray; and a better thought still came into his mind, that it would please God. This decided him. He knelt down to pray. Immediately all the thoughtless boys around began to laugh at him. One called him a methodist; another said he was the parson. One threw a book at him; another threw a pillow at him. But the little fellow still knelt on till he had finished his prayer.

The next night he was interrupted in the same way; and so it continued night after night. And yet the brave little fellow would kneel down and offer his prayers to God. He never complained of the conduct of the boys. But some one else about the ship found out how the boys were behaving in their cabin at night, and went and told the captain.

Now, it happened that the captain was a good, pious man, and he resolved to put a stop to the bad conduct of boys. The next day he had all the boys called up before him on the deck of the ship. Then he called George up to him and said:

"Well my little fellow, have you any complaint to make of the conduct of these boys?"

"No, sir," said George.

"Now, boys," said the captain, "George will tell no tales, and make no complaint; but I have heard how you have been teasing and persecuting him at night, because he has the courage to kneel down and pray to that God who takes care of him. I have only this to say: if any of you dare do this again, I'll have you tied up on deck, and try how you like the taste of a rope's end on your back. No go to your duties."

All the boys felt guilty. They would hardly speak to George during the rest of the day. But when evening came again, George knelt down as usual to pray. There was no laughing or talking. They were all as still as mice. George had not been kneeling long before he felt something at his side, coming close up to him. He looked around to see what it was, and found one of the little boys who was nestling close up to him, that he, too, might say his prayers in peace and quietness. Presently another came, and then another, till at last quite a number were found kneeling round him. These boys had all been taught to pray at home: but, when they were surrounded by rude, mocking boys, they had not courage enough to do right, by acknowledging their dependence on God, before their companions. But the influence of George's example, when he quietly and bravely took his stand, determined to do right himself, whatever others did, encouraged them to do so, too. From that time, prayer was never neglected on board that ship, while even those who did not pray themselves, were afraid or ashamed to laugh or mock at those who did. In this way, little George was very useful to his young companions, by the example which he set them. We should "gather up the fragments" of usefulness that lie around us, by setting a good example.—Dr. Richard Newton.

Letters and Extracts.

From Eld. Sam'l L. Walter.

BUNKER HILL, Ill., May 14, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Grace, mercy and peace, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ, be multiplied to you, and all that have the "hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie," has promised to those "who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality:" they, the seekers only, have the promise of eternal life. Thank God, that being true, there cannot be any raised to life, to sin and suffer. No. God sent "John to bear witness of the light." What light? The "Word that was made flesh." "In him was life," and this "life was the light of men." Then John was to bear witness to the light of life, or the LIFE-GIVER. And his testimony is so clear that none need be in darkness. Hear him. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." The LIFE-GIVER hath said that whosoever believeth in (or into) him, shall not perish (or, cease to live), but have eternal life. They both agree, that in order to secure life there must be a believing into Christ. And he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God (or the penalty of God's law, death), abideth on him."

I do not see what clearer testimony could or need be given than that of John's, that life does not inhere in man, out of the LIFE-GIVER, hence there is no life to the wicked. Then thank God we may look for the earth to be filled with righteousness, or the righteous, and the wicked rooted out of it.

April 24. I went to Clyde to ge tmy goods shipped for Bunker Hill, where I have a small, cheap house to live in. I thought to have preached for them on the 26th, but as the time was all occupied, I had to be a hearer. I heard Eld. Hartly, the Baptist. His text was, "If a man die, shall he live again?" He said, "This was a question, and that Paul answered it in 1 Cor. xv., 51–55—"Behold, I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed . . . the dead shall be raised incorruptible. . . So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

"This answer of Paul's proved the resurrection of all." He made that significant word "we" include all; he was so intent on getting all up that he could not see that "we" was restricted to holy ones, to whom Paul wrote, and sinners had no part in that resurrection; for if they had they were very happy, not cursing God, and calling for the "rocks to fall on them, and hide them from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb," etc., but "thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." If his position is true, that all have life in Christ, he established Universalism.

He said, "Job believed in the re-living of all, because he said, There is hope of a tree if it be cut down that it will sprout again," etc. He said this proved it. He did not see that a tree will bud and bring forth boughs like a plant, by or through the "scent of water." It cannot live again without help. "But man dieth and wasteth away" (or is cut off, annihilated), "yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" In death, having given up the life principle. "If a man die, shall he live again?" This question hangs an impenetrable veil over man in death that none but God can remove.

He then stated the philosophical argument against the resurrection, based on the change which is said to take place every seven years, and the fact that what composed our body at death went to support plants and form other bodies, which he answered by saying God was omnipotent and could do all things. He then went off at right angles on the "materialists; they denied the immortality altogether." We do deny inherent immortality, but believe that God makes his children immortal when he changes them at the sound of the trump, and not till then.

"Others," he said, "believed that man was all immortal; now they are both wrong, viz, the materialist and the immortal soulist. And he would take the middle ground." I thought after saddling both ponies he then rode with one foot on each, and they helped him on with the mass of his hearers.

He said, "Nature proved the resurrection; first, the seasons: spring showed man in youth. Summer showed man in the prime of life. Autumn man in old old age. Winter man in death. Then comes Spring again, or the resurrection." This is against a general resurrection, because none live again only such as have the principle of life. All that have not the principle of life remain in death; no matter how favorable the season; the sun may shine, genial showers may descend, all of no avail, they are dead, they cannot live, God in nature has so written it.

His next proof was "the change of the caterpillar to the butterfly." This, we think, failed to prove the resurrection of all, because all caterpillars do not live again; the greater portion are amnihilated, and never become the beautiful butterfly. Again, nature and God's word agree that such as perish shall not see life.

His next proof was, "That the seed had to die before it could be quickened; and that every seed had a heart or spirit in it, in which, by looking at it through a strong glass, you can see a perfect outline of the tree or plant when grown."

This, we think, only shows that those seeds which have the generating power, and not the power to regenerate the same body, that died. But the fact that some seeds are good, and reproduce, does not prove that all will. I think that in order to make the seed prove the resurrection of all, it must be shown that all seeds reproduce, which is not the fact, because not one out of a hundred ever grows. And a vast number do not for want of "the heart, or spirit," which he calls "the life principle," and never will live again. Just so it is with sinners; they were never begotten again, hence cannot be born from the dead. Query: Why may not the materialists ask him (as he asks them, "how they could get no-soul-men out of the grave?") how he is going to get such worthless seed quickened without the Spirit that raised Christ from the dead? Nature could not give them life; they have not "eat" Christ's flesh, nor drank his blood, hence they have not eternal life, and the LIFE-GIVER has not promised to raise them up at the last day.

His next proof was, "The necessity of a resurrection because the moral nature of man could not be developed in this short life, but it must be." I ask, if man developed an immoral nature here, will he not continue to develop an imperfect nature among devils and frightened ghosts? Or will man be changed by eternal torments, and come out of the theological hell, in the resurrection morn, singing, "Thanks be to God, that giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ?" This, we think, must be the case to a perfectly developed moral nature.

Next, he said, "There must be a resurrection for the full development of mind. At the age of forty our minds ought to be developed as Sir I. Newton's was; and all would be raised for their development, or God's purposes could not be carried out in the creation of the mind."

This, as the other, we think, if it proves anything, proves the restoration after he has gone through another training, and got a perfect intellect: then he must be in harmony with the divine Being, hence he must be saved. And then the theological hell will be vacated, and of no further use.

Next. "Our love for our dead ones proves that there would be a resurrection." Here he appealed to mothers to know if they did not love that dead little one yet? And "fathers, don't you love that son you laid in the grave?" He went through all the relations that exist among us, and asked if we did not still love the dead one? He knew we did, for he had one little one in death, and he loved it still," etc.

I confess that I was too blind to see any reason why the dead should rise because I loved the dead. It was a logical working up of the feelings, in the subsiding of which feeling into sober thought, they would be very likely to ask with Job, "If a man die shall he live again?" and still they would be in doubt. He finished his assumption, and then spoke of the glorified bodies of the saints; that they would be like Christ's glorious body. This was refreshing, after the long talk out of his own heart. I am going to Clyde soon to talk about the resurrection.

I received two packages of LIFE FROM THE DEAD, and one of the DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE. I thank God and the donors. I shall try and put them into hands that will read them. I hope the good work of publishing these works will go on. God's stewards have nothing to fear; they have good security for the interest, which is an "hundred fold in this world, and in that which is to come, life everlasting." Do you believe he is faithful who has promised, and will do it? Then "show your faith by your works."

I have done but little the last month; it has been very rainy all the month, so that I could not make a garden, nor necessary repairs to the house. We have got a home again. I do not think that my Father, or his children, will let us want needful things; the promise is, "Thy bread shall be given, and thy water is sure." I "shall not want any good thing." I may desire that which I think is good, but our Father sees otherwise, and withholds, because it is for the best.

I would say to the brethren in Fulton County, and also in Shelby County, that I am willing to serve them and the church at all times, and in the best manner I can, by the help of the Lord, but they must lend a helping hand, and give the necessary means to meet my travelling expenses, and a little for my family. I must see that home is provided for. Money is not what I preach for, but to spread the glorious gospel of Life from the dead, which is the light that perishing men need, so that they can see how and when "mortal shall put on immortality." I shall be glad to hear from the friends soon, as I want to be doing all I can, and I hope that I shall have home made comfortable this month, so that I can extend my labors to those distant places. I am quite anxious to work in the vineyard, for the signs of the times proclaim "the great day of the Lord is near, and hasteneth greatly." Do we not see "the powers of the heavens shaken," and "men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." The Lord grant that we all may be ready to welcome the Lord with the shout of joy, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us."

I am glad to see such a waking up, among God's dear children, to do all they can to put the gospel of the ever blessed God into the hands of all, and such as can't be reached in any other way than by tracts and those other works. I give the tracts to men, women and children, wherever I meet them. Some of them are sure to reach people I cannot get access to in any other way.

I was at Lebanon on the 17th; had a good season. In the Bible class the brethren came out bravely with the old Jerusalem sword, and fought manfully for the truth, "No resurrection out of Christ." The opposers hold on, as if all depended on their immortal soul dogma being sustained. The priest works hard to put us down, and would, but he cannot. Others have control of the house, so he is held at bay, and can't go but so far. Yours, in hope of Life when the LIFE-GIVER comes. Please say that my post office is, BUNKER HILL, Macoupin Co., Ill. I shall be glad to see any pilgrim that passes through.

BR. STORRS: You will see by the above that I am still travelling to break new ground and sow the good seed, but we find the battle waxes hotter and hotter. This place is a stronghold for the would-be-smart preachers, and we have been preaching all around them, on every side, waiting for a favorable opportunity to enter the city and take their stronghold. There has been considerable boasting on the part of the preachers, that if we came here they would (to use their own phrase), whip us out. Well, last evening we spoke to some two hundred on the nature and destiny of man. God was with us by his Holy Spirit. We had great liberty and freedom of speech in presenting God's truth for one hour and a half, without the least interruption; for the people were anxious to hear about this new doctrine, as they call it. Well, after we closed our remarks with a caution to the ministers (for there were several present), not to pass sentence on what had been said without first examining the Scriptures, lest by so doing they would expose their want of knowledge as to their Biblical attainments, we then gave liberty, and the M. E. preacher rose and remarked that it was the first time that he had ever heard it preached that man had no immortal soul, and he could prove from the Bible that he had, and that they went to heaven at death, if good. We called for the proof, but none was given. He also said that he could prove that the wicked went to hell, and were kept in eternal chains, suffering the vengeance of eternal hell fire. We remarked that if he could find any such Bible we would kiss his big toe, which created some laughter. He made the effort by turning to Jude, and found himself sadly mistaken. We then told him that he had better be more careful, for the future, how he quoted and misapplied the Scriptures, for we were well posted, and he would be sure to fail. Well, the next in course was a United Brethren preacher, one who has a big head. He told the congregation that next Wednesday evening he would preach to living souls. We gave a hearty amen, for a dead soul could not hear. This ended our interview. We expect to stop here through the week, over Sunday, hoping some of the smart preachers will do as they said; that is, challenge us to discuss on any Bible point they choose. If so, we will report.

We received three of the dear HERALDS just as we were leaving on our long tour. Were glad to see further remarks on the book called "Adventism."

The tracts sent us are nearly all scattered, and no doubt will result in much good, for the leaven is working in all directions. Our faith is strong, though we get but little pecuniarily, and our feet get blistered travelling through the mud. We expect to return to Mode in about two weeks, and hope to find a supply of tracts for another tour. I will send twenty-five cents to pay postage, and will continue to do so as often as I write.

We are now just twenty miles south of Shelbyville, and somehow or other, they all want to hear the old "soul-sleeper," so that I have calls ahead more than I can fill. O how I wish some more would enter this field. Pray for me: and may the Lord bless our beloved Editor, and all the officers and contributors to the paper.

W. R. VANCE, Industry, Ill., writes: Inclosed find two dollars to pay, according to contract, for the HERALD OF LIFE one year. I have received four numbers of the paper, and two pamphlets, which are likely, I believe, to open the eyes of some of the wilfully blind; as there are a great many of that description of blind people in these parts just now.

I am well pleased with the paper, and delight in the perusal of its pages; yet I am not clearly satisfied as to its theory in all points of theology. I shall, however, avail myself of all its instructive lessons.

MRS. M. C. CONVERSE, Wolf Creek, Iowa, writes: I mean to do all in my power to assist in spreading the truth. When I send to you again, will send for some more of your publications, and send to more of my friends in different places. It is but little more than a year since I first embraced the doctrine of "Life only in Christ;" and I believe the light will spread and grow brighter and brighter, until the day of glory, when Christ who is our life will appear. Oh glorious hope; may we all appear with him in glory. Your sister in hope of eternal life.

Story with a Moral.

Being invited into the parlor to await the lady's appearance, he entertained himself as best he might for some time, and was becoming weary, when a little girl about five years old slipped in and began a convenation with him.

"I can always tell," said she, "when you are coming to our house."

"You can?" he replied, "and how do you tell it?"

"Why, when you are going to be here, sister begins to sing and get good; and she gives me cake, and pie, and any thing I want; and she sings so sweetly when you are here, and when I speak to her she smiles so pleasantly. I wish you would stay here all the while; then I would have a good time. But when you go off, sister is not good. She gets mad, and if I ask her for any thing she slaps and bangs me about, and is as ill-natured as she can be."

This was a poser to the young man. "Fools and children tell the truth," quoted he, and taking his hat he left and returned no more.

Gen. Washington's Last Vote.

THE father of his country was conscientious in the discharge of every duty as a citizen, and never failed to vote. The last occasion of his doing so was in the spring of 1799, in the town of Alexandria. He died on the 11th of December following. The court-house of Fairfax county was then over the old market-house, and immediately fronting Gadby's tavern. The entrance into it was by a slight flight of crazy steps on the outside, and while the election was progressing—several thousands of persons being assembled around the polls—Washington drove up in his old and well-known family carriage. The crowd spontaneously gave way, and made a lane for him to pass through as he approached the court-house steps. A gentleman who was standing at Gadby's door saw eight or ten good looking men immediately spring forward and follow the general up the steps, in order to uphold and support him if necessary. According to the custom of that time, the five or six candidates were sitting on the bench, who rose in a body and bowed profoundly on the entrance of Washington. Very gracefully returning their salutation, the register of the polls said: "Well, General, how do you vote?" (It was then by viva voce.) He looked a moment at the candidates, and replied, "Gentlemen, I vote for measures, not men;" and having audibly pronounced his vote, he made another graceful bow and retired. He was loudly cheered by the outside crowd on returning to his carriage.

AN INCORRUPTIBLE CROWN.—A French officer, who was a prisoner upon his parole at Reading, met with a Bible; he read it, and was so impressed with its contents that he was convinced of the folly of skeptical principles, and of the truths of Christianity, and resolved to become a Protestant. When his gay associates rallied him for taking so serious a turn, he said in his vindication: "I have done no more than my old school-fellow, Bernadotte, who has become a Lutheran."

"Yes, but he became so," said his associates, "to obtain a crown."

"My motive," said the Christian officer, "is the same; we only differ as to the place. The object of Bernadotte is to obtain a crown in Sweden; mine is to obtain a crown in heaven."

THE liberty of the press resolves itself into this great issue—that it has been in every country the last liberty which subjects have been able to wrest from power. Other liberties are held under governments, but the liberty of opinion keeps govrnments themselves in due subjection to their duties. This has produced the martyrdom of truth in every age, and the world has been only purged from ignorance with the innocent blood of those who have enlightened it.—Erskine.

THE roots of plants are hid under ground, so that they themselves are not seen; but they appear in their branches, flowers and fruit, which argue there is a root and life in them. Thus the graces of the Spirit planted in the soul, though themselves invisible, yet discover their being and life in the track of a Christian's life, his words, his actions, and the frame of his carriage.—Leighton.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents, Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 48 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the POST OFFICE, COUNTY, AND STATE must be given, and written plainly; and if a CHANGE is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

HEART—REINS—SOUL—SPIRIT.

WE humbly conceive that light needs to be thrown on what may be called the philosophical language of the Bible; or those terms which are employed by the sacred writers when speaking of man as an intellectual, emotive, and responsible agent. We present a few observations which the reader will please to take into consideration; they might have been greatly expanded, but space forbids anything save a very condensed exhibition of thoughts on the subject.

1. The Jews undoubtedly believed that the "heart," "reins" or kidneys and "bowels" were the seats of thought and affection; and in this they are now proven to be philosophically incorrect, for the "heart," "reins," and "bowels" are neither the seat of these higher functions of man, nor are they the organs whereby they are excited, for these superior functions are shown to be connected with the brain, either directly or instrumentally as is at present almost universally admitted. But though the Jewish ideas were unsound, and their phraseology—"heart," "reins," "bowels," was also necessarily incorrect, their views were solid thus far at least—which indeed, is the essential truth on the subject—that man does perform the functions, which they were wont to ascribe to "heart," "reins," and "bowels," though these are neither the seat of the functions, nor the organs whereby they are produced. There can be little doubt that the Jews ascribed thought, reflection, and emotion to their "hearts," etc., because these are, more or less, and sometimes violently, affected by the thoughts and feelings, evolved by or through means of the brain, which result is unquestionably to be accounted for by the nervous sympathy established between the brain and these visceral organs. So that, in truth, the Jews erred in their philosophy, and in their philosophical terminology, by placing effects for causes; the effect of anger on the heart, for instance, they regarded as evidence that anger had its seat in the heart, whereas we know its seat is the brain.

2. When the Holy Spirit speaks of the heart of man, we cannot properly understand it to be God's revelation that man's heart performs the functions of thought and feeling, which the Jews conceived it did, since we find the amplest evidence to convince us that in this they were in error. It is enough to admit that man does think and feel, love and hate, etc., and that the author of Revelation uses the popular language without at all sanctioning it as correct; leaving after times to gather sounder information as to the powers and functions of man and his organs, knowing that philosophy would by-and-by discover the truth on these points, or, if not, that all philosophy would admit as facts of consciousness and observation, that men did think and feel, however erroneous the prevailing views might be as to the sources and organs of thought and passion. It is not necessary to man, in order to religion and morality, that it should know what particular organ thinks and feels, more than it is essential for life that a person understands what organ secrets bile, or what is the chemical composition of his food. Man has powers of thought and emotion, of observation and conscience, and these he is bound to use in reference to his Creator and his fellow beings, as scripture ordains. He may ascribe these powers to his "reins," his "heart," or to anything belonging to him, or supposed to belong to him, he pleases; but that he has these capacities he must admit, and bound he is to use them for all the glory of his heavenly King.

3. Hence we see the same phraseology employed with reference to God himself in the Revelation: but it would be awfully foolish to suppose that the infinite Spirit has a "heart" and "bowels," etc., which we find are applied to God with the utmost freedom in the Bible. Of necessity human language must have been adopted by the Holy Ghost when speaking of God to men: and the ideas, when conveyed by human language, are generally understood without even an effort. For instance, men supposed the "heart" felt and thought, hence, to express the idea that God thinks or feels, his heart is spoken of; but the author of inspiration no more intimates thereby that the divine Being has a "heart" or bowels like men, than he does that the "heart" "reins" or "bowels" of men originate thought and emotion, or are the organs of them.

4. Even philosophers in our day, as we do ourselves, must use the unavoidably current and, strictly speaking, incorrect phraseology. For instance, it is quite common, after the example of the Bible, to speak of "the heart," of a "bad heart" a "good heart," a "kind heart," a "cruel heart," etc., when we know full well that the heart no more thinks and feels than the hand sees, or the eyes hear. The heart is the organ for propelling the blood through the frame, and is neither the organ nor seat of any intellectual or moral function; these result from the action of brain, or, at least, have their seat there. But if the heart does not originate sentiment or passion, these are evolved somehow and somewhere in the man, and the term heart is used by us to describe these capacities, and no person can misunderstand its use now when so employed.

5. In speaking of "soul" it is ever to be remembered that the primary meaning of the term is, an organized being made of dust; indeed, it exactly expresses what is now commonly understood by "body." Man was soul before he got the breath of life; it only made him living soul. Hence, because man is soul, the breath which quickens him is called "soul," as, "let this child's soul come into him again;" and very probably in this and similar instances, the term expresses a compound idea, viz., breath entering the lungs and resulting in life. The same word very often conveys the idea of man living and exercising all his powers, as "fear came upon every soul,"—"if your soul were in my soul's tead,"—"he satisfieth the longing soul," etc., and when so used, it expresses the idea of living person, or a man executing, or capable of executing, all the functions proper to his species. Indeed, in a multitude of instances, if the word soul were struck out of the text, the meaning would be left unimpaired. A few examples may be given to illustrate this: Lev. xiv., 2, "If a soul shall sin through ignorance," that is, if a man shall sin, etc., or, more briefly, he that sinneth through ignorance. Lev. xvii., 2, "No soul of you shall eat blood,"—none of you shall eat blood. Num. ix., 12, "The man that is clean and is not on a journey, and forbeareth to keep the passover, the same soul," or the same, or simply, he, "shall be cut off," etc. Ps. xxxiv., 22, "The Lord redeemeth the soul of his servant," or, simply, his servant. Prov. x., 10, "Not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish," or, simply, the righteous to famish. Lam. ii., 12, "When their soul was proud in their bosom," or when they were proud, etc. There may be passages in which soul is applied to man, specifying one or more of his functions as an intellectual and moral being; but there is not one, as far as we judge, in which it is clearly taught that all these functions are executed by a separate part in man called "soul," in addition to the soul—his corporal frame, and divisible from it, and capable of surviving in consciousness its dissolution. Even the phrase "destroy soul and body in Gehenna," and all like it, simply express the destruction of the entire man, whatever may be the elements of his composition. To argue from them that man has a soul capable of existing disembodied, is, we humbly conceive, to misapprehend them altogether.

6. And then a wonderfully compound creature man must be, if all is actually capable of thought that, in the Bible, has thought ascribed to it. Thought is assigned to "reins," "heart," "soul," "mind," and "spirit," and do all these think? Will they all survive the hour of death, if that which thinks is placed beyond the dominion of the grim tyrant? If the fact of ascribing thought to "soul" in man, taking soul even in the popular sense, is to prove that it shall survive death, why not the same of "heart" and "reins?" And if "soul" were to be set aside as merely descriptive of man and his powers, or, simply, of the living being man, what shall we say of "spirit?" If the heart, which is spoken of as the seat of thought and affection, is not to survive death, on what ground can we say the spirit shall? Surely, judging from the mere quantity of expression about "heart," it is at least as important to thought and emotion as the "spirit;" we might safely say more so. Moreover, if the heart is, in scripture, spoken of as the seat of thought and affection, etc., when we are all prepared to affirm that, as sound philosophy, this is inadmissible, may not the inspired writers use the term "spirit," in reference to man, when there may be no such spirit in him as is commonly understood by the term, that is, a spirit, fit to exist apart from organization and be in perfect consciousness at the same time? If, because the Bible ascribes thought, etc., to the spirit, it is inferred that it could exist and think after death, why not deduce the same about the "heart?" If the one is warranted, the other is no less so. The heart, it may be responded, obviously dies and corrupts, but the spirit is not seen to expire. Granted, we see the heart moulder into dust, and if it thought, as the Jews imagined, verily its thoughts must have vanished; but if the "spirit" thinks, who can tell us how it fares in the hour of dissolution? None but God, as far as we know, and, when he declares that, on the very day of death, man's "thoughts perish," wherever, or by whatever in him they are directly or indirectly produced, what more perfect solution of the question could we desire? When the "heart," which is only a part of man, is spoken of in scripture as the seat of thought, etc., may not this "spirit" in man be at most some invisible attribute of living soul, as essential to us as the heart, and yet as incapable of surviving death as the fleshly blood-engine in our breast, which organ, after all, has no direct connection with the production of thought; it and other mental and moral functions being, in some way, evolved by the brain.

7. Indeed, the whole of the matter would appear to come to this; man is a being having all the powers and functions—intellectual, moral, and animal, ascribed in the Bible to "heart," "reins," "bowels," "soul," "mind," and "spirit:" and, from the mere use of these terms, we can tell nothing as to what is the correct and philosophical view of his constitution, or whether any part of him can survive death and live on thereafter in perfect consciousness. Whatever man is, the Scripture doctrine is, the whole man needs salvation; the whole man requires to be sanctified; the whole man ought to be devoted to God in love and obedience; and it seems to be no less the teaching of the same book that, at death, the whole man dies. In the divine narrative of man's creation two things only are spoken of, soul and breath. "God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul," Gen. ii., 7, a living soul capable of all the functions designated by the terms "heart," "reins," "mind," "soul," and "spirit,"—terms expressive of the conjectures of man as to his own constitution, and, though incorrect, at least to a great extent, pointing, nevertheless, to essential and universally acknowledged truths. Whatever man thinks he has, God commands him to lay it on his altar; though by speaking of men, as they speak of themselves, in summoning them, for instance, to give him their "hearts," he is not to be understood as ratifying the existing ideas about "reins," "heart," "soul," "mind," and "spirit." Man does what the "reins," "heart," "soul," and "spirit" are supposed to accomplish, and with the ultimate facts, or the capacity of man for thought, feeling, conscience, and moral responsibility, inspiration is only concerned; leaving us to rectify our ideas and language about the seat of thought, and its origin and laws, as research makes progress during the lapse of time. Hence all such passages as "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart—soul—mind and strength," "your whole soul, body and spirit," "your soul and body," etc., seem just to express entire man without, in the smallest degree intimating that the being man is divinely declared to be a compound in his construction; one half at least descending to the dust at death, the other half capable of floating away then to heaven or hell. Indeed, the creation account of our race is to guide us in our ideas about the human constitution, and in the interpretation of all language used in the Bible concerning our powers and functions. We there in Eden see man made; our origin, and the means whereby life is sustained, are revealed to us—God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul; and, concerning the organs, functions—animal, intellectual, and moral, we are permitted to inquire and speculate as we please, and to give them what titles best suits our judgment.

CULTIVATION OF SPIRITUAL FEELINGS.

IT is no easy thing to keep the heart right. The downward tendencies of our nature make it hard for us to rise in spiritual being—to run and not be weary—to walk and not faint. This difficulty is greatly increased when we mistake the source of our strength, or the way in which the fire of spiritual feeling is kindled up in the soul. We may attempt to draw water from a cistern that has none in it, or we may try, like Newton, to light our candle with an extinguisher on it. Christ is the life of the soul, animating and moving it in all the ways of godliness. But how does he do this? How does he work this life in us? We are not left to guesses or surmises here. He sanctifies his people through his truth. It is by this that he lifts them up, and pours light into the understanding and strength into the heart. It is by this that he deepens their humility, and increases their faith, and raises them up above the surface of a mere profession, cold and unproductive, and enables them to live, not like the trees in winter, stripped of their foliage, and with their life hidden in the earth, but to live in the ways of God—"in beauty clad, and with health in every vein," living to him in all they do."

We have something to do, therefore, in the attainment of this strength. We must act rightly if we would have this spiritual life. We must regard the laws of mind in this matter. Pious feeling is awakened in the soul only by the contemplation of that which is suited to awaken such feelings. The heart is affected through the intellect—through its action. "While I was musing," says the Psalmist, "the fire burned." "Mine eye," exclaims the weeping prophet of Israel, "mine eye affecteth my heart." This indirect control is all that we have over the world of feeling. The man who cannot produce a quicker circulation of the blood by simply willing it, can determine to take a medicine to produce that effect. So the man who wishes to excite or allay any particular feeling, while he cannot bid it exist or cease to be, can fix his mind on considerations which will bring about the desired result. Here, then, we have a fundamental principle in mental philosophy. Feeling of any kind is awakened only by the contemplation of that which is calculated to excite it. This is a law of man's moral nature. It is just as uniform, and as far beyond the reach of an exception, as any law in the material world. We may, therefore, just as reasonably expect that the law of gravitation will cease, and that the stones of the street will fly upward, as to imagine that feeling will exist in the heart without its thinking upon that which is suited to produce it. Without this musing the fire will not burn. Without this thinking we cannot mount upward. We only dream of flying, and forget, as Coleridge remarks, that those who dream of flying, fly only in their dreams.

This great principle of our intellectual and moral nature may be easily tested. A man wishes to have deep spiritual feeling. He desires, for example, to feel deeply penitent—to sink down in dust before God. Well, this feeling will not kindle up in his heart at his bidding. Nor will its fires burn within as the consequence of his musing upon any or every theme of meditation. The pages of a romance, the columns of a newspaper, detailing the state of trade or the condition of the money market, will not excite it. Dwelling on the pleasures of sense—on scenes of earthly delight, will not call it forth, and for the plain reason that these things are not suited to produce it. They have no tendencies to awaken such feeling. They turn the mind away from those considerations through which God is wont to work repentance in the heart, namely, its action in reference to God. To have this feeling he must take a very different course. He must fix his mind upon himself—upon his true condition. He must look at God's character in contrast with his own—at his goodness to him, and at his own action in return—at the law of God, which is holy, just, and good, and at the long, dark catalogue of his transgressions of that law. These are the considerations which are suited to affect the heart, and these are the musings through which God is wont to work in us that repentance which is unto life, and that brokenness of heart which is the acceptable sacrifice. It is through such meditation and prayer that we reach the dust before God, for it is through such action on our part that he works in us the feeling of repentance.

Again, a man wishes to feel more love to Christ—to have his bosom swell with holy fervor—with emotions for a higher gratitude, and a warmer zeal in his service. Well, sighing for this will not produce it. Simply praying for it will not cause it to exist in us. No, not at all. The mind must be fixed upon that which is suited to awaken such feeling. He must fix his thoughts upon the cross of Christ—upon the High One, suffering, dying, for him. He must muse upon Gethsemane and Calvary; must judge, with Paul, "that, if one die for all, then were all dead; and that he died for all, that they which live should not live unto themselves, but unto him who died for them." It is in such things that the love of Christ constraineth. In such musings is it that,

> "The heart grows warm with holy fire,
> And kindles with a pure desire."

Yes, it is when his "dear cross" is brought before the mind that the "eyes are melted into tears." Looking, then, to Jesus, beholding the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world, is the way to have the heart burn within us with love and devotion to him. We respect the laws of the physical world in our action for physical results. We do not attempt to warm the body by sighing for it, or to recruit its wasted energies by simply willing it. We do not say to the body, "Be thou clothed and be thou strong." We use means suited to the ends we wish to gain. So we must act in spiritual things. We must seek to call forth and sustain pious feelings in ourselves by keeping before the mind that which is calculated to produce such feeling. We must muse on the things which are above, if the life and the power which are from above are to be ours. The thoughts must be on heaven, if the heart is to be there.—Selected.

DR. J. K. FINLEY.

THIS excellent brother, whose "LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN" has had so wide a circulation, written when he resided in Pittsburg, Pa., but who now lives in Niles, Mich., we see, by a newspaper he has sent us, is called to battle against Clerical bigotry and misrepresentations. It seems a "Rev. Mr. Morgan," a travelling agent in favor of a female academy in Mich., visited Niles, Sunday, May 24th, and preached in the evening in the Presbyterian church, making an "unprovoked attack" on those he called "Annihilationists." DR. FINLEY, in his communication to the paper in Niles, speaks as follows:

Mr. Morgan undertook to bring them into contempt by a course, not of reasoning, or of Bible arguments, but by low sarcasms, directed against the name he had given them, and by the free use of such epithets as fools, ignoramuses, atheists, disbelievers in God and in the Bible, destitute of scientific knowledge, etc.

The whole performance was so undignified, and so unbecoming the house of God and the sacredness of the profession which he dishonored, that I have not heard a person speak of it, irrespective of his own belief on the subject, who was not thoroughly disgusted with the whole exhibition. It being well known that I am a firm believer in the doctrine of the final destruction of the wicked, quite a number of persons have requested me to take some public notice of it; while others regarded it as too low and contemptible to deserve or require attention.

After taking the subject into consideration, I have thought proper, in deference to the expressed wish of many whose feelings I respect, to ask the privilege of making a few remarks in reply to Mr. Morgan, in your paper. I ask this favor, because, as you are well aware, my voice is so much injured by my late attack of congestion of the lungs, that I am fearful it would give out under the effort of making a public address, which has been suggested, and which course I should otherwise have preferred.

Mr. Morgan, as I have intimated, directed his grand effort against the term Annihilationist, and overwhelmed the audience by the amazing depth of his scientific knowledge, when he assured them that it was an undoubted fact which science has disclosed, that matter could not be annihilated; that when by combustion, or in any other way, matter seemed to be annihilated, it had only changed its form, and in doing so had entered into new forms and combinations. There is no doubt the congregation would have been awfully impressed and solemnized, under such a wonderful display of his profound acquisitions in science, had they not known that this great fact is one of the first that the veriest tyro in chemistry is made to learn. I venture to say that in our Union School you will not find a scholar who has been in the chemical class one month, who is not as well acquainted with it as the very scientific Mr. Morgan is himself.

And now, Mr. Editor, what has such stuff to do with the theological belief of those whom he was attacking? Just nothing at all; it was simply setting up a man of straw, to amuse his audience by showing how scientifically he could knock it down. But, sir, I am wrong in saying it was so simple and silly a thing as this; it was vastly more than this; it was a great moral fraud; it was a direct implication that those whom he so grossly abused, believed these absurdities, and that they constituted an important part of their theological creed. A commercial fraud of equal magnitude would consign him to the penitentiary, and to the contempt of all honest and just men in any community.

Our belief has nothing whatever to do with the annihilation of matter; it is a firm belief in the truth that the Bible is a revelation, and not an enigma, and that God meant just what he said was the penalty for violating his law. Law is no law without a penalty attached for its violation, otherwise it is only advice. Common sense, to which the preacher appealed, will teach any one possessing it, that in promulgating any penal law, it is is due to those subjected to its operation, that the penalty should be plain and easily understood. To enunciate such penalty under an enigmatical form, besides being absurd in the eyes of all intelligent persons, would be the grossest injustice, as it would leave the way open for an unjust judge to exercise the most cruel injustice without let or hindrance. Now this is just what orthodoxy does in relation to the penalty for sin. God gave Adam, our representative a law requiring him to abstain from eating the fruit of a certain tree in the garden of Eden, with the penalty plainly expressed, of death, if he disobeyed the law. The result was that Adam broke the law, and God at his first interview with him after his disobedience, assured him that the penalty should be inflicted, and at the same time made the nature of the penalty, which was death, so plain, that common sense left to its own dictates could not possibly misunderstand its meaning: "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

Our orthodox teachers affirm that this was not the full penalty but only a part, and indeed only a small part of it. The term death, they assume, includes death moral or spiritual, and death eternal; this last being in fact no death at all, but everlasting life in unspeakable torments—torments and sufferings so great as to be beyond the highest conceptions of the human mind. Now, sir, is it not passing strange that God should have acquainted Adam with only a small fraction of the penalty, and left him and the whole race of man for four thousand years in entire ignorance of the most terrible part of the penalty, which he and they were to suffer; for the most learned and excellent orthodox writers admit that throughout the whole of the Old Testament not the slightest intimation is given of any punishment beyond this life.

Mr. Morgan has a good deal to say about moral or spiritual death as being a part of the threatened penalty. This is so absurd that it seems to me, no one but a professional theologian, bound up in the fetters of traditional prejudice, could ever have invented or believed it. What is spiritual or moral death? Mr. Morgan repeatedly affirmed that it always meant misery. What does the Bible, fully according with our common sense, teach? It affirms that it consists in being a sinner "dead in trespasses and sins;" and who can reasonably dispute the truth of their affirmation?

According to our preacher, then, the penalty of sin is to become a sinner, and to go on helplessly sinning throughout life. What would be thought of a law against stealing, the penalty of which should be that the offender should go on stealing, and turn him loose to prey on the property of his neighbors during the remainder of his life? And yet this would not be one whit more ridiculous than to make the penalty for violating God's law, that the offender should be condemned to spiritual death. But the absurdity of the position, great as it is, constitutes by no means the greatest objection to it. Inconceivably above and beyond this is its latent blasphemy against the Son of God, our glorious Redeemer; it makes him a sinner, "dead in trespasses and sins." Mr. Morgan professes to believe, as do all evangelical Christians, that the Lord Jesus Christ bore the penalty of our sins, and if he did, and that penalty is spiritual death, there is no avoiding the logical conclusion that our adorable Saviour was a sinner. I shudder to write down the horrid blasphemy, and only do it, that I may utter my earnest protest against it, and condemnation of the infamous slander.

Mr. Morgan's theory of eternal misery being a part of the penalty, is in direct conflict with all our innate ideas of justice, as well as the teachings of the Bible. What would be thought of the justice or righteousness of a law-giver who should specify death by hanging as the penalty for violating any given law, and should then subject the violator to the most aggravated tortures during all his life or, until after many years of agonizing sufferings, he should sink under the weight of them. And yet this is but a feeble illustration of the injustice and cruelty of which they virtually accuse the Judge of all the earth, of whom it is written, "Righteousness and Judgment are the habitations of his throne," Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right? I should like to say more on this highly interesting and most important topic, but fear I have already trespassed too largely upon your kindness.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR OF HERALD OF LIFE. We presume the secret of Mr. Morgan's attack was that Dr. Finley's influence in Niles was making not a few converts to the truth of "No life out of Christ." He has sent us six or seven subscribers to our paper, this volume; and being, as we suppose, still a member of the Presbyterian church, Mr. Morgan probably thought to stop the "heresy" from spreading in Niles. The result will show, we doubt not, that "the wrath of man," though a clerical one, "shall praise the LORD" by furthering the cause it was designed to hinder. Fear not, Br. Finley. "In the LORD JEHOVAH is everlasting strength."

PETER'S CONVERSION.

WE were no little surprised a few days since at hearing a preacher of long experience very confidently assert that Peter was not converted until the occurrence of the memorable event at the house of Cornelius; that "he was seven years getting converted." Strong as were the prejudices of that apostle, hard as it was for him to exchange some of the ceremonials of the law for the simple truths of the new dispensation introduced to benefit alike both Jew and Gentile, difficult as it was for him to realize that the cold formalities of outward service no longer availed; who, before, ever thought of charging him with running so long before he was sent, delivering so long before he had received? Let us briefly examine the evidence in the case.

Just before the ascension of Jesus, himself and disciples "being assembled" on Mount Olivet, he commanded them not to "depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, said he, ye have heard of me." What was the promise, and when did they hear it of Jesus? Shortly before his crucifixtion, he assured the disciples that he must soon leave them; referring, of course, to his going to dwell for a time with the Father, and consoled them with this promise, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth." What is this Comforter, this Spirit of truth? Let Jesus himself be authority. "These things," said he, "have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you. But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you!" John xiv., 25, 26.

Now if we can ascertain when the fulfilment of that promise, an event the apostles were to await at Jerusalem, took place; when the Holy Ghost descended upon them and brought the many things Jesus had told them, to their remembrance; and in connection with it find Peter, braving all opposition and danger, declaring those things, and giving evidence that his whole heart is in the work of proclaiming the Gospel of Christ, so far as he understands it; then we may know of a surety that he is a converted man. The eleven did not have to wait long at Jerusalem, for on the pentecostal feast day, which, when Jesus gave the command, was not long hence, they being "all with one accord in one place," suddenly, together with other mighty demonstrations, "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." Ah, Jesus has not forgotten them; the Father has heard his prayer; the promise is fulfilled; the "Comforter" sent.

What now is Peter's condition? From the crouching coward who thrice denied his Master, he has become strong in faith, bold as a lion in the performance of his duty, and, heedless of all considerations of personal safety, he openly proclaims Jesus as the Messiah; whom he charges the Jews with having taken and wickedly crucified and slain. This does not sound much like the kind of talk we would expect from an unconverted man. But we will see if he is consistent. "Therefore," says he, "let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." That announcement might have cost Peter his head; but if, in his zeal to preach those teachings of Jesus which the Spirit of truth has brought to his remembrance, any thoughts of danger to self arise, he is more than willing to take the risk. Under his preaching, together with that of the other apostles, thousands believe on Christ and are added to the church. Is Peter still consistent? Yes, they all continue "praising God."

Well, what next? Peter and John go together up to the temple to pray. At the gate called beautiful they are importuned for alms by a man lame from his birth. Peter, fixing his eyes upon him, said, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee; in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk." Is there power in those words? Does he speak with authority? "Immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength, and he, leaping up, stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God." Does Omnipotence delegate to unconverted men power to work miracles, to heal all manner of diseases, and even to raise the dead? All this was accomplished by Peter. After their discharge by the chief priests and elders, who, having arrested, could find no evidence upon which to convict them, they went and told the other apostles what had been done, and they all "lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said, Lord, thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is . . . and now, Lord, behold their threatenings; and grant unto thy servants that with all boldness they may speak thy word." Do unconverted men praise God, and pray for strength to preach his word? But why multiply words? Though Peter's vision is yet seven years hence, he is already a convert, and a faithful one. The Sadducees made no mistake about Peter's conversion when they cast him into prison for working miracles and preaching salvation through Jesus, nor did the angels when they released him. To the great truth that the provisions of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ embrace Gentile as well as Jew, Peter was converted by his vision and what he saw at the house of Cornelius, and he frankly acknowledged it, saying, "of a truth, I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." Peter afterward learned other truths as well, but he was converted long before he learned this.

THE "GENEROUS OFFER" REVIVED.

It will be remembered that the Hon. O. S. HALSTED, last winter made the offer to send his work, "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE," to any subscriber of the HERALD OF LIFE for $2, and himself prepay the postage. The retail price of the work is $3. By accepting the judge's offer, you, in fact, get this invaluable work for a little more than half price; as the author gets but $1.68 after paying postage. The book is one to study; and with it, your Bible will be more perfectly understood. The offer is a most generous one, and we hope many more will avail themselves of it. It is not restricted to your taking one copy at this rate. You can have any number you choose to send the money for. Send $2 for each copy; writing your own name and Post Office address plain, and the work will come to you free of any other expense.

Direct your communication to "HON. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad St., NEWARK, N. J.

OH, how many of our youth are passing through these flowery gates of social pleasures down into abysses of sensuality, of godless pride, from which only the ministry of angels can lift them up into the light of a real life.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JUNE 10, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"THREE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS."

JOHN MARSH, McKean, Pa., writes: Send me your three campaign documents, viz., LIFE FROM THE DEAD; A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE; and THE JUDGMENT, in equal numbers of each.

Br. Marsh's idea is not a bad one. We have entered on a campaign which is not to end till our CANDIDATE is installed. He is elected of God, but for us to have the benefit of his election we must take part in the installation. The Bible is the grand proclamation that Jesus is the Christ—the KING of God's choice. That proclamation must be defended. He is also the LIFE-GIVER. That truth must be proclaimed without faltering. "Life from the dead" is in Jesus' hands; God has placed it there; and none who refuse to accept it at his hands will ever get it at all, but "utterly perish in their own corruption." Hence we need the document on this subject.

In order that it may be known who shall have "Life from the dead," there must be the Judgment before the life is given. Here, then, we need the document relating to "The Judgment."

The "three campaign documents" are now ready to go out on their mission, and let us see if we cannot make some approach to "the men of this generation" in wisdom in this campaigning business. Our King is soon coming to organize his government, and he will have no traitors, no apostates, none that love the praise of men, more than the praise of God: no bribery, no corruption, no liars, will be tolerated then; no, only such as heartily accept God's chosen King, and accept the life God has given in his Son, can go into life from the dead, or reign in the kingdom. Let the light on these subjects be scattered. Who will have a part in this campaign? Let "clubs" be got up in every place. If there are no more than two, let them enter on the campaigning at once; and let even one count himself an "organized body" fully competent to the work of preaching by scattering the campaign documents. Shall we not, for once, go ahead of the political campaign that is likely soon to agitate the nation? Ours is as much more important and vast, as eternal is more vast and important than "four years." Let us concentrate on the great battle which is to result in the life or death of untold millions for ages without end. We ought to scatter a million of documents in the next few months. Great and small sums are wanted in this work.

First of all, it is true, the HERALD OF LIFE must be kept in the field; the others are all auxiliary documents, but they will help to extend the power and efficiency of the HERALD, because undivided in their object and aim.

How can work be accomplished with more economy than by circulating the above three campaign documents? One hundred of each will be sent for $10 to one address. Even if sent by mail the postage on the three hundred will be but $2 more. But, in general, large packages should be sent by express.

Do not let this matter sleep on our hands. It has begun well, and let us push it with energy everywhere and in all quarters. Let every house be visited; not to force the documents on any one, but invite them to read. Tell the people, plainly, they are about eternal life. Perhaps it will be best, in some cases to loan them, and call again for them, after a while.

Now here is work for all, and all can do a little; some can do much; and we may look for a glorious harvest. Let us not waste time about political squabbles; let the worldlings attend to that business while we go in for life eternal under Christ our King on David's throne, soon to be set up.

TENT MEETING.

The Life and Advent Mission Tent will be pitched near Dover, Morris Co., N. J., Lord willing, to commence meetings Saturday 13th inst., and hold over the two following Lord's days. The cause there is in its infancy, and there are many adversaries. We beg an interest in the prayers and sympathies of all that love the appearing of our Lord; and hope as many as can will cheer and encourage by their presence. It is on the line of the Morris and Essex R. R., running from New York to Easton, Pa.

S. W. BISHOP.
E. WOLCOTT.

MANLY ON INHERENT IMMORTALITY.

BR. R. CADWELL, Cortland, N. Y., sends us an argument by "W. E. Manly: Biblical Review, Vol. I., On Creation." Br. C. says, it is "new to me;" and asks, "Is it Scriptural?" We give the argument, and shall respond to it by notes, which please observe as you read. The argument is the following:

It is worthy of being noticed, as a most important fact of revelation, that man was made in the image of God. This image can have no reference to man's physical form. (1). It was evidently his spiritual nature that has the divine image; and this fact is the best evidence, furnished in this part of the Bible (Genesis), to prove our immortality. (2.) We may criticise the words "soul" and "spirit" as much as we please, and we shall still be in the dark; but in the fact of man's likeness to the divine Being we see good and substantial reasons for believing in the soul's immortality. We are like God—we have the same original attributes, and they are as imperishable in us as they are in him. (3.)

"Were we to seek for a philosophical interpretation of the likeness we possess to the Creator, we should find it in the language of the apostle to the Gentiles, who calls God "Father of our spirits," in contradistinction to our earthly parents, whom he designates as the "fathers of our flesh" (4) The human soul is the child of God, and as such it is presumed to be like its parent; and if we look closely to what man is, as a spiritual being, the resemblance will become quite too obvious to be mistaken. (5.) The spirit of man and the spirit of God are alike—the one emanated from the other, as the child from the parent, and both have the same attributes. (6.) The wisdom and the power of man, and the wisdom and power of God, are alike. The justice of man and the justice of God are the same. The benevolence of man and of God are identical. The difference is not in the nature of these attributes, but only in their extent. Man is finite, and God infinte." (7.)

(1.) How do you know it "can have no reference to man's physical form?" That is a mere assumption. That God has manifested himself in "man's physical form" is undeniable. None doubt but that he did so to Abraham, when about to destroy Sodom and Gomorrah; and few doubt but that he did so in "the man Christ Jesus." And how does Mr. Manly know that the first Adam was not a type, in form, of the second Adam, and was said to be in the image of God on that account?

(2.) It remains to be proved that the first man, Adam, had a spiritual nature. The testimony of both our Lord and Paul is against such an assumption. Jesus testifies, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh:" hence, "Ye must be born again," because only "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." John iii., 6, 7. Paul testifies, the first Adam was not spiritual; he says, "Howbeit, that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, [psuchikon, animal;] afterward that which is spiritual;" [i. e., the second Adam.] 1 Corth. xv., 40. Yet in the face of two such witnesses, Mr. Manly and other believers in inherent immortality affirm the first man had a spiritual nature.

(3.) Here is another bold and impious assumption, born of "the serpent"—"Ye shall be as gods;" Gen. iii., 5; only Mr. Manly exceeds the serpent in the boldness of his assumption. The serpent did not say Ye "are like God," but only "Ye shall be," if you eat the forbidden fruit. In this respect Mr. Manly out-generals the old serpent. He hastens to declare they were already, by their creation, "like God," possessed of "the same original attributes," etc. Of course, this is a long stride in advance of the serpent, and that proves Mr. M. wiser than the serpent; and, no doubt, is a "substantial reason for believing in the soul's immortality," in his mind. We do not wonder he is "in the dark" while "criticising the words soul and spirit;" for his view of soul and spirit finds no support in the word of God, and never could bear the light of criticism. It is like the birds of night, that see least when the sun shines; so it is with all the advocates of inherent immortality.

Mr. Manly must take the consequence of his assumptions that men "are like God, have the same original attributes," etc. Omnipotent, omniscient, self-existent, etc., as well as "imperishable" and "immortal." Really, it is not manly in such beings to die at all! Why should they? How can they? The serpent was not so far out of the way, after all, "Ye shall not surely die." He was the first preacher of inherent immortality, but "the seed of the serpent" has multiplied greatly since. Men are not only "like God," but "as imperishable." This Mr. Manly belongs to the school of "Spiritism," even if he has a name among the Orthodox. We must doubt, however, if orthodoxy owns such perversions of the Bible.

(4.) Who is Paul speaking of when he "calls God Father of spirits?" Mr. Manly "corrupts the word of God," that he may establish his own "traditions." He misquotes Paul's language and adds to the word of God. He says, "the apostle calls God, Father of our spirits." A man who has the "original attributes of God" should not thus falsify the truth. There is no "our" in the text." See Heb. xii., 9. But when we become "partakers of the divine nature," not by creation, but by the "exceeding great and precious promises," then we may call God "Father," not before: then, having received of "the Spirit of adoption," we may call God Father of our spirits, the divine nature of which we are made partakers by grace, and not by original creation. 2 Pet. i., 4. Thus vanishes Mr. Manly's 4th assumption.

(6.) These statements border on blasphemy, but have already been duly considered. See notes 3 and 4.

(7.) A final stream of assumptions, nullified, however, by the admission, "Man is finite and God is infinite." So, after all, the great parade of man's being "like God," flashes out into an "infinite" difference, and explodes Mr. Manly's whole theory into a "puff of empty" speculations. So fades inherent immortality, and all the fine-spun theories built thereon.

What the image of God was, in which man was created, we are not told in the Bible, and therefore to affirm it consists in any one or more things, in particular, is only an assumption and of no weight in argument. The nearest approach to a certainty is found in Paul's language, Col. iii., 10, "And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." The image seems to be, a capacity to obtain knowledge above all other creatures God has made. By the abuse of that capacity man fell: he sought knowledge in a forbidden way. He sought to know more and faster than God saw best for him, and his seed show the same propensity now, especially when they try to find immortality in themselves, before the resurrection and the renewal by the Holy Spirit, seeking to glorify themselves, instead of waiting for God's time and manner of glorifying them who believe in Jesus, the LIFE-GIVER.

"NO LIFE OUT OF CHRIST."

BY this expression we mean not only that without union with Christ there is no eternal life, but that there is no life after death to any of Adam's race: once dead they remain eternally under death's dominion, except there be, in this life, a union formed with the LIFE-GIVER, Jesus Christ.

This doctrine is taught in many ways, or forms of expression in the Bible; and may be said to be the unvarying, or general tenor of the testimony of God, both in the Old and New Testaments. In 1 Corth. xv., the apostle Paul clearly sets forth this doctrine, making a future life to depend on union with Christ and his resurrection. If Christ be not raised. . . ye are yet in your sins: then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Why are believers in Jesus yet in their sins, if Christ be not raised from the dead? Because, if he is not raised there is no resurrection for any one; and believers, as well as others, are yet in their sins; that is, unpardoned and under the curse of sin, which is death; hence, will have no resurrection: "then they also who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished," and have no resurrection, because they died "in their sins."

Now, what is all this but saying, if any man dies in his sins, death has its natural course, and holds him under its power, never to be revived into life? "Death is the wages of sin:" sin unpardoned—unremoved by a living union with the living Christ—holds its victim under death, and no power can extricate him, even for a "temporary life."

Peter declared, on the day of Pentecost, that it "was not possible that" Christ "should be holden of death," Acts ii., 24. Why was it not possible? Because he "knew no sin"—on him death had no claim. But suppose he had sinned, would not death have held him? Certainly; and man's deliverance would have been impossible. Men have sinned, and but for Christ and his revival into life, our opponents admit, "all ground of hope is gone." Why? Because men are yet in their sins. Very well. If sinners do not come to Christ to have their sins taken away, are they not yet in their sins? and if so, is not "all ground" for their revival into life removed? It really seems to us that it is demonstrated that if men die in their sins there is no ground to expect their revival into life at all.

Thus, to be in our sins, while alive, here, is to be without a revival from death, according to Paul's logic, or theology; and if the living Corinthian believers were in their sins, all ground of hope was gone; but not these alone were excluded from hope of future life, but "then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

To be in sins, then, is to be excluded from a revival into life:

But all the wicked dead died in their sins:

Therefore, they will have no revival into life.

Such seems to us to be a logical conclusion from the construction of the text, and the reference of the term "also;" and being "in our sins" is in fact the reason assigned for perishing without a revival into life. This idea is in harmony with Paul's concluding remarks of this chapter. He says, "The sting of death is sin:" i. e., sin is that which gives death its destructive power and its victory; and sin's power to hold its victim under death "is the law;" but to believers "God giveth the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ:" for unbelievers there is no deliverance from death; no, not even a "temporary" one; "the wicked is driven away in his wickedness; but the righteous hath hope in his death." Prov. xiv., 32. "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi., 16. Yea, "he shall be holden with the cords of his sins." Prov. v., 22. Christ was raised from death; "God loosed the pains" [or, as some render it, "the cords"] "of death." By virtue of the cords of death being loosed in his case; all his members, viz., all true followers of Christ, shall have victory over death and have its cords loosed from them; but the wicked, dying in his sins, "shall be holden with the cords of his sins"—they "remain in the congregation of the dead." "The dead," who are revived into life, "shall be raised incorruptible," and "put on immortality." 1 Corth. xv., 52, 53. Such to our mind is the truth on this deeply interesting subject.

The long and the short of the whole matter seems to be this—Any life after death is a gospel benefit or privilege; and peculiar to those, and to those alone, who do not die in their sins; or, who come to Christ that they "may have life:" John v., 40. All others are "holden with the cords of their sins;" and follow the condition of Adam the first, who was mortal, corruptible, and without any life principle to revive from the dead; that life principle is alone in Adam the second, and communicated to none but his members, or to those in him; and who are delivered from their sins.

Rev. John Howard Hinton, of England, the strongest writer that has ever written against our views, speaking of our Lord's discourse with the Sadducees, Luke xx., 27–38, and endeavoring to establish the idea that the dead are in a conscious state, and that all men, good and bad, "will live forever," or are immortal, attempts to sustain the position that it is not the righteous alone our Lord speaks of as attaining that world, or a future life. He says:

> Let it be supposed that our Lord did refer to the righteous only. In that case his words would seem to imply that there is no future existence for any but the righteous; since his speaking of them peculiarly as living after death may fairly be held to exclude others

Mr. Hinton, of course rejects the sentiment which he says is a fair conclusion, from the idea that our Lord was speaking of the righteous only, who cannot "die any more."

Now we have no doubt that our Lord was speaking of the "righteous only," in that discourse; hence, according to Mr. Hinton's admission, "it may be fairly held to exclude others," viz., all the wicked from "future existence," or life; even a temporary one; and the Scriptures never speak of the wicked being restored to a "temporary life."

But some tell us men must be "punished according to their deeds." The Bible uses no such phraseology. Every one shall "receive according to that he hath done." The righteous "receive" life. The wicked "receive" death—"everlasting destruction:" death from which there is no recovery. That is receiving, or being "punished," if the expression is liked better, "according to his deeds." Christianity, in its spirit, forbids all "cruel and unusual punishment," and no construction of its letter is admissible which contradicts its spirit. Hence, when a sinner is dead, to make alive again to torment him, without any design to reform him, or benefit any of his race, looks like a pure and unmitigated act of revenge, a feeling which we can never consent to fix on our CREATOR without clear and unequivocal testimony of the CREATOR himself. Such testimony we have never yet seen.

THOUGHTS ON LUKE IX., 23–26.

WE propose to give a brief exposition of these words of our Lord. We shall do it by showing the force of each principal word as it occurs in the language.

V. 23. "If any man"—any one—"will"—desire to, or determine to—"come after me"—to come behind; that is, to be a follower of, a disciple of; in other words, to be a learner or scholar of Christ. This is the grand characteristic of a real Christian. But to do this, "any one" must—"will"—determine to become such. "Let him deny himself"—disown, disregard, renounce himself. Self is the god of all unregenerate men. Selfish purposes, objects, ends and aims, control all their thoughts, words and actions. Self-aggrandizement, in some form, is the presiding and ruling passion, however apparently benevolent they may seem to be. Self-ease, self-honor, self-enjoyment and gratification rule them in all things. The requirements of God have no binding authority with them. They obey if it is convenient, popular, or will tend to their selfish ends; not, however, because God requires it of them.

Jesus requires, if any one determines to become his scholar, that he disown, disregard, renounce himself; because a man cannot learn of Christ and be acting on those selfish principles of which we have spoken. The spirit of this world, or of the men of this world, is in direct hostility to the self-sacrificing spirit of Jesus, whose heart ever overflowed with concern for the honor of God, abhorrence of sin, and earnest effort, at any sacrifice, to deliver men from sin, or from dishonoring God, and from death. In this effort he encountered, withstood, and rebuked wicked men in high places as well as in low, whether in ecclesiastical bodies or in private life. This kept him constantly exposed to reproach and suffering, and at length brought upon him the hate of those whom he rebuked, to that degree that they put him to the most shameful death. Here was renunciation of self: and if any one determine or desire to be a follower or scholar of Christ, let him make up his mind to renounce himself, so far as honor from men is concerned; and when told that "to join the church is the way to be respectable," be assured such a church can not be a church of Christ. Self-renunciation is an unalterable condition of discipleship of Christ. "Let him deny himself, and take up"—bear, lift, raise, carry—"his cross"—a figurative expression, borrowed from the fact that criminals, to be put to death, were compelled to carry the wood or cross on which they were to be crucified. It signifies that he who determines to be a Christian must be ready to undergo the severest trials or sufferings—to expose himself to any danger, when called to it, for Christ and his cause; this is to be done "daily"—every day: i. e., constantly; continually; to be the constant habit of mind, and not merely the effect of short-lived excitement. He is to do this, and "follow"—imitate Christ.

V. 24. "Whosoever will"—determines to—"save"—preserve safe and unharmed—"his life"—now, in this present time; he who will not suffer with Jesus, if need be, even to death, but determines to preserve his life by abandoning Christ, his service, or truth—"shall lose it"—shall lose that life which Christ designs for his followers, viz., "eternal life." The original word for "lose it" is, apolesei, from apo and alluo, to kill, to destroy; they shall be destroyed, perish; not have life. "But whosoever will"—determines to—"lose his life"—to be killed, if need be; to count himself, or present life, of no value in comparison of Christ, his cause and his truth; "for my sake"—on account of Christ—"the same shall save"—preserve it safe; that is, his life will be sure to him; for it is in Christ, and "when Christ, who is our life shall appear, then shall "they also appear with him in glory;" even though they may have died in shame, as did their Lord.

V. 25. "What is a man advantaged"—of what service is it—"if he gain"—acquire—"the whole world, and lose"—apolesas, perish, be destroyed—"himself;" or lose his being—his existence; "or be cast away," too vile for preservation.

V. 26. "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me" shall shrink from owning Christ from fear of reproach, suffering or death—"and of my words"—sayings, testimony or doctrine—"of him shall the Son of man be ashamed"—refuse to own as his disciple or follower—"when he shall come"—for he will come again—not to suffer and be put to shame, but—"in his own glory"—the true and proper glory of King Messiah, to rule on his own throne, and over all the earth—"and in his Father's" glory, with that glory with which his Father has invested him, and which he has enjoyed on his Father's throne with all power in heaven and in earth. In that glory will he come the second time. How unlike his first appearing. To have him ashamed of us—to disown us then, how much more terrible than anything we can suffer in this present state, even if called now to suffer a like death to what Jesus did.

Let us, then take heed to every word spoken in the language under consideration; and so lay it to heart that it may influence all our tempers, thoughts, words, and acts. Christ will soon return in that glory he here speaks of. Joyful day to those who have suffered with him, for him, and for his truth; then shall such be owned of him and enter on life eternal, and death never more have dominion over them; they shall be "glorified together" with Christ their Lord and head.

MY BURDEN IS LIGHT.—A wise man sought to explain to his little child the nature of a cross. He took two slips of wood a long and a short one. "See, my child," he said, "the long piece is the will of God, the short piece is your will; lay your will in a line with the will of God, and you have no cross; lay it athwart and you make a cross directly.

CHINESE BARBARITY.

SOME years since the following case of judicial vengeance was reported from the empire of China, and published in English magazines and newspapers:

"A Chinese merchant named Hiamly, convicted of having killed his wife, was sentenced to die by the total deprivation of sleep. The execution took place at Amoy. The condemned was placed in prison, under the charge of three guardians, who relieved each other every alternate hour, and who prevented him from taking any sleep, night or day. He lived thus for nineteen days, without having slept for a single minute. At the commencement of the eighth day his sufferings were so cruel that he begged as a great favor that they would kill him by strangulation."

Here is a criminal (and we would be the last to reduce the enormity of his guilt) sentenced to die, but the manner of his execution is awfully revolting. There was in it a refinement of barbarity, that was at least fully equal to the devices of the atrocious misnamed Christian inquisitors of Rome, who slaughtered thousands for the extirpation of heresy. Who does not, in his heart, loathe the tribunal that could pronounce such a doom, and the hireling monsters who could carry it into execution? As for the poor wretch himself, how dreadful must his sufferings have been, day after day, with a burning, swimming brain, and boiling blood. Not a moment of repose, himself compelled to be his own tormentor. One sees the wild, blood-shot eyes, the emaciated, trembling form, the imploring look for some kind hand to end, however violently, his intolerable woe. "He begged, as a great favor, that they would kill him by strangulation," after he had undergone seven days of the agony. And can we wonder at it? He asked it as a favor—he would have given thousands of gold for that release—he longed for death more intensely than he had ever pled for the preservation of his days. What his barbarian attendants refused, by-and-by, was granted by the last friend of the wretched in this world. It is consolation—a wild one, no doubt—that the anguish in his case must have an end; there is a limit beyond which cruelty may not pass, and the grave sooner or later opens its portals for the exhausted child of pain. He expired at length, and found the couch "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest."

How would the reader have felt had he passed the prison, say on the tenth day, and been informed of the tragedy of barbarism that was performing within? It would have haunted his sensitive heart and his midnight dreams, if it did not banish repose from his eyelids. The supposition is only human; to imagine anything else would be to fancy that men had been converted into relentless fiends, or into walking images of stone. How does the reader, we again demand, conceive he would have felt, had he been told on a day, that the weary hours of the culprit were concluded, that he was now beyond the reach of pain? Would he not have experienced an indescribable relief to his heart? cried out in instinctive overflowing of his humanity, God be praised!

It is in cases like these that we feel kindly toward Death, otherwise abhorrent as the King of Terrors. We look forward to his approach with ardent desire, and when he has performed his emancipating and composing service on behalf of the agonized, even though they are dishonored by acts of blackest criminality, we cannot but be thankful that his arm has been extended with resistless power.

And what shall we think of the dogma of endless torments beyond the grave—torments to be imposed by him who reveals himself as the God of love? We revolt at the contemplation of the Chinese barbarity—shall we feel otherwise toward cruelty in another realm, inflicted by a greater power? Eighteen days' torments on earth harrow our nature, shall we imagine hell's perpetual agonies, and continue insensible, yea, be expected to approve? No; the better feelings of man rise up in arms against the imposition. We denounce the infliction as inexpressibly savage. But when we utter against it our unqualified anathema, we are set against no divine arrangement. On the contrary, we are merely scorning a wild fiction of the human brain, baptized by the appellation of a Scriptural doctrine. "The wages of sin is death," and not those agonies that a cruel theology has invented, alike to the dishonor of God, and the alienation of man from his service.

You could scarcely have sunk to rest had you been told, in passing along the prison wall, of the agonies on the other side of it, supposing even the man to have been to you a stranger, and one confessedly dyed in blood. Can you sleep, now, when you probably believe that myriads are tossing somewhere in uninterrupted misery, and among them is, may be, your father or your child? What kind of a place would heaven be to you were the tremendous thought to brood over your heart, that in some distant realm, your former associates and relatives, multitudes of your fellow creatures were tossing on the red billows of scorching, but unconsuming wrath?

"The thought that any should have endless woe,
Would cast a shadow on the throne of God,
And darken heaven."

The death of the Chinese criminal was longed for by you, and also by himself; you felt a deliverance when his bitter agonies were closed. Is it possible you could think of hell's sorrows and have no desire to see them terminated, no wish that death would come with his cold, yet soothing hand, and lay the victim to rest? Is death better than God? Are you kinder than the Almighty? You would find comfort if these tempestuous woes were ended. Can you imagine that he will have satisfaction in prolonging their duration and giving them augmenting intensity? You abhor, then, the dogma of ceaseless torments for man or devil. See that you defend the character of God from the black aspersions that are—we doubt not by mistake—thrown upon it. Tell the world that he is the righteous, and not the relentless, Governor of the universe—that he holds out immortality to the pure and pious, and has written it on the judgment-book, that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." M.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—The writer of the foregoing has got no farther in his theology than to discard the dogma of eternal torture. But cannot he see that the dogma of reviving the wicked dead, and making them alive only to torture that life out of them, is worse in character than the Chinese barbarity? That did not make its victim alive, after death had come to his relief, to inflict fresh and hopeless tortures on him. If so shocked by putting a criminal to death by such a barbarous method as the one recited above, what shall we think of Christian men who advocate and maintain the notion that all the wicked dead are to have life restored, and tortured, some a longer and some a shorter period, but all till the life thus inflicted on them is tortured out of them again! Can they ever reconcile such an administration with the justice and love which the CREATOR of us all is said to possess? Can our own sense of justice be any more relieved by such a process than by the idea of eternal torture? How are the redeemed to endure the sight of the torment in the one case more than in the other, while it lasts? We pronounce both views abhorrent to all the sense of justice and love God has implanted in a holy heart; and equally condemned by all the perfections of God and his revealed will. They are both the offspring of a corrupt theology, and the relics of barbarism.

OBITUARY.

IN New Britain, Conn., on Sunday morning, May 31st, our beloved daughter, MARIA LOUISA, after a long illness of one year, fell asleep in Jesus, at the age of 23 years and 6 months. She was laid away to rest Tuesday afternoon, the 2d inst. Sermon on the occasion by Br. Rufus Wendell, from 1 Thess. iv., 13–18.

We sorrow, but not as those who have no hope; and our hearts are comforted with the expectation of soon meeting our loved one again, where death can separate no more.

LOUISA J. BEACH.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM ELD. J. PARRY.

SANDY HILL, N. Y., May 31, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I read with interest all you have to say on the non-resurrection of the wicked; should be glad if I could be convinced of its truth. There is much in the Bible to favor this view; perhaps more than on the other side, on which there are difficulties that I cannot reconcile with the popular belief; and I cannot see any good reason for the re-living of all the ungodly to kill them again. There are some doubtless who have had their judgment, and have perished in their sins, according to the penalty "the soul that sinneth it shall die."

The heathen, who have never heard the gospel, why should they be raised from the dead to be judged by a law of which they knew nothing? The notion of a mortal resurrection of all men, vamped up in our day to answer a purpose, is so palpable a contradiction to the word, that I wonder how any one of common honesty can embrace such a dogma.

After all, the final destiny of the wicked is not the gospel of the kingdom; and I would not lay too much stress upon it, to the exclusion of matters of more vital interest to the heirs of the inheritance of the saints, ratified and sealed by the oath, promise, and blood of Christ the Son of the living God. This is the chief object of my solicitation to be fitted and prepared by faith, patience, and obedience, to have a name and a place in the soon coming kingdom of my Lord and Saviour Jesus the Christ. Yours in hope of immortality.

REMARKS ON THE FOREGOING SUGGESTIONS.

It is true, "the final destiny of the wicked is not the gospel of the kingdom," but the gospel of the kingdom cannot be preached without the resurrection of the dead is proclaimed; because, it is "those who are accounted worthy to obtain that world, and (or, even) the resurrection from the dead" that are to inherit the kingdom. So that, we can hardly "lay too much stress upon" the fact that, without we are "accounted worthy to obtain that world," we will have "no resurrection from the dead," but "utterly perish in our own corruption:" 2 Pet. ii., 12; Luke xx., 35, 36. The resurrection of dead ones is therefore, an essential part of the preaching of "the gospel of the kingdom:" and exclusion from resurrection is exclusion from the kingdom. We would "not shun to declare all the counsel of God" relating to admission into, or exclusion from the kingdom of God; "if, by any means we might save some" souls from death.

Right views of God's character and purposes relating to the children of men, we regard as essential to the greatest degree of harmony with Him. A perfectly enlightened mind as to the great truth "God is love," can hardly reconcile that truth with the idea that those who are not "accounted worthy to obtain that world" are to have a "resurrection from the dead," notwithstanding; to be tormented and die again. Such an idea has in it all the elements of eternal torture; for, if sinners may be hopelessly tortured after having once been in death, "the wages of sin," what principle can forbid that hopeless torture from being protracted indefinitely? The injustice of the one is the same in principle as the other. Just punishment can never exceed the expressed penalty. A reward may exceed the promise to any extent, and no injustice is done the recipient; but the moment punishment exceeds the clear letter of the law, it becomes an act of injustice, and an outrage; and to charge such an administration on a being who "is love," is a blasphemy, to which we cannot give place for a moment, without becoming partakers in the sin. A sin in which we will have no part, and which shall not pass without our protest: our garments, in this matter, shall, with God's help, be "pure from the blood of all men." If others will reproach their MAKER with such an administration, they shall not have it to say that we led them into that sin, or countenanced them in it. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord;" none but the holy will, therefore, have life from the dead. Such as have life from the dead, will "see him as He is, and be like him" who was "the first-fruits of them who slept." We lose "the kingdom of God" by failing to obtain a part in the resurrection from the dead; and we fail of the resurrection from the dead, by having no union with him who is "the resurrection and the life;" or with the LIFE-GIVER. Such "shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on them." John iii. 36.

WESTFORD, MASS., June, 1868.

BR STORRS: May grace be multiplied to you; and may you continue to spread the glorious light that God has given us. I had a refreshing time reading the sermon on the "DOOM OF THE UNGODLY," the latter part of which was in the HERALD of May 20. That sermon should be printed in letters of gold and pasted up before every pulpit in the land. I see no way to evade it and be honest before God. But, "How can ye believe which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" John v., 44.

I have been examining 2 Corth., to see who Paul speaks of when he says "we" some ninety-seven times. In every case it is spoken of himself and his fellow believers, and not once of the wicked. In chap. v., "we" is used twenty-three times, and is applied exclusively to believers, unless verse 10 is an exception, which I think is not. Why cannot we, as believers and as Bible readers, be content with the plain declarations of God's word on this point, as well as on others? The same objections are raised by some of our brethren against the non-living of the wicked dead that have been raised against their view of the final destruction of the wicked. But thank the Lord, truth is what we want and must have to be free; yes, free from sect or party. I know I feel free before God to receive what he has spoken, let it be brought out by whom it may. A truth to me is just as good in the Crisis or the Voice as in the HERALD. I am a lover of the whole truth.

NEWPORT CENTRE, VT., June 4, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I feel to take courage, for the good work is slowly, but surely prospering. I have one brother in Christ with me in this place; he espoused the doctrine of Life only in Christ this Spring; and now he is as zealous in the work as he used to be against it. He says, it is the greatest wonder to him that he never saw the love of God, nor the beauties and excellence of the plan of redemption before. There are two more that are investigating the subject. They not only investigate but advocate the doctrine. They say, they are astonished to see the weakness of their opponents. They have found the sword of the Spirit, and in using it, find it quick and powerful; for it divides the soul from the spirit (which the Orthodox claim to be one and inseparable); it also discerns the thoughts and intents of the heart; showing what some serve God for, namely, to escape hell and keep out of the way of the devil, by going to heaven at death; for, say they, if we did not believe that, we would not serve God a minute. Yours, in love.

ELD. E. B. TAFT sends us seven new subscribers from Stockton, California; and besides, $29 for books, pamphlets, and tracts. That is noble, and well done with. He writes: the above is principally the result of a few days spent in canvassing on my old field of labor near Stockton. There is truly a desire, with many, to investigate for themselves, and see what the Bible does teach on the important questions discussed in the above works. Our Life Brethren in Stockton are making fine progress in their investigation of the Scriptures; and, like the disciples of old, they seem to take pleasure in letting the true light shine. I leave here in a few days to spend the hot months in the mountains, where the pure atmosphere and other conditions are more favorable to my full restoration to health. Your brother, very truly in the gospel hope.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—BR. TAFT is one of the right sort of laborers. He takes hold of the work in good earnest. We hope his health may be so improved as to enable him to labor on till our Lord returns. In his order for Books, not less than twelve "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST" were ordered to be sent to as many different persons. Such is the work that needs to be done, and done "quickly;" there is no time to be lost.

POPERY OPPOSING GOD.

THE inspired description of Anti-Christ exhibits him as sitting in the temple of God, opposing and exalting himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped. We need not go beyond the bounds of this city to find the audacious mystery of iniquity whose character the apostle thus depicts.

On a recent occasion, the Pope's representative and servant in New York, Archbishop McCloskey, gave us an example of the daring impiety which exalts itself above God, and dares to stamp its interdict upon the will and command of the great Jehovah.

God has laid his awful authority upon every human being, requiring each to love his neighbor as himself, to go about doing good in imitation of the Saviour, and to make his life a blessing and a joy to society. Any person has just as much right, and no more, to commit suicide, to sever himself from society by self-murder, as to withdraw himself from it by a vow of monastic seclusion. The world is full of suffering, sorrow, sin and want, and every friend of God and man is bound to go forth and try to alleviate misery and arrest the tide of sin. The harvest is great, the laborers are few, and we are divinely enjoined to pray the Lord of the harvest to thrust forth laborers into the harvest that the world may be redeemed.

Especially imperative is the obligation to active usefulness upon young Christians. All the wealth of their young affections and ardent hopes are to be consecrated to a living service in behalf of their fellow men. And one of the first aspirations of a religious youth is for usefulness. "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" was the earnest inquiry of the young convert, Saul, and it is ever the inquiry of truly regenerate hearts.

But in despite of the clearly revealed will of God and the yearnings of the Christian heart, Archbishop McCloskey, a few Sabbaths ago, undertook to set aside the divine mandate, and publicly trample it under foot, by encouraging, applauding, and virtually commanding two young girls to sentence themselves to social death, and to refuse, under the pretence of superior sanctity, to take the place Providence assigned them in the field of usefulness and duty. They took the black vail, with ceremonies betokening their renunciation of social existence. On that day they died and were buried. By solemn vows they bound themselves never to live where God placed them, nor to engage in the duties he assigned them. They perished with the dew of their youth upon them, with all their faculties unused, with all their opportunities and obligations rejected and disowned.

It was a melancholy scene. It could hardly have been more sad or more wicked had they taken poison, or by some voluntary means of suicide terminated their natural lives.

And there stood the Archbishop, in presence of these young victims of superstition and before a vast congregation, assisting at the cruel sacrifice, justifying it as acceptable to heaven and as evidence of a superior sanctity. He consigned these poor, ignorant girls, to the terrible living grave of a nunnery, and then retired from the cathedral to the house of feasting and self-indulgence, as we are told by a paper friendly to Catholic usages.

Two valuable lives were thus disposed of; lives which if rightly directed might have blessed many a home of affliction and carried the consolations of religion to many an aching heart, while their own souls would have glowed with the peace and joy which active usefulness always secures.

But on that day they were cut off, untimely, from the world, and buried, with no hope of resurrection, in a living tomb.

Can it be possible that Archbishop McCloskey, with all his intelligence and knowledge of the mysteries, miseries and corruptions of monastic life, felt no misgivings of heart, no sting of conscience, while engaged in this impious and cruel work of taking the lives of these poor girls from them and from society, and assisting to bury them? Can it be possible that he could sit down, after this Moloch-like sacrifice, to his grand archiepiscopal banquet, and not feel his knees smiting together in fear lest the victims of the morning should some day charge him with the guilt of taking from them the joys and hopes of their young lives which God had given them in his paternal love?

Bishop McCloskey ought to know, far better than we do, the manifold evils of monastic experience. He knows that madness, hypochondria and convulsions are frequent among nuns. He knows the truth of those revelations of the interior of the nunnery made by the Princess Henrietta Caracciola in a late publication. She declares that: "A monastery contains all the vices of a city, without its advantages or its virtues. By resigning her flowing locks to the scissors, and by taking the vows of chastity, poverty, and obedience, a woman does not change her character; the only difference being that amidst the moral stagnation of the cloister her virtues remain without legitimate exercise, while her frailties or her vices are nourished and developed by the continual struggles of a soured and rebellious spirit at war with its cruel destiny." Accordingly we are not surprised to learn that, when not engaged in making pastry and comfits, or in the mechanical exercises of devotion, the inmates of the convent are perpetually quarreling among themselves, propagating the scandals of the little community, or plotting amorous intrigues with their father confessors.

But the crime of thwarting the benevolent purposes of God, who puts us here to work, to do good, to let our light shine—the crime of decreeing that a rational creature shall not work, but live in idleness—shall not do good, but be shut up in a cell and the light put out—in a word, the crime of devoting one to a living death whom God ordained for an active, useful and happy life,—this, we say, is a crime very little different from the offerings to Moloch in ancient times, except that the guilt is greater.

We have no hope that the priests and prelates of Rome will ever reform this abominable iniquity. We look to the people. We confide in the power of truth. We ask the people to see for themselves, if any warrant can be found in the Bible for the immuring of living innocent men and women in cells and prisons. We ask them to think whether when God places us in this world to be useful, and examples of goodness and benevolence, it can be right for us to say, or for any one to say for us, that the world is not our place, but a cell; that doing good is not our business, but moping behind bars and prison gates; that our light is not to shine, but to be hid.—The Ch. World, 1865.

THE PRISONER'S PRAYER.

A MOST affecting scene occurred at the close of a trial for murder. The prisoner came in a little paler than usual, but he was not cast down or disconcerted, and retained the remarkable serenity of countenance and composure of mind which had characterized him nearly all the time since the commencement of the trial. His father sat down beside him and took his hand, showing in that simple act the deep parental affection he felt for him. The judge upon his seat, the attorneys in their places, and the spectators, sat silently waiting the coming of the jury. The waiting was not long; the jury came in and took their seats with the dignity of men who felt the importance of the decision they had made, and their responsibility to their fellow-man, their country and their God. The accused looked searchingly at each as they passed, as if he would read his fate in their countenances. The verdict was then read—"We, the jury, find the prisoner not guilty," etc. There was an impulse to applaud the verdict, but all eyes were turned toward the prisoner, and for a moment a silence like that of a grave prevailed.

Then followed a scene not often witnessed in a court room, and one which we have no words to describe as it occurred. The prisoner that was—a prisoner now no longer—fell upon his knees, and lifting his eyes toward heaven, uttered an earnest prayer of thanksgiving and praise to the God whose justice and mercy had been so wonderfully manifested in him. He thanked God that though he had often erred, he had not been cast off or forsaken of him or his fellow men. He prayed for a blessing upon the court and jury who had tried him as by fire, and established his innocence before the world; for strength to do the will of his father in all time to come, and for wisdom to train his little ones to virtue and truth.

The prayer was irresistibly eloquent, and all heads were bowed; tears fell and sobs burst from men unused to weep, and when "amen" was pronounced "amen" came back in response from every part of the room, and there were tears in every eye. All rose to their feet; the acquitted man advanced and took each juryman by the hand with a fervent "God bless you! you have saved an innocent man from shame and disgrace; you have taken a foul stain from my name. God bless you!" And to the prosecutor, whose conduct in the case commands admiration from all for fairness and honesty, he gave a cordial "God bless you!" The old white-haired father, whose firm trust had supported the son in the dark hours of trial, now melted in tears of joy that his boy was acquitted of guilt, and his own good name remained untarnished. The judge, wiping his eyes of the tears that had come unbidden, ordered the sheriff to adjourn the court. The congratulations of friends continued some time longer, and then he who came into court on Monday morning with the charge of a felon upon him walked forth a free man.

LIFE'S CHANGES.

How many hearts have been wounded, how many tears have been shed, through what may all be spoken in one little word—"Change!" It is written on everything we behold. The flowers we see one day growing and expanding in all their brilliancy, the next day may be scattered to the ground. Even the leaves that grow on the sturdy oak last only for a season, and as we see them in their freshness they almost fill us with the hope that they will not fade away. But alas! the autumn comes, and these, too, droop and die. Not only do we see this change in the flowers, and in all nature's works, but we experience it in all we do. How transient are all earthly enjoyments! In the memory of the past, how many scenes can we recall that once made our hearts glad and filled us with joy. Where are many of our dearest friends? The rolling billows may have separated us from them, or we may have said farewell, never again to see them on this side of Jordan. It may be that the friends we trusted have proved false. But what is the lesson we are to learn from all this? Not to fix our affections on things below, but to look forward to that country where the scenes, as they pass, will only be renewed in all their loveliness to eternity. Here there are a thousand ways in which we may be separated in a moment from those we love, but there we meet never again to be divided. There death never comes. Are not these joys that never end worth living for? Is it true we see through a glass darkly? We know not the extent of heavenly joys; but this we know, that they endure forever. Let us, then, endure nobly while we are here, that we may become worthy of the inheritance that is "incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away."—Methodist New Connection Magazine.

EAST WIND.

WHY should the wind coming from the east over an ocean of water depress the human body, while that which comes from the west across a continent enlivens the spirits and gives courage and vigor? Be this as it may, it seems as if some people never felt any wind that was not east. They are always "out of sorts." The weather is always just what they don't want. I met one of these men a while ago, a farmer, who raised all manner of crops. It was a wet day, and I said:

"Mr. Nayling, this rain will be fine for your grass crop."

"Yes, perhaps: but it is bad for the corn, and will keep it back. I don't believe we shall have a crop."

A few days after this, when the sun was shining hot, I said:

"Fine sun for your corn, sir."

"Yes, pretty fair, but it's awful for the rye. Rye wants cold weather."

Again, on a cold morning, I met my neighbor, and said;

"This must be capital for your rye, Mr. Nayling."

"Yes, but it is the very worst weather for the corn and grass. They want heat to bring them forward."

So the man lives in a perpetual east wind. Nothing suits him, and it would be impossible for Providence to give him weather about which he would not grumble. I know one man who feels that our country is on the very brink of ruin, the Government a curse, and everything to be destroyed. And he has felt and talked thus for at least thirty years, and yet his property has been increasing in value all this time, amid this gathering ruin. The fact is, the man lives in an unchanging east wind. And there is Mr. Slow, who lives in the hollow under the Long Hill; he has been mourning for many years over the degeneracy of the times, and always telling what wonderful lawyers, and doctors, and ministers there were when he was young! He can sleep under any preaching he now hears, and the lawyers seem to be young upstarts, or too old to practise. He longs for the good old times. Ah! Mr. Slow, does your weather-vane ever point anywhere but to the east?—Rev. John Todd, D. D.

Poetry.

Always Speak the Truth.

Be the matter what it may,
Always speak the truth;
Whether work, or whether play,
Always speak the truth.
Never from this rule depart,
Grave it deeply on your heart,
Written, 'tis, in virtue's chart,
Always speak the truth.

There's a charm in verity,
Always speak the truth;
But there's meanness in a lie—
Always speak the truth.
He is but a coward slave,
Who a present pain to waive,
Stoops to falsehood; then be brave,
Always speak the truth.

Falsehood seldom stands alone,
Always speak the truth;
One begets another one—
Always speak the truth.
Falsehood all the soul degrades,
'Tis a sin from which proceed
Greater sins and darker deeds,
Always speak the truth.

When you're wrong, the folly own,
Always speak the truth;
Here's a victory to be won:
Always speak the truth.
He who speaks with lying tongue,
Adds to wrong a greater wrong;
Then, with courage true be strong;
Always speak the truth.

A Story.

[The following story from an orthodox paper, (The Advance) is very interesting, but must be read with two grains of caution about the dead being "in heaven;" and even our little folks will laugh at the queer notion of the orthodox child of her papa "going to heaven on a gun," who was killed in a skirmish. Our little ones all understand that the good, when they die, "sleep in Jesus" till the resurrection "at the last day."]

Tatting.

"It was nothing but a skirmish—only one killed." People glanced at it in the papers, and never thought of it again. Sergeant Hallett was nothing to them. But there was a home in New England where the weekly letter was missing—a swift, sad telegram came in its stead.

Mrs. Hallett was entirely overcome. She neither spoke nor cried, but rocked herself back and forth on the lounge, and groaned. It was enough to break anybody's heart to hear her. Little Golden Hair wanted to know "what mamma was crying for." Edith hugged her and tried to tell her how "papa never would come home any more." Then Goldie climbed on to the lounge, and put her little wet cheek against her mother's and said, "Poor mamma! Goldie kiss poor mamma;" Edith stole up to her and laid her hand on her knee, and sobbed out, "But he is in heaven, mamma. Christ loved him. He was so good!"

"And all them pretty buttons on his coat too! O-o-oh!" and Goldie hid her face in her mother's lap and sobbed afresh.

The days that followed were sad, but Mrs. Hallett bore up bravely—she kept a bright face for her children. She had no time to sit down and cry. Every minute was full of work, and all the time she was thinking, "What is to become of us now? Where is the bread and butter to come from?" for they had depended entirely on Mr. Hallett's pay. Mrs. Haliett did not say much of anything. Indeed, there was no one to talk it over with but Edith, and she was only ten years old. The future had looked dark before, but she never had to face it alone. She missed the manly, hopeful words that always made the darkest days bright.

Edith saw that something was troubling her mother, and she hinted around till she found out what it was. It brought her heart right into her mouth. She must tell somebody, so she took Goldie out on the back door step.

"Oh, Goldie, we shan't have anything to eat much longer," she burst out.

Goldie opened her mouth as wide as she could, and her eyes as wide as her mouth.

"Papa used to make the money, you know, but now we haven't any papa," continued Edith, crying.

"Oh, dear! What made him go to heaven on a gun for?" and Goldie cried, too, as hard as she could. "There's lots of cake in the front closet; I guess you didn't know. We can eat that," suggested Goldie, brightening up.

"But bimeby that will be gone, and the potatoes will all be gone, and we shan't have any shoes, nor—nor—anything," and Edith felt so badly at the thought of Goldie and herself wandering about the streets, hungry, cold, and barefoot, that she cried harder than ever, and Goldie made as much noise as she could, too, for she always did just as Edith did.

"I must earn something," said Edith, wiping her eyes.

"Me, too," echoed Goldie.

"If I only was a boy! Then I could drive cows to the pasture."

"No, no, don't be a boy. Boys is bother," said Goldie, decidedly.

"I know! I know!" exclaimed Edith, jumping up and down, and whirling around with delight. "Clara Pendleton makes ever so much money tatting. That's the way she got that feather on her hat."

Edith ran into the house for leave to go over to Clara's. Her mother said "Yes;" but when Goldie insisted that she wanted to go and "tat feathers, too," her mother said, "No, I could not possibly spare my little Golden Hair. I wonder where my button bag is!" And Edith slipped away while Goldie was revelling in the brightest brass buttons, and "them darlin, pinkum blues," as Goldie called the colored ones.

Clara was very happy to teach Edith how to tat. But as Edith had no shuttle, and Clara only had the one she was using, they did not know what to do at first.

"Couldn't I use a spool of thread?" asked Edith.

"Why, yes, I suppose you could, only it would keep unwinding so."

"I don't mind, I can push it through somehow," said Edith, who was very eager to learn, for she saw a fortune in the distance, and all of it made out of tatting.

Clara made one scallop to show her how. Then Edith tried. Now, Edith was a little girl who could not bear to see a needle even, and hemming, and sewing over and over, and tatting did not come at all natural to her. The loops would not make on the right side of the thread, and the thread would not pull up. But she worked patiently for as much as half an hour, for she was determined to learn, because she wanted to be helping her mother support the family. Then, when she had made a scallop that would pull up the right way, she thought the worst of it was over, and it was very discouraging to hear Clara say that there was not a single stitch of it right. When she came to the next one, and tried to do it the right way, and the thread stuck, the bottom dropped right out of her temper. "Well, I declare, if this isn't the hatefulest old thread that ever was! Can't make it go right to save your life! Ow!" and Edith gave the thread such a jerk that it snapped.

"There are ever so many of those stitches right. You are learning real fast," said Clara, encouragingly.

"Catch me ever trying to tat again!" said Edith, throwing down the spool.

"It is easy after you once get the hang of it. I tried, and tried, before I could learn, and then I took it up and did it right off, all at once."

"I must get my living somehow," said Edith, with a sigh, picking up the spool again.

Clara showed her how she must hold the thread on the spool tight, and let that round her hand be loose.

"I see! I see!" said Edith.

She went patiently to work again. She made mistakes yet, but she had got the principle into her head. She persevered, and it was not more than two hours from the time she began, before she could make a perfect scallop. In the meantime, their tongues had been fully as busy as their fingers.

At last, Clara asked, "What do you want to know how to tat for?"

"You see, the money always came in papa's letters, and now we shan't have any more," said Edith, tearfully.

"I'm so sorry."

"Somebody must help mamma, and there's nobody but me now—Goldie is so little."

Clara's eyes filled, but she did not say a word.

"I'm afraid we shan't have anything to eat but potatoes before long. That's what they live on down to the Emmons', you know. But then we all like potatoes," continued Edith, looking at the bright side of her picture.

"So do I," Clara blundered out. She was so sorry for Edith that she wanted to say something sympathetic, and she could not think of anything else to say.

"I must go home now," said Edith, putting on her hat. "Good-bye!"

"Good-bye!" said Clara, slipping her hand slyly into Edith's pocket.

But Edith caught her in the act, and dived in herself to see what was there. She pulled out Clara's shuttle with two yards of tatting on it.

"Oh, Clara, you musn't," said Edith, while her eyes danced at the thought of owning a shuttle. She had been wondering how she should get one. And to have two whole yards of tatting to start with besides!

"Yes, I shall, too. I've got two dollars and seven cents of my ownty donty, own, and I can get another just as easy as nothing. Besides my papa isn't d——My papa is real good, I mean."

"So was mine. He used to pinch my cheeks, and call them his Baldwin apples, so funny,—but he never will again," she added, with a sigh.

Edith came home to her mother with her face all aglow.

"You needn't worry any more, mamma. Iv'e learned how to tat, and now I can help you." she said.

"What is all this about?" asked her mother.

"Why, it is dreadful hard, but I've learned how, and now I'm going to tat, and sell it at the store, and help you. Just see. Clara gave me all this to begin on," said Edith, exhibiting Clara's present.

"Dear, helpful little sunbeam!" said her mother, the tears coming into her eyes. "So long as I have you and Goldie, I can stand anything. God is good to me."

Worth Knowing.

1. It is worth knowing that the gospel plan provides for human, world-wide need—pardon for the guilty, instruction for the ignorant, and acceptance with God in everlasting life. Hence, we "are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ." And "we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Gal. iii., 26; 1 John iii., 1, 3.

2. It is worth knowing that, though Adam lost his Eden home and dominion, and Israel lost "the kingdom," in type, yet "the first dominion—the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem," (Micah iv., 8), at "the end" of "the times of the Gentiles." Luke xxi., 24; Dan. viii., 11–14; Jer. xxxiii., 7–25; Ezek. xxxvii., 28; Matth. xix., 28.

2. It is worth knowing that "The kingdom of God," for which we are taught to pray, Matth. vi., 9, 10, will come at the close of "the kingdom of men." Dan. iv., 25; ii., 31–44; Acts ii., 20, 30; Rev. xi., 15–18.

4. It is worth knowing that the kingdom of men—the government of the world by men—takes four forms, through four dynasties, or four kingdoms, with their subordinate changes, and that "In the days of these kings (before they pass) the God of heaven will set up a kingdom . . . . fill the whole earth;" and that "the saints shall possess it forever." Dan. vii., 17, 27; Rev. v., 10; xx., 4–7: 1 Cor. vi., 2; Matth. v., 5–10.

5. It is worth knowing that "Christ is the head of the body" (politic)—the church—which is also "the bride of the Lamb," and that he who "was once offered to bear the sins of many, will, unto them that look for him, appear the second time . . . . unto salvation." Heb. ix., 28; John xiv., 3; Heb. i., 6.

The final coming is numbered thus: "again"—The second time to salvation: resurrection and "restitution of all things spoken." [Acts iii., 21; 1 Cor. xv., 23–27; Rom. xi., 26–29.

6. It is worth knowing that these four earthly kingdoms, and the two advents of Christ are God's waymarks along the lapse of ages, to demonstrate his truth, and furnish ground for unwavering faith, as prophecy is, accomplished and unfolded into history.

Nothing can be so demonstrative of Bible truth as these fixed, fundamental and (about) fulfilled numbers, and their attendant events, that pervade all prophecy and promise pertaining to "this world," and open to "that which is to come."

7. It is worth knowing that, when combined into one view, these primal parts of all truth take this form:

The Cross.		The Crown.
1. Babylon, 2. Persia, 3. Greece, and 4. ROME.	First Advent. The Gospel of the kingdom.	Second Advent to Salvation, Restitution, Millenium. Heb. ix., 28; Acts iii., 21; Dan. vii., 18; Rev. xx.	Re-Genesis, Matt. xix., 28. All things new. Rev. xxi., 1-5.
The 4 horns of the Gentiles. Zech. i., 18-22. The 4 parts of the image. Dan. ii., 31-44. The 4 beasts, 4 kingdoms. Dan. vii., 17. Which fill out "the kingdom of man." Dan. iv., 25.		God's government over the world restored for "the ages to come." Eph. ii., 5-7; iii., 21.

"Write the vision and make it plain!" Hab. ii., 1–4. This writing out of the prophetic vision is to history what a map is to geography.

The dates and numbers of any document give to it authority and value. So these data and primary portions of sacred prophecy authenticate it, and determine its application to history. The light of prophecy discloses the whole course of providence toward our world, and assures to faith the ages and events of time, as they reach on to the crowning consummation of God's "good will to man."

No one doubts these numbers in nature or science. "The four seasons of the year, the four winds of heaven, the four corners of the earth, the four cardinal points of the compass," are undoubted and determinate. No one could be accepted to teach science who would confound the fifth with the fourth, nor who failed to apply "the second" next after the first. Then, as the God of nature is "The God of grace," why should the veil of mystery conceal these most notable of all his Scriptural numbers. All reason, all nature, and all human action are against allowing doubt as to the most determinate use of these fixed and unmistakable numbers—two and four.

It is only in the yet "veiled" subject of religion that "the second," or "fourth" can be ignored, displaced, or confounded with other numbers, so as to lose their proper significance.

Then, in the world's history, as written by Jews or Christians, by the ancients or moderns, these "four kingdoms" and the first advent have been located, fixed and settled, unalterably. The finger of God's providence has written out his confirmation of prophecy: Babylon, Persia, Greece and Rome, of history, answer to "the 4" of prophecy. Thus, also, the first advent has been located, by its fulfilment, in the early age of Rome—the 4th and last of oppressive governments. Hence "the second" advent, alone, remains to fill its foretold place in history. It must transpire "In the days of these kings" (before Rome "the 4th" falls), to set up God's kingdom in triumphant grace, to fill, refresh, restore and bless the world.

This second coming, in power, will crush out rebellion, oppression and wrong. "He will not break the bruised reed, but yet will bring forth judgment unto victory." Matth. xii., 17, 21; 1 Cor. xv., 23–27; Psa. lxxii.; Isa. lx.

The second advent of Christ is to complete and crown his errand of love to our world. What the sin of man has marred, he will "with a smile repair;" giving us and "all things" a renewal. Man, God's covenant, Jerusalem, and the earth itself, shall be made "new." Rev. xxi., 1–5. "The creature shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the sons of God." Rom. viii., 19–24. God is the best friend of his own creature, man, and his own world. And it is worth knowing that he will end the reign of satan, sin, and death, to "fill the whole earth with glory," and good everlasting.

"Behold He Cometh!"—Rev.

Who? Not the Holy Spirit, for his advent according to promise and prophecy took place many years before this announcement was made by John of Patmos— the day of Pentecost was then more than half a century in the past. Acts, ii. Not Titus, the Roman general, with his legions to destroy Jerusalem, for the testimony of the early Christian Fathers is almost or quite uniform that the book of Revelation was written toward the end of the reign of Domitian, that is about A. D. 95 or 96, or twenty-five years after the destruction of Jerusalem: and not a writer of the primitive church can be found who applies this prophecy to that event. Who then is the Coming One of the Apocalypse?

Listen to his titles: "Jesus Christ"—the name given to the virgin's Son, because as the Messiah of the prophets, he was to "save his people from their sins;" "the Faithful Witness"—who "before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession," and whom neither fear could intimidate nor favor bribe to testify aught but truth respecting God or man; "the First-begotten of the dead"—the first who rose from the grave with an immortal body; "the Prince of the kings of the earth," (i., 5;) "the Beginning and the Ending;" "Alpha and Omega, the first and the last." "He that liveth, and was dead, and is alive for evermore;" He that has "the keys of hell and of death"—or holds power over the regions of the dead, opening or closing its portals when he pleases; "He that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand; who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks" (ii., 1)—is ever present with his churches and has absolute control of the ministry; "He that hath the sharp sword with two edges"—is qualified to pronounce judgments and execute them (i., 16 with ii., 12;) "the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet like fine brass;" "He who searcheth the reins and the hearts." "He that hath the seven Spirits of God—for the Father "gave not the Spirit by measnre unto him; "He that is holy; He that is true; He that hath the key of David"—and is therefore the legitimate heir to David's throne, (Comp. Isa. ix., 6, 7, Luke i., 31-33; Rev. iii., 7;) "He that openeth and no man shutteth, and shutteth and no man openeth;" "the Amen; the Beginning [or Ruler] of the creation of God;" "the Lion of the tribe of Judah," "the root and Offspring of David; the Bright and Morning Star" "the Lamb;" "the Word of God"—of whom it is said, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God; . . . and the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us," (John i., 1, 2, 14 with Rev. xix., 13;) in short, "The King of Kings, and Lord of Lords." xix., 16.

It will thus be seen that in the book of Revelation alone over twenty-five titles are given to the Coming One. Their mysterious fulness is higher than heaven, wider than earth and deeper than the soundless sea, so that eternity itself will be necessary to unfold it; yet there need be no mistaking the person to whom they apply. In him the weakness of humanity has been strangely blended with the omnipotence of divinity, and his biography as "God manifest in the flesh" has been written by the evangelists. He has already visited our earth, breathed its air, basked in its sunshine, calmed its waves, and partaken of its joys and sorrows—its pleasures and pains. For eighteen centuries no human eye has rested upon him; but "to them that look for him will he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

Reader, the startling cry, "Behold He Cometh!" did not originate with the Man of the sea-girt isle. Before Salem's foundations were laid,—beyond the Noachian deluge the cry was first heard: for "Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all," etc.—Jude 14, 15. As the announcement has rung along the ages new voices have taken it up; and to-day from many a pulpit, pew and press—from many a loving heart and happy home, the well-known sound is heard. Men have sought to stifle it with the murky atmosphere of error and of worldliness, with the scoffer's laugh and the sceptic's wit, but in vain. Above the confusion of the times the ear of faith catches the key-note of the Church's hope—Maranatha. O man of God, take it up and sound it forth. Though the world dream in carnal security, and nominal professors frown at thee or pass unheeding by, let thy heart be undaunted still. Never will the thrilling sound cease to be heard till the words, "Behold he cometh!" are no longer the language of faith but of sight, and the descending One takes the loving bride to his arms.—Selected.

Br. Storrs: In reading an article on the "Kingdom of God," in the last issue of the Herald, my mind began to ruminate over some of the expectations which some of the Advent brethren are entertaining—the removal of the seat of Turkish government from Constantinople to Jerusalem—and which some are anxiously looking for at a very proximate time. The prophecy supposed to foreshadow this event, I believe is found in Dan. xi., 45. And the manner in which it is to be brought about is believed to be (from present indications) the movement of Russia, and perhaps Persia, against the Turk—perhaps a siege of Constantinople by the former. Now, the scripture says, (some power, and supposing it meant the Turkish) that he is to establish the tabernacles of his palace between the seas, in the glorious holy mountain—mountain of delight, of holiness. According to the scriptures a kingdom is often symbolized by a mountain. So in this place the glorious holy mountain may mean the kingdom of the Lord—the territory on which it will be established; and if it is to extend from the river in Egypt to the great river Euphrates, this prophecy would be fulfilled, even if the Sultan is to remain at Constantinople until the coming of the Lord—i. e., standing up of the Great Prince, etc., for the whole of that territory between the Nile and Euphrates is included in the Turkish dominion. And as the verse does not read that his palace, but the tabernacles of it, are to be planted, etc., we think that this prophecy is fulfilled at the present time; for the time seems also to have arrived when the three unclean spirits (of the Revelation) are to be spewed out; which spirits are, as we suppose, the false religions or apostacies which have corrupted the earth for so long a time; and which are to be rooted out to make place, prepare the way, for the Kings of the East; i. e., Christ and the redeemed saints, etc., who will reign forever. Very soon His foes will be made His footstool, and the Paradise, Kingdom, or New Jerusalem, so long looked for will be made ready for the waiting "bride;" and it lieth four square, 12,000 furlongs, 1,500 miles each way; which is somewhat larger than the present territory lying between the Nile and Euphrates: but the internal convulsions of the earth will have taken place, and the country be turned into a great plain; it will probably be as the All-wise builder originally designed it to be: and as to the scenery and peculiarities connected with, or found in that kingdom and their application to the tastes and desires of the mind for enjoyment and appreciation, we need only to read Revelation xxi. and we have a visionary glimpse of it. We can see it through a darkened glass. And for ourself, we will be thankful and praise the Lord forever, though we would find ourself only a doorkeeper.

The Dorcas Mission.

I have decided to close up my labors in this mission on the 20th of July. It has been my privilege to labor more than three years among the poor and degraded of a proscribed race. Through the blessing of the Lord during that period, many a heart that had been sad was made glad. Many were fed and clothed. Friendless children were cared for. The sick were visited. Numbers were led to Christ. Hundreds were taught the way of salvation. All was done freely for Christ. My labors were continued until my health was impaired, and then I felt that the Lord would have me leave this work for other fields of labor. Hence, in a few weeks I shall be at liberty to go out into the "big parish" to preach the word of life to the perishing.

Sr. Robertson will leave the work as soon as the Lord will open a door for her. Our school teacher will leave soon also. The rest of our assistants have already gone. There are but fourteen children in the Home, all of whom will have returned to their friends by the middle of next month. Yours in Christ,

F. H. Burbank.

Why the Mill was Stopped.

In one of the older States resided an infidel, the owner of a saw-mill situated by the side of the highway over which a large portion of a Christian congregation passed every Sabbath to and from church. This infidel, having no regard for the Sabbath, was as busy, and his mill was as noisy, on that holy day as any other. Before long it was observed, however, that a certain time before service the mill would stop, remain silent and appear to be deserted for a few minutes, when its noise and clatter would re-commence, and continue till about the close of the service, when for a short time it again ceased. It was soon noticed that one of the deacons of the church passed the mill to the place of worship during the silent interval, and so punctual was he to the hour that the infidel knew just when to stop his mill, so that it should be silent while the deacon was passing, although he paid no regard to the passing of others. On being asked why he paid this mark of respect to the deacon, he replied, "The deacon professes just what the rest of you do; but he lives, also, such a life, that it makes me feel bad here," (putting his hand upon his heart,) "to run my mill while he is passing."

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST:" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead, as both conditional; and only bestowed at the second advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our motto.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 48 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658, NEW YORK

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the POST OFFICE, COUNTY, AND STATE must be given, and written plainly; and if a CHANGE is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

A PURCHASE TO BE MADE.

A SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

"Buy the truth, and sell it not." Prov. xxiii., 23.

MEN generally calculate the value of an article before purchasing it, and inquire what use they can make of it. At least, a wise man will do this, and study the subject with care, that he may receive profit, and not be subjected to loss or damage. Not to do so, manifests a defective judgment, and is a sure token of disaster or failure in business. Caution is essential to prosperity, yet an excess of caution is nearly as fatal to success as heedlessness itself. Such a man can seldom, if ever, take advantage of any new discoveries or improvements; he drags on in the beaten paths of such as have gone before him, and reaps no benefit from that which others have used to outstrip him entirely. Such are to be pitied. No matter what improvements are brought to light, they are too unbelieving or too indolent to reap any benefit from them: they plod on to the end.

In things spiritual and divine, men are quite as thoughtless as to what is truth as these last-named persons are about the ordinary affairs of life. They seem to think any knowledge of these things which is to cost them mental labor, and a careful use of their judgment, is useless, or too laborious to tax themselves in the matter, so they leave all these things to others, and give them pecuniary support to do, what only themselves can settle to their own real advantage, and so as to be preserved from needless doubt on the one hand, or fatal presumption on the other. How unwise the course of men who thus leave subjects which concern an endless life to mere chance as to the knowledge they may possess in relation to them. Let us see to it that we obtain the truth at whatever cost, labor, or sacrifice.

I. THE ARTICLE TO BE BOUGHT. "The Truth."

In the things of religion there is doctrinal truth, experimental truth, and practical truth; all of which are important.

1. DOCTRINAL TRUTH. Some think it a waste of time and useless to seek this. One reason for such a conclusion is, the differences of opinion among theologians about it. They suppose the truth is beyond human reach, so far as doctrine is concerned. Such an idea is an indirect reproach of God, implying that he has called us to learn and understand what he has not sufficiently revealed.

We are not to suppose truth lies so entirely on the surface that it requires no labor to lay it fully out to view. Such a presentation of it would hardly be consistent in dealing with intelligent and moral agents, for the discovery of it, in that case, would not be worthy of praise; he could not do otherwise than to see it. Nor would it be highly prized as if by diligent application we had discovered it by a careful and patient investigation. A consciousness that we had not received it second-hand, from a fellow mortal, increases its value in our estimation. The feelings of the Samaritans, after they had personally seen and heard Jesus, were perfectly natural, when they "Said unto the woman, Now we believe, not because of thy saying; for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world." John iv., 42.

Knowledge derived by personal application is far more gratifying and comforting than that brought to us second hand, even though the latter may be ever so reliable.

We need to know the truth of ourselves; OUR NATURE. "What is man?" is an inquiry of the first importance. On this knowledge, to a great extent, depends our entire view of our relation to our CREATOR, and of our understanding of any revelation he may make to us.

If we are inherently immortal, that truth must and will give color to every other manifestation or revelation made to us in relation to our future destiny; it will make words and phrases employed on this subject have entirely a different meaning than otherwise they would convey to the mind. So that it is important to "buy the truth" here, at whatever cost, and to settle such a question, no inferences must be allowed to control our judgment: we must have the most plain and undoubted testimony. Man is seen to be a dying creature; the evidence of all our senses is on the side of the idea that we are perishing, mortal beings. If we are not really such, nothing short of positive testimony should be admitted to prove the contrary. No such testimony is found in the Bible, the only standard of appeal in settling what is doctrinal truth.

Such being the fact, the idea of inherent immortality is not only an error, but it is a dangerous and destroying untruth, corrupting the entire revelation of God to men. It represents him as saying one thing, and meaning another, or as employing language, in his revelations to men, which is not to be received in its ordinary sense, even where words are of the most simple character; as for example, the words life and death. The first is expressive of living existence; the last, of the cessation of such existence. These are foundation words in all God's revelations to man. If these cannot be relied on in their primary signification, what other words can be? What then becomes of revelation itself? It ceases to have the characteristics of a revelation, and men are left to such wild conjectures as a lively or diseased imagination may conjure up for their acceptance.

On the other hand, if the Bible teaches that man is only mortal, formed of the dust of the ground, and returning to the ground again, then the Bible becomes at once luminous as to the love of God for such a creature; and by the language addressed to him, so beautifully simple and easy to be understood that it proclaims, in the voice of thunder, "GOD IS LOVE:" it commands the homage of man's intellect—the only medium to the affections—and takes hold of his heart with such commanding power that he cannot resist it without unjustifiable criminality. Knowest thou not, O man, "that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?" Rom. ii., 4. The language of God is the expression of his heart and of his love.

Starting with a correct doctrinal view of man's nature, we branch out into the whole subject of redemption, embracing man's sinfulness; the work of Christ, from his humiliation, death, resurrection, ascension, intercession, till he returns from heaven, taking the throne of his father David, having raised from the dead his followers and glorified them together with himself; his and their reign to be eternal in life without end.

Here are doctrinal truths sufficiently extensive to employ any mind of man through life and on to eternal ages: mines inexhaustible as infinity itself. Here is a field of hidden treasures ever ready to open its bosom to such as would "buy the truth and sell it not;" and so boundless the supply as to preclude the possibility of jealousy among those who are expending their time and energies to obtain the wealth of truth. The more successful our co-laborers, the faster shall we also accumulate, if diligent in the pursuit of the riches truth unfolds to its devotees. Blessed work is this. Let all work while they may.

2. EXPERIMENTAL TRUTH.—This is incorporating doctrinal truth into our minds, so that we become assimilated to it, and are made pure and holy by it—purified by it. It is feeding on the truth; being nourished, strengthened, and made alive by it; made free, filling us with love, joy, peace, patience, and all the graces of the Spirit; delivering us from slavish fears, and tormenting doubts; so as, at length, to rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, and in everything to give thanks. Blessed experience; precious treasure; glorious state; the foretaste of that eternal weight of glory in reserve for the lovers of truth, who are lovers of Christ, who is "the way, the truth, and the life." John xiv., 6. His words of truth are spirit and life to such as "sell all they have" to obtain this treasure. Such are experiencing the earnest of the inheritance to which the truth is leading them, and, by an active faith, are laboring to bring others to the same happy experience as their own.

3. PRACTICAL TRUTH.—This is the result to which doctrinal and experimental truth leads; the use of them. A life in obedience to the truth. Our words, actions, manifested dispositions in all our intercourse with our fellow men, being regulated, influenced, controlled by the truth. It is copying after the pure and unspotted life of him who was the perfect embodiment of truth itself.

We come now to

II. THE ADVICE GIVEN.—"Buy the truth." It must be purchased.

1. We must seek it in the right market. Worldlings have it not; blinded by earth's treasures, honors, or pleasures, they cannot even tell us where to find it. It is too scarce or hidden from their view to be thought of. In vain shall we look in that direction. There is but one "Depository" where the article is kept pure and for sale. The Bible is God's established salesroom, and Christ the only authorized salesman. Ye who would buy the pure truth, come hither.

2. If you would buy, you must hand over error, however long you have rolled it as a sweet morsel under your tongue. You must sit at Jesus' feet, as a little child, to hear his words and learn of him. "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of?" Isa. ii., 22. This a hard lesson to learn, by such as have been taught that man has inherent immortality, but learn it you must, if you mean to buy the truth. It is the first important step toward the possession of truth. This truth well understood, all that follows comes natural or easy. Remember, you are to cease from trust in man, who is but a mortal—"whose breath [life] is in his nostrils: no inherent deathlessness is to be admitted, if you would buy the truth.

3. Starting right by giving up error, come to the true salesman. Ask—seek—knock; be in earnest: let no worldly considerations intervene between you and the truth. Be not like the young man who had great possessions, and "went away sorrowful" because he could not have the truth while he held fast his wealth. Poor indeed is that man who comes in sight of truth, and has come in search of it, and yet turns away from it for any earthly consideration.

4. Deeply consider the value of truth. Nothing but that can stand in the final trial; all else will be but wood, hay, and stubble, and perish then. Better part with such trashy materials now, and accept truth in lieu thereof. Let all that hinders our buying the truth be laid aside now and forever, that we may possess the truth in all its purity and glory. Honor, riches, worldly greatness, nor any of earth's pleasures have any value when truth is in the market.

It must not only be bought, but it must not be sold. Many have sold it for "a mess of pottage," or for some worldly consideration. Judas sold it for "30 pieces of silver;" others have sold it for much less, and have virtually "hanged themselves," destroyed their usefulness, if not sold their eternal life inheritance. "Sell it not." Let no considerations the world can offer turn off your eyes from the contemplation of the glorious beauty of truth, and of the eternal wealth it will bestow on such as hold it fast to the end. Whatever you may be called to suffer or do for the truth's sake, esteem it as of no account compared to the glory that shall be revealed in those that hold it fast to the end. The truth proclaims, "I WILL GIVE THEE A CROWN OF LIFE."

To sell the truth is to renounce God, the fountain of it, it is to renounce Christ, the medium of it, to reject the Holy Spirit, the dispenser of it. It is to accept death eternal in exchange for Life eternal. Can greater folly and madness be manifested than such a course as this?

Let the language of our text be ever in our ears, and let us heed the injunction always and everywhere—"Buy the truth and sell it not."

THE COMING OF CHRIST.

SAID a minister, the other day, in a discourse delivered to an audience composed of several hundreds of very intelligent listeners, "There are those calling themselves Adventists, who are looking for the second coming of Christ in the flesh. Their expectations will never be realized." In connection with the above, the speaker took occasion to explain that he held the scripture doctrine of the second coming of Christ to be a spiritual manifestation in the heart of every believer. A very large portion of those religionists who profess to found their faith upon their understanding of scripture testimony, believe in the personal return of Jesus to the earth; but we know of none who look for his coming in the flesh, if by "flesh" is meant that mortal, corruptible, which, at his resurrection, put on immortality, incorruption, except the Jews who reject him entirely, and consequently yet look for the first advent of the Messiah. We suppose, however, the personal coming of Christ is what the preacher alluded to. That members of the church of God are, by grace, blessed with an in-dwelling of something foreign to their natures, sent of God, and consequently spiritual, we, of course, maintain; but whether it is Christ, or something else, let us consider.

We say, the word of God being our standard of appeal on all points of doctrine, it is the "Spirit of truth," which Jesus again and again promised he would send after his departure. He told his disciples, John xv., 26, "When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." Mark, Jesus says of the Spirit, "whom I will send unto you." This could not be true if what we receive is himself, in any form. Neither would it be true that "he shall testify of me," if Christ, strictly speaking, is in us testifying of himself. He, John xvi., 7, talked more plainly to them, saying, "nevertheless I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you." If Christ is this "Comforter," this "Spirit of truth," then the disciples had that blessing while Jesus was with them; but he says, about as plainly as it is possible to speak it, that he is not the "Comforter," that they have it not, and will not have it until he goes to the Father and sends it to them. A part of the work to be accomplished by the Spirit was stated by our Lord to be to "reprove," or as the margin more correctly has it, "convince," "the world of sin." Do we not know this to be the case? Every follower of Christ has, we think, experienced the power of the Spirit to convince of sin. Christ also told the disciples that when "the Spirit of truth is come he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself," etc., John xvi., 13. This is a singular way for Jesus to talk, if himself is the subject of his remarks. Now let our brother in Christ, if he recognizes advent believers as christian brethren, compare the language in xv., 26, "he shall testify of me," with that in xvi., 13, "he shall not speak of himself," and then show us how he harmonizes the two expressions, so very contradictory, in view of the position that it is Jesus who connects us.

But let us, in the light of revelation, examine the speaker's assertion that they who look for the personal coming of Christ will be disappointed. The Bible says so much upon this very important subject that were we to produce all the evidence, many numbers of the paper would be required to contain it. A few texts, therefore, must suffice. By the mouth of his prophet Isaiah, God says, Isa. ix., 6, 7, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder . . . of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice," etc. That a part of this prophecy was fulfilled in the Saviour's first advent admits of no doubt, but was the rest ever fulfilled? Did Jesus ever reign "upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom?"

The prophecy by Ezekiel is "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is: and I will give it him." What was it that should be "overturned," and "be no more?" Why, the kingdom of David, then degenerate and corrupt, and reigned over by the "profane wicked prince," Zedekiah. Has not God fulfilled his threat of overturning and destroying it? Undeniably so. Will he ever restore it? "It shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Well, whose right is it? Jesus Christ's, the son born, the child given. Did he reign on that, or any other throne at his first coming? No, he was despised, persecuted, and put to death. That was not the time appointed of his Father for him to take it. He might have taken it then, by yielding to the entreaties of the adversary, the inclinations of his human nature, and neglecting what the Father gave him to do. He chose to do the will of his God, which was that he should die, be raised from the dead, and ascend into heaven. Since, therefore, Jesus did not receive the throne of his father David at his first coming, and God has said he shall, the conclusion is absolutely unavoidable that he will come again and receive it. What is the testimony of Jesus himself? For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his holy angels, then shall he reward every man according to his works. Matt. xvi., 27. Does he say anything about having a throne when he comes in glory with his angels? "When the son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." Matt. xxv., 31. Did the disciples understand the coming and kingdom of Christ to be figurative, or literal? In answer to the question as to what should be their position in the government of that kingdom, Jesus replied, ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Matt. xix., 28. If the second coming of Christ is a spiritual one, according to the general acceptation of that term, and the throne on which he reigns is the heart of believers, then the thrones of the "twelve" must be the same; in which case, how does our Christian brother know whether he has Christ or one of the apostles reigning in him? There would be twelve chances to one in favor of the latter. We think such a conclusion rather too nearly allied to "spiritualism," whither the generally accredited theory of man's nature inevitably tends, to suit the generality of even our spiritualizing friends.

During the last few moments that Jesus dwelt on earth, himself and his disciples were assembled on Mount Olivet, conversing, and he finished the conversation by telling them, "ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost" (not himself) "is come upon you," etc. Then he "was taken up" from them: "and a cloud received him out of their sight." While, with eager, longing gaze they watched their ascending Lord, two beings, clothed in white apparel, stood by them and said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye here gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go up into heaven." Here we have the testimony of angels. What is it for one to "so come in like manner" as he goes? Is it to go visibly and come invisibly? to go personally and come otherwise? to go literally and come figuratively? Surely no lover of truth can accept such a senseless interpretation of so plain a promise. Was it the Jesus who died on Calvary, and who rose from the dead, that triumphantly ascended from Olivet? He it is that will come; he, and no other. Was he a person having form and substance? So shall he be when he returns in the glory of the eternal Father. Did he go visibly, beheld of men? So shall he return. "Then," said he, speaking of his future coming, and the accompanying judgments, "shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven . . . . and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." Matt. xxiv., 30. Paul, writing to the brethren at Thessalonica, commended their faithfulness, which was admired by people round about, and said, "for they themselves show of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God." 1 Thess. i., 9. He says the Thessalonian brethren were so zealous and consistent in sounding "out the word of the Lord" that they "were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia." If the second coming of Christ is to the heart of individual believers, then those faithful servants at Thessalonica must have witnessed his second advent, and have had no need to wait for it. But was this so? No, Paul says they turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God; "and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come." Paul's explicitness in testifying that the same Jesus who died and was raised from the dead, will come again, forbids all question as to his faith in Christ so coming "in like manner" as he went "up into heaven." The fact that the apostles, who were in an eminent degree subjects of spiritual manifestation, looked and waited for the personal return of Jesus, is of itself altogether destructive of the idea that his return will not be personal and literal. Paul again says, 1 Thess. iv., 16, the Lord himself (not a figurative representation of him) shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we, which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, etc. Here, then is a work, the resurrection of the dead, the accomplishment of which awaits his coming. If the preacher, some of whose remarks we have shown to be at variance with revealed truth, could cast aside the traditions of men, it would be no hard task to prove to his satisfaction, by scripture evidence, that a future life can only be had by a literal resurrection from the dead, or a change, if living at the second personal coming of Christ. And we trust he will take note of this, that God has nowhere and at no time promised to take people, or any part of them, to heaven when they die. That doctrine, though so extensively held, is purely of human invention. The second coming of Christ, then is a doctrine, the importance of which, when viewed in the light of truth, is not easily over-estimated. It is all important, for on the occurrence of that event depends the fruition of the only hope of a future life contained in the promises of the gospel. So, seeking to be both faithful and patient, we say, with the Revelator, "Come Lord Jesus, come quickly."

POWER OF CHRIST'S RESURRECTION.

THIS striking phrase, like many others in the New Testament, challenges our attention to the resurrection of Jesus as one of the mighty forces employed to carry out the work of redemption. Its power is that of a fact in this world's history closely related to other facts and to events yet future.

1. It has power to awaken souls that are dead in sin. The resurrection of Christ, in its relation to all his preceding history, makes the culmination of proof that his claims were just. His resurrection was a more convincing proof of his divinity than if he had been translated like Enoch; more satisfactory to the race of men than if he had accepted the challenge of his enemies and come down from the cross before life was extinct. Not till he had left the tomb was his life-work crowned with honor and glory. Not till he was received up into the heavens was the message of glad tidings complete and the way made ready for the advent of the Holy Spirit. And from that day the disciples were to preach, not Christ crucified alone, but Christ who had risen to die no more. Then the power of the resurrection began to be seen in convicting men of sin: for when Peter told on the day of Pentecost how God had raised from the dead the Crucified One and made him both Lord and Christ, they that heard asked anxiously what they should do. If he were dead and buried, as the rulers and priests wished him to be, they might rest in quiet; but if God had brought him to life and given him power over his enemies, it was time for them to ask how they could obtain mercy. The fact of the resurrection, if it were a fact, could not but alarm those who had cried "Crucify him," and had said, "His blood be on us and on our children." Nothing more astounding could have occurred to that generation. That a man should die was nothing strange, but that the Crucified One should live again was marvellous beyond degree. It was not merely the coming to life of a dead man; not as if an ordinary mortal had returned to this world in bodily form to seek redress for his assassination and murder, but it was the resurrection of one who had claimed to be divine and had been condemned for that claim; who had been rejected by the very people whom he came to bless, and who was now giving tokens that he had a throne as King and Lord. Such was the power of Christ's resurrection among the people who had seen his mighty works and who fifty days before had clamored for his crucifixion.

But its efficiency was not limited to Judea, for as we read the history of the founding of Christian churches, and study the letters of inspired men to the first believers in Christ, we see this announcement of his resurrection relied upon as a clarion note to rouse men from stupor and sin, and compel them to think and gaze upon Jesus glorified and exalted. And after eighteen centuries it retained this power. This truth is now like a sword to pierce the unbeliever's heart. For while there is much of comfort in the assurance that Jesus lives, it is comfort for those only who trust in him, and the promise of his coming is alarming to his foes. "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema, Maranatha; the Lord will come." It is from the wrath of the Lamb that men will one day seek to escape, and it is the risen Christ who is to judge of all at the last day.

So this one great event of the past towering up to the view of all generations, has power to awaken men that are dead in sin.

2. Christ's resurrection has power also to confirm our hopes of acceptance. Had Jesus disappeared from history and from the knowledge of men, from the moment when with a loud voice he cried "It is finished!" and gave up the ghost, we might have the comfort of "a reasonable, religious and holy hope" of remission by his blood. Even then, we could ask for pardon for his sake and hope for eternal life procured for us by his death. But a new aspect is put on the case, when it is testified that he liveth; that he who went down into the grave is the same who now appears for us in heaven; that our advocate is none other than he who was nailed to the tree for us; at his Father's right hand, in glory, is seen the Lamb as it had been slain." Here is a foundation of hope. "It is Christ that died, yea, rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us." Being reconciled by his death, much more we shall be saved by his life.

3. Christ's resurrection has power also to give definiteness to the hope of our resurrection.

How much more clear the promise that the dead shall be raised, than if we had no living and indisputable pattern of the resurrection. Without this we might have some vague idea of glory in reserve; some confidence that a coming day will bring to pass wonders such as the earth had not known; but it needs Christ as the first fruits to give aid to our faltering faith. And that event which we commemorate every "Lord's day" gives us assurance that in Christ all his people shall be made alive, so that we believe and confidently affirm that "the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed."

4. Christ's resurrection has power to confirm our hope of sharing his final triumph.

The fact of his resurrection is linked with the promise that he will come again to the earth. For when he was taken up and a cloud received him out of sight, that was not the end as if a rainbow had appeared and vanished, but the twelve had a moment's glimpse of enduring glory such as Stephen afterward saw. And now our citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body—the body of our humiliation—that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. It is our hope that when he who is our life shall appear, then we shall also appear with him in glory.

Now, whatever other elements of power there may be in the resurrection of Christ, these four particulars show that that glorious and completed fact rises up to human view as no other event in the history of the universe; stirring up souls that are dead in worldliness, confirming our hopes of acceptance, giving assurance of a future resurrection, and of participation in his victory. Who will not open his heart to this power? Who would consent to give up a knowledge of these things and go back to the ignorance of the heathen as they grope blindly through life, wondering and dreaming vague dreams of the future? Who would withdraw himself from the power of this fact to elevate and purify the heart. To know the power of Christ's resurrection is to know him as one who could not be holden of death; and we may well, like Paul, count all things but loss, if only we may know him and be known of him.—Selected.

THE cross of Christ is the sweetest burden that ever I bore; it is such a burden as wings are to a bird, or as sails to a ship, to carry me forward to my desired haven.

Remarks on 2 Corth. v. 17.

BY JACOB GRIM.

"Therefore, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold all things are become new."

Suppose we read, Therefore if any man be in Christ, there is a new creation.

What is the aim and object of the Apostle in this language? At the time this Epistle was written there was a fierce controversy going on in the early church on the question of Judaism, between Paul, James and Cephas; the two last were carried away with their Jewish prejudices and institutions. Peter was quite carried away. But Paul, standing up for the principles of the gospel, contended manfully for the truths taught him by revelation. It is asked by some, What had Corinth to do with Judaism; it belonged to the Gentiles? But one thing must be borne in mind. In all the early churches the foundation was laid by Jewish converts, and was built upon Jewish stock. We recognize this fact in Acts xviii., 8. And Chrispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians believed and were baptized; and he (Paul) continued a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.

In 2 Cor. xi., 21, 22, we recognize this same Jewish element. Howbeit whereinsoever any is bold (I speak foolishly), I am bold also. Are they Hebrews? so am I; are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I.

In this fifth chapter we find these words, "For we commend not ourselves again unto you, but give you occasion to glory on our behalf. For whether we be beside ourselves, it is to God; or whether we be sober it is for your cause; for the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead: and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again."

This 14th verse reads better from an English translation that we have, "That if one died for all, then were all in a state of death." In Gal. ii., 19, 20, we recognize this same fact. "For I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God. I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." Who then are the all for whom Christ died that were in a state of death? We answer: Those under the first covenant; and as the death of Christ closed up that covenant, and as it was a covenant of the flesh, and a covenant of death; therefore as Christ died and rose again, "Wherefore, henceforth know we no man after the flesh. Yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more. Therefore, (because by the death of Christ the old covenant and all pertaining to it is done away), if any man be in Christ Jesus there is a new creation" (under the new, covenant; and any man in that new covenant is a new creature) and the old things of the old covenant have passed away, behold all things are become new. And now, says Paul, from this point we know no man after the flesh. The Jews had been pleading their relationship to Abraham and the blessings to flow from it. Paul carried this discussion so far, on one occasion, as to break out in the following language, "Are they Hebrews? so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I. Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool) I am more."

Now then, in our text, Paul would say, "Wherefore:" for which reason, because of. What is the cause that produces the change in the condition? We have known Abraham, Isaac, Jacob; yea, we have known Christ after the flesh; but henceforth we know no man after the flesh. And why Paul, what has produced this change? Well, the fact is, all under the covenant that made those persons what they were, were in a state of death; yea, they were all dead under the law; and as Christ in his representative character died for them and rose again, that puts an end to all the relationship, and all connected with the first covenant; so now then, as the relationship between these boasting Jews, and Judaising teachers was only a relation to Christ through the law of the flesh, and as that flesh all died or was in a state of death under the law; and as Christ has risen from that relationship into the resurrection state and become the minister of the new covenant, henceforth we know him no more in his old capacity, as the minister of the circumcision; but we know him as a new creature; and as there is a new creation; old things are passed away; behold all things are become new: to wit, that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself. Now then, says Paul, we are ambassadors for Christ; no longer under the old covenant but under the new. Paul speaks of this new creation in Eph. ii., 9, 10. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus. Again, in Eph. iv., 24, "And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." "If any man be in Christ Jesus there is a new creation," of which he is a member; "old things have passed away; behold all things have become new."

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JUNE 17, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"THREE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS."

One Thousand Dollars Wanted.

FOR WHAT?

To put into circulation within the next three months Ten Thousand each of the following works:

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE.

THE JUDGMENT:

TIME AND MANNER OF IT.

AND

LIFE FROM THE DEAD:

Or, The Righteous only will Live Again.

These three documents are for the campaign before us, which is not to be ended till our King is crowned and has the kingdoms of this world subjected to his reign on David's throne. Two thousand each of the above two first-named documents have been printed, and three thousand of the last, and a great portion of them are already in circulation; but there is a wish to increase it to ten thousand each by the next anniversary of the Life and Advent Union. We believe it can be done. It is true, a few have generally had such work to do; but "many hands make light work." If each of our subscribers could pay, or collect one dollar for this object, the full amount and several hundred dollars over would be had to carry on the work.

Who says, I will do it? You can have all your money back again in the documents, if you wish it.

The three works can be had for 14 cents, including the postage; or, 100 of each for $12, including postage, or for $10 when sent by express or taken at our office.

Its Restraining Influence.

It is sometimes urged that, if the wicked are led to believe there is no resurrection for them, and no torment beyond the grave, there would be many who would commit suicide; but the fearful looking for of judgment beyond the grave, would restrain them from the rash act.

Now, we see no restraint arising from such a consideration that is not found equally and more effectual in our view of no future life to the wicked. A punishment certain and near is far more effectual in restraining disobedience than one that is distant, and may be, for that very reason, uncertain. Besides, the punishment must be one that commends itself to a man's reason or judgment as right, and not needlessly severe. A petty schoolmaster may think to threaten to "cut your ears off" is a very "salutary restraint," but the thinking scholar either does not believe he will do it, or he thinks him a barbarian, and loses all respect for him. He may dread him, but can never love or respect him.

Sinners can have no definite sense, if the threatened punishment is death, of the justice of making them alive from the dead to torment and kill them again, any more than they can of interminable torment. In principle and spirit they see no difference. "When dead, why not let us remain dead?" they ask: "and why make us alive to torture us without a chance of asking or receiving pardon, when thus made to see God's justice?" "Surely," they say, "no reason can be assigned for this short and hopeless torturing that is not equally valid for a longer one: either is for no end of our improvement or that of others, and seem alike to be an act of simple revenge."

If death—a deprivation of all life—and the certainty of having no part in the resurrection life will not operate as a check in the sinful career of wicked men, we have no faith that the idea of being made alive from the dead and tormented ten, twenty, a hundred, or a thousand years, then to be killed again, will ever commend itself to their consciences so as to produce conversion to righteousness. Paul said to the contradicting and blaspheming Jews, Acts xiii., 46: "Seeing ye judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." He did not try the experiment of teaching them, so far as the record informs us, that they would be made alive from the dead, and beaten with many stripes "beyond the grave." No such sentiment did he ever utter, nor any other inspired teacher of Christianity. If they did, where is the utterance?

Whether "the fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation of a holy God, beyond the grave," has ever withheld persons from committing suicide or not, may be a matter of doubt. One thing we know, so far as our personal observation extends, self-murderers have been, in a large majority of cases, persons who believed in the torments of the wicked "beyond the grave." Such doctrine was not potent enough to keep them from the rash act of suicide. Even if the fear of torments after death has prevented some from taking their own lives, it is no evidence whatever that such doctrine is true. What superstition is there that has not done the same thing? Purgatory, ghost-stories, etc., have all had their influence on ignorant and superstitious minds: and if a little torment "beyond the grave" is so effectual in preventing "self-destruction," a great deal, yes, eternal torments ought to be expected to prevent more; and precisely in this way our opposers talk who reject the doctrine of the literal destruction of the wicked.

We are of opinion that the true doctrine of Life and Death, showing that there is no future life at all, except through Christ, and that those who suffer the ills of this life, committing themselves into the hands of God through his Son, will certainly arise to a life, "beyond the grave," where sorrow, pain, disappointment and trial will never come, and where our enjoyment and glory will be increased by the roughness of the way through which we have come to that life, would do ten thousand times more to prevent "self-destruction" and inspire hope, than all the preaching of suffering to be endured "beyond the grave:" and it would have this mighty advantage, it would represent the love of God in such a light—in opening such a life for the wretched children of Adam—as would be likely to strengthen them to endure the heaviest storms of this life, in the confidence that that kind and gracious Being, who had given his Son to show them the path to such a life, would cause all things to work together for good to them, if they love and obey him.

To us, no more terrible thought can be suggested than that of perishing like a beast—cut off from all hope of revival into life—never to see God, or his Son, or holy angels, and the holy ones of Adam's race who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb: never to see the new and renovated earth—paradise restored, and all tears wiped away. The thought of missing the sight of all these things is one too painful to be endured; and no trials, no sorrows, persecutions, scorn, hatred of men, or slight by men, is too much to be endured to obtain the blessed vision of these glories to be revealed.

To any sane mind such considerations are ample to prevent "self-destruction;" and when reason has left its throne, no consideration, however awful, can prevent it. Some have believed themselves certain of the theological hell "beyond the grave," and have killed themselves that they might "know the worst of it at once."

Teach men that God has set life and death before them, and calls them, in infinite compassion, to "choose life that they may live:" teach them that life itself would be a curse if they are out of harmony with the Author of life; and exhort them first of all things to become "reconciled to God" through "his beloved Son;" who "is the way, the truth, and the life," and let them know God has "no pleasure" in their death; and show them "God is love," and see if it does not save men from rushing into death as self-destroyers. If this will not do it, nothing can. So it seems to us.

"A Terrible Story."

The Advance, the new Congregational paper, at Chicago, has an article on "Children and the Church," showing how much they are neglected in the pulpit exercises on the Sabbath; but, "of course the children must go to Church, Sunday after Sunday, twice or more: must sit with rigid limbs, eyes direct, and ears intent on the pulpit," etc. The writer then speaks as follows:

Oh yes! They must go to church; but "if the minister wants to preach to the children, why don't he do it some Saturday afternoon in the vestry!" Shall I tell you a terrible story—terrible because true—of which this verbatim quotation somewhat indirectly reminds me? There was a little girl, not long ago, whose religious training had been peculiarly constrained and sombre. The Sabbaths of her life were distinguished by the abstraction of every amusement and occupation which brightened the week-days, and the substitution of nothing suited to her childish apprehension and taste. The grown-folks' church-service, the grown-folks' unintelligible books, the awful hush of grown-folks' meditation—these were the only associations which the Lord's day had gathered to itself during her little life. One Sunday afternoon, when the sacred time had seemed peculiarly oppressive and interminable, the little soul suddenly burst out with the startling inquiry: "Mother! do there be any Sundays up in Heaven?" The shocked mother replied severely: "Any Sundays? Why heaven is one everlasting Sunday." Who can tell what impious caricature of the city of God was painted by that single stroke before the child's vision? After pondering it some time in the light of memory, in ominous silence, she at last sobbed out, "O mother! Do—don't you think that if I was just as good as I could be all the week, after I get up there, that may be He'd let me go down to Hell, and play a little while Saturday afternoon?"

Such is the natural result of excessive "Sabbath keeping." Even if we were to admit the binding obligation of the Jewish, or Law-Sabbath, it prohibits nothing but "work;" it was to be a day of rest from work. No other thing was prohibited that was lawful on any other day in the week. To insist on such an observance of the Sabbath, whether on men, women or children, as naturally includes unrest, is a perversion of the day, even as a Law institution. To chain up children in silence, and prevent them from any innocent exercise, such as is essential to real rest, is a violation of even the Law-Sabbath, because it prevents their "rest." If any feel bound to keep one day for a Sabbath, let them take care that they do not make it a burden and weariness instead of a rest.

The terrible result of improper Sabbath keeping, in the foregoing account, is not a solitary case. Many children have been made to hate the Sabbath and to hate "heaven," where they have been taught that "good children go when they die," by a false idea of each, begotten by the ignorance or superstition of parents and other religious teachers in these matters. No service of God is acceptable to him, that is forced, or unwillingly offered. Let His service be made a pleasure and a delight, even to children, if we would lead them in the ways of life and peace.

The Gospel of the Kingdom.

What is it? Says one "The final destiny of the wicked is not the gospel of the kingdom; and too much should not be said about it, to the exclusion of other matter."

We repeat our question, What is the gospel of the kingdom?

I suppose the gospel is the same now, that it was when Paul uttered these words, "And the Scriptures foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel to Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." Gal. iii., 8.

Now I suppose this gospel of justification, through faith, is the same gospel, as the gospel of the kingdom. Very well, suppose we try to preach it and say nothing about the wicked. Well, who are to be justified? You answer, Those who exercise the faith spoken of in the text. But from what are they to be justified? O, "now you are bringing in the subject of the wicked again." No, we are not bringing in the wicked at all; for they are already in; and it is to the wicked only that the gospel is to be preached. "Jesus came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." The fact of the case is, the gospel is offered to some persons. And we find in the Scriptures this record, that, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Here, now, are three important facts which we will use as a starting point. First, the people of the world are in a perishing condition. Second, God makes a proclamation to them. Third, He offers them life on the condition of believing on his Son. Is it possible to preach the gospel of the kingdom, and leave out the condition and destiny of the wicked? Says one Br., what do you gain by telling men they are material, or are wholly mortal? Why do you not exhort them to be good, and tell them to love God? We answer, first, Man must have a motive to love God, before he moves in the matter. Second, he must first be made to see his danger before he seeks relief from it. And third, he must be satisfied he is going to better his condition before he moves in the matter.

Now, it always seemed to me like rowing a boat against wind and tide to preach to man about the coming and kingdom of Christ until you first make known to him his condition. What does a man or woman care about the coming and kingdom of Jesus, if they believe they have immortal souls and go to Jesus at death? Our plan is, first of all, teach men that God has made a promise to Abraham that he would give to Abraham and his seed, Christ, an inheritance in this earth, called a kingdom, which should be shared by all justified believers in Christ; and then show them, as Paul says, in Eph. iii., 3, "How that by revelation he made known unto me (Paul) the mystery; (as I wrote before in few words, but now will make more plain) whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ. Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs of his promise in Christ by the gospel. Here, then, we have Paul's testimony, that the mystery hidden in ages past was made known by the Spirit; and that mystery was, that it was not God's purpose or plan that the Jew was to be the only recipient of his favor; "And the Scriptures foreseeing" this, preached before this gospel of faith, through Jesus; know, says Paul, the mystery is of Christ. Here, then, we have an inheritance promised; and this promise is in Christ; and this has been made known by the Spirit; and the proclamation includes all, Jew and Gentile; the only condition is, they must be in Christ, justified in him through belief of the gospel.

Here we come back again to our starting point—What is the gospel? and what is belief in Jesus Christ? First, it is necessary to believe in the full and complete mortality of man, in whom there is no help. "Cease from man whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of?" Second, that man is under the condemnation of death; and that death is just what God said it was—returning back again to the dust from whence he was taken. Here, then, is man's true condition; and in himself there is no help. When man is led to see his condition in this light, he is ready to choose for himself whether he wishes to change his condition.

Now the gospel comes in with its conditions. First, it presents its inheritance: a land that God promised his Son, and promised to share it with all those who believe in him, and thereby become united unto him. What then is it to believe in Christ, according to the gospel?

Almost every man we meet believes in Jesus Christ. That is, they have a historical belief in him, as we believe in Washington, or some other person of eminence. But what is it to believe in Christ in a gospel sense, or a saving faith?

For "the just by faith shall live again." What is this faith that makes a man live again? The immortal-soulist cannot have it, for he does not believe he ever dies. Therefore, the man to exercise this faith must first realize his condition to be, that he is mortal; and must wholy perish unless he receives help from some source outside of himself. We will illustrate our meaning by giving an example of belief and faith. We discover a house on fire; the building is enveloped in flames; two children appear at the windows; the father is below. He cries out to the eldest, Mary, jump and I'll save you. She hesitates, and says, father go get a ladder, and I will come down. He calls out to the younger, Jump, Jane, and I will save you. Jane asks no question, her faith is in her father; she has perfect confidence in his plan and in his ability, and for the moment she loses sight of herself; and with her eye fixed firmly on her father, she jumps and finds herself in the arms of her parent. This is saving faith, a firm belief and confidence in the means and the ability provided for her salvation. The elder had the same belief, but lacked faith in the plan and ability of the father; and while waiting to choose her own way and means, perished in the flames, because there was no ladder by which means she might help herself.

Now this is what the gospel asks of us; to lay aside self, and give up all means and conditions of our own, and accept the plan and conditions that are laid down in the gospel. They are that the natural man, and all the laws and conditions for his improvement or salvation, are failures. And that God has devised a new condition, and a new plan, and that is to make a new creation in Christ Jesus. Therefore man must do as Paul says, "Although we have known Christ after the flesh, from henceforth we know him no more." We view him now in the new light, as the head of the new creation: and if we be in Christ, according to this new and living faith, we are new creatures, created anew in Christ Jesus, and are justified from death, and have the Spirit of God dwelling in us, the earnest of our resurrection from the dead, and inheritance into the kingdom of God's dear Son. What then becomes of the wicked? They are left, for want of this faith, and they perish. Shall we not tell them so? Jacob Grim.

What do you Think of it?

Br. Grant: I was in a prayer and conference meeting a short time since, where one took the position that the wicked were not to become as though they had not been until after they had been punished according to their deeds done in the body; and as I have no recollection of ever seeing anything of the kind appear in the columns of the Crisis, I thought that I would pen these lines to you and see if you would not be so kind as to express your opinion upon such an idea, for if it be true that the punishment of the wicked is to take place before they become as though they had not been, then it seems to me that it is high time that it should be published in the Crisis, for if it be true (as I said before), then it follows that the wicked are punished before they die. Yours for light and truth.

A. S. Whitney.

The Bible nowhere says the wicked shall "be punished according to their deeds done in the body." If they are to be punished before they die, then their punishment must end when they die. This cannot be true if the wages or punishment of sin is death, as the Bible declares. As the punishment is death, it does not begin till they are dead. If, after they have died "the second death," they never come to life again, then their punishment will be eternal—not eternal torment, but eternal death. As eternal life is the highest possible reward, its opposite, or eternal death, is the highest possible punishment.

The foregoing is from the Crisis. We copy it just to add our approval of Br. Grant's reply, and to ask "If after they have died, they never come to life again, then their punishment is eternal," is it not equally true that all sinners now in death are in eternal punishment as much as they ever can be? If so, what reason can be given for making them alive to torment, and then put them under death again, that is not equally good for supposing their punishment must be, at least in part, torment "according to the deeds done in the body?" "Eternal life, the highest possible reward" embraces in it the resurrection from the dead; "its opposite, or eternal death, the highest possible punishment," must be, then, to fail of any resurrection. When the righteous come to life, the wicked "remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi., 16; "shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them." John iii., 36.

External Ceremonies.

We find the following statements in the Christian World, showing some of the practices of Romanism. If some of the devotees to rites, to "make Christians," should happen to discover the origin of their views, in the Romish practices, we hope they may at least learn charity, and remember that, "God looketh on the heart." The writer in the Christian World speaks as follows:

Instead of eradicating the superstitions of paganism, the missionaries only put them into Romish form, and thus fostered that predominating element of the African mind in which paganism found its most genial soil—it was essentially pagan still. The Conghese mother, when heathen, had bound a cord, with bones and teeth of certain wild animals attached, around the body of her new-born infant, as a charm to preserve life and health. On becoming Christian, she was enjoined to discontinue this, as a great sin, and substitute a cord made, "of palm-leaves which had been consecrated on Palm-Sunday; and moreover guard them well with such relics as we are accustomed to use at the time of baptism." It was a heathen practice to interdict to every person at birth some one article of food which was never to be tasted. This was forbidden as specially heathenish: and in its intead it was ordered that the person should "fast on Saturdays and eat no flesh on Wednesdays." As heathen they guarded the fields by fetiches, which were supposed to have the power of punishing tresspassers. As Christians, they were "to use consecrated palm branches for this purpose." If there is any change of principle in this change of practice, Romish acumen alone can detect it.

In short, the whole change from paganism to Christian piety was effected through the efficacy of outward forms and ceremonies. Carli, one of their most eminent missionaries, regards baptizing and making Christians as synonymous. Speaking of young children, he says: "In this place we baptized thirty, each of us fifteen, to our great satisfaction, they being the first we had made Christians. That the Conghese so understood is evident from what Merolla, another of their missionaries, relates of a high chief who had been severely censured by Father Benedict for trading with the English and Dutch because they were heretics. The chief, exasperated, replied: "What heretics! What Christians! What Catholics! Are we not all to be saved by baptism alone?" Thus the one taught and the other believed that the application of a little water changed a pagan to a Christian, and raised him from being an heir of hell and "made him an heir of heaven." Of doctrinal instruction, they gave next to none. Few of the missionaries gave themselves the trouble even to learn the native language. Is it not therefore just to say, that of the spiritual truth of God's word, those missionaries did not pretend to communicate more than an infinitesimal portion? Why then should the results of sanctification be expected in their converts? Christ prays the Father to sanctify "through the truth," not without it.

To Whom it may Concern.

The question has been discussed in English ecclesiastical journals whether Dean Atlay, lately created Bishop of Hereford by the government of Disraeli, is a High or a Low, a Broad or a Narrow Churchman. The following extract from a printed notice, widely circulated in his parish, and bearing his signature, may help to settle the question. It was drawn up for the purpose of correcting an error into which it was thought parents might possibly fall, in supposing the registration of the birth of a child rendered baptism unnecessary, and is expressed in the following words. The italics are from the original copy:

"Registration does not make us Christians. Baptism does make us Christians, and by baptism only are we made such.

"Registration does the soul of a child no good whatever, and has nothing to do with baptism. Baptism does the soul very great good. It is by baptism that we are made Christians.

"N. B.—No charge whatever is made for baptism!"

Nothing can be cheaper than such Christianity. It is "without money and without price"—and without value.

In consequence of the severe storm, last week, the tent did not go to Dover, according to appointment, but will be pitched there for meetings on Wednesday of this week, and hold over Lord's day, 21st inst.

"ANNIHILATION."

THIS subject was discussed at length last Sunday evening, by the Rev. Theodore W. Wells, Pastor of the Reform Church at Bayonne, N. J. He went from Genesis to Revelation to prove that man was, or had inherent immortality; and stated among other quotations that Christ died as a sinner, and if annihilation be true, Christ must have been annihilated. He also quoted, "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree." Psa. xxxvii., 35, forgetting to quote the 36th verse, "Yet he passed away, and lo, he was not; yea, I sought him but he could not be found."

Now let us see if inherent immortality and eternal conscious misery be true according to the pastor's theory. He said that Christ died as a sinner, and if annihilation be true, he must have been annihilated.

Let us look at the orthodox views. If the pastor be correct that Christ died as a sinner, he must have suffered as a sinner. Then he must have gone into eternal conscious misery, according to his own theory! So much for the orthodox perversion of the Scriptures.

Inherent immortality is all the theme here, at present, touching the Scriptures. The pastor of the M. E. Church, at Bayonne, has preached on this subject; and another is to take up the same subject as soon as he can get ready.

Thank the Lord, the more they preach on it the more the people will be enlightened, as they can hear both sides, and with a mind unbiased can soon see that "the soul that sinneth it shall die." So says God's word, Ezek. xviii., 20. May they feed on husks no longer; but lay hold on eternal life by believing on Christ, who is our LIFE-GIVER, and has promised to give life eternal to all who put their trust in him, "at the last day," and not at death.

JASPER A. CADMUS.

Saltersville, N. J., June 9, 1868.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—It is truly strange that intelligent men can make use of the argument that, if the wages of sin is annihilation, then Christ must have been annihilated; but he was not annihilated: therefore, the doctrine of annihilation is false. Such logic annihilates "eternal torments;" for, if the wages of sin be eternal torments, then Christ must have gone into eternal torments: but Christ did not go into eternal torments; therefore, the doctrine of eternal torments is false. What can be plainer? A theory that has to be propped up by such logic is weak enough; and it happens there is no difficulty in seeing through such vapor. Let the "Reverends" continue to preach on the subject. They do not know their strength consists in keeping silence; their theory cannot bear the light, and they only expose their ignorance when they attempt to prop it up.

The writer of the above communication is a member of an orthodox church, and has only recently got his eyes open: but he is a worker; and that accounts for the pastors opening fire on the question. They are doing a good work, though they know it not. All truth asks is, to have a fair fight. The Bible, "the sword of the spirit," is all the weapon we need use to meet and rout all the Goliahs our opposers can bring into the battle. Dagon—inherent immortality—cannot stand with the Bible battery opened on him.

FROM CATHARINE E. CONKLIN.

SENECA FALLS, N. Y., June 1, 1868.

BR. STORRS: In looking over the HERALD OF LIFE to day, my eyes rested on Father Wilson's Obituary. I had often wondered if the good old pilgrim was still among the living. He fought the good fight of faith for many years; but his course is finished. No doubt scores have called him blessed, during his long ministry, for pointing them to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world. How much I loved the dear old man, for it was he that first called my attention to the precious doctrine of "No life out of Christ," or the non-living again of the wicked dead. I shall never forget my reply to him: "Father Wilson, that looks just like God; but it cannot be true; there is too much Scripture to refute it." "Not as much as you may suppose, my sister," he replied. I commenced at once to examine the Scriptures with reference to it. But it was not until after I read your pamphlet, "LIFE FROM THE DEAD, or the righteous only will live again," that many passages, which before had been very intricate, were made plain. How my heart was made to rejoice. How lovely my heavenly Father appeared! Not the vindictive judge that we had been taught to believe him to be—to raise the wicked dead for the purpose of slaying them again. How many times I had tried to banish the horrid thought from my mind, when I thought of the dear ones, who had become sceptical by the God-dishonoring doctrine of eternal torment, and had died out of Christ; that they would be permitted to sleep the sleep of death, and not be called to life, to suffer the vengeance of God's wrath. No, no: "the wages of sin is death." Punishment enough to be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power—And yet, how many say, that would be no punishment at all. No punishment to lose eternal life! How inconsistent. Men will endure any amount of suffering to add a few days to their mortal life. When we take the Scripture with reason and common sense combined, how beautiful and harmonious they appear. May God grant us that faith which works by love and purifies the heart.

I give you a definition of second death, taken from a small book called, "Bible Studies for Youth:"

"Second death. Rev. ii., 11. "A death beyond the grave; a state of misery and punishment which never ends, and in which the lost soul is always dying."

Yours, in Christian love.

FROM WM. R. MCCARTER.

GUELPH, C. W., June 6, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I have been much gratified with the weekly visits of the HERALD OF LIFE. The doctrine of Life only in Christ is, to my mind, in accordance with revelation, and I think investigation only leads to firmer conviction. It is very pleasing to hear of the advance which the truth is making in many quarters; for I know that enemies of every kind have to be encountered; but God is manifesting his love by saving many from the power of strong delusion. I would not trespass upon the space in the paper which others older in the faith will occupy so much more profitably. I am satisfied to follow at an humble distance and profit by their superior knowledge.

The energy and spirit with which the work is being prosecuted is very praiseworthy, and I sympathize with those who are laboring in the vineyard.

To all the brotherhood I would express my most heartfelt regards. These are days of persecution, and we are looking forward to the coming of Christ as the only sure hope.

There is a small number of persons here who have constituted themselves a body—the "Christadelphian Association." They hold meetings occasionally, but do not attract much attention. I am glad the mortal resurrection and second death theory, has been so ably handled in the paper. Truth is precious and requires to be guarded with unceasing vigilance. I have no doubt that God will abundantly bless those who are laboring for his cause; and that the light on the Divine record, which the HERALD OF LIFE has been establishing to spread abroad, will find many able and earnest advocates.

Yours, in hope of life through Christ.

FROM WILLIAM LUCAS.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., June 8, 1868.

BR. STORRS: A man named Chatterton, has lectured here three Sabbath evenings on the teachings of Swedenborg. Chatterton having become dissatisfied with the teachings of the Methodist E. Church. I have no reason to doubt his sincerity, and he gives the old theory of hell torments some pretty hard knocks; yet his theory is but little better; it teaches Spiritualism, which he denies; but when cornered close, calls it "Spiritism." The first time I heard him, he made the assertion that we are spirits, and that spirits are all around us, but we cannot see them or they us. But yesterday, in speaking of spirits he said, Swedenborg saw them and talked with them. His theory of hell is, that the wicked grávitate towards each other and sin on and are being punished for their sin. A pretty hard hell that, I think.

I talked with him a little, and asked him some questions which he did not answer satisfactorily. First: How can thought exist without brain? He said the body is only the outside covering, but the spirit is the man, and is immaterial. He was then asked if he could show the hole where it comes out of the body? But, with a laugh, he told me I had better go and look for it. I then asked if he could tell what is spirit? He spoke of God's being a spirit, or immaterial substance; which I think would puzzle a Virginia lawyer to explain. I then asked how it could be, or why it is, that the spirit in man, being the propelling power, would cause its covering to go up to the bar and drink and get drunk, then roll its own house, or covering, in the gutter, and then go to sleep with hogs? He said, that had nothing to do with the case; it could do what it pleased. I informed him, I thought the spirit must be a poor affair to act so.

Yours, in hope of Life by a resurrection, or a change at the coming of the Redeemer.

FROM F. WINANS.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 7, 1868.

BR. STORRS: As I informed you some time ago, so I have continued to keep the two works, viz., the "DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE" and "LIFE TO THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY," going. Just as soon as read and returned, I start them again; also some other tracts, full as well supported by the word of God and sound argument as the above named. You cannot tell what a breeze is stirred up. We have had one wonderful restitution discourse, in which we were informed that every man, woman, and child, that had ever lived since Adam's dust was formed into man, would live again. The living substances, destroyed in the deluge; the burned Sodomites; the Egyptians at the Red Sea; the poor Jerusalen sinners, that ate the fruit of their own bodies in the straitness of the siege: all the heathen and idolaters that sinned without law, and were therefore considered worthy of death, without one solitary warning by prophet or seer, by God or angel, must be dragged from their gloomy caverns to suffer another death, of which they never had one note of warning. I cannot tell you what a great cross it was for me to keep silence; but I did; in my patience I possessed my soul. I knew the foundation would not bear such a superstructure; so I stood from under, and departed with the sweet consciousness that Jesus had risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that sleep in him: the remainder have the sting of death, which is sin, so deep in them that they will never get from under its power.

I do not know what you will think when I tell you that I have had a committee to wait on me, to inform me that I was within their jurisdiction, circulating that which they considered false doctrine; and a request for me to desist from the same. I had a prompt answer to give the committee. My Master tells me, to "occupy till" he comes. Your church tells me, through you, to occupy no more. Now, "whether it be right in the sight of God to obey you, rather than God, judge ye," This answer has gone back to the council, and I await results. I am going it single handed among strangers. All I ask is, that you will show fair play. Victory will be on the side of truth and righteousness. Do not be afraid to help me extract this old dragon's tooth.

DEAR EDITOR: I desire my paper sent to this place. I feel lost without its weekly visits. There is a goodly number here that believe in the glorious truth of "No life out of Christ." I am doing what little I can to spread the truth. There is much opposition from all quarters; the whole world seems to be combined together to overthrow the truth of life from the dead to the righteous only. While they are divided on other themes they are united in this.

We have just returned from a meeting in Story County, where the life views never were fully presented before. One of the editors of the Herald of the Kingdom was there, who holds that the saints will be raised mortal and stand before the judgment seat to have their characters tried, then those that are worthy to be changed will receive immortality. I met him with the sword of the Spirit, and had good liberty in wielding it. Many expressed their satisfaction in the way it was conducted. I trust many were convinced that the truth was mightier than this false reasoning of men. I fear the most that hold that unscriptural idea of resurrection are converted to Dr. Thomas rather than to God, for he seems to be "all and in all" to them." We also have to suffer slander from some unknown quarter through the Gospel Banner because of our faith and practice in the communion. We practice it yearly, but we have never required it of others, allowing them to use their own judgment in this matter, yet we are always ready to give our reasons for so doing, and many are coming into the same practice; and it is stirring up the enemy to bring his strong arguments to bear upon it, which are falsehood and slander. Surely such things never proceed from a heart filled with the words of the Spirit. We receive such things as a sign of our acceptance of God. Oh, may God keep us in the love of the truth.

I am one of the little ones that hope for life when Jesus comes. Soon may he come.

My former address was Cedar Falls. I could have distributed many tracts to good advantage if I had had them. I often go into the country to hold forth the word of life, and those silent preachers would be a great help in feeding the hungry with the bread of life.

FROM BERLINE S. ERWIN.

PHILADELPHIA, June 12, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Your tracts have been received and have been put at work. They are serving to strengthen those who have already investigated the Bible in an unprejudiced manner, and who desire to come to a full knowledge of truth—not afraid of unlooked-for consequences, viz., the casting out of synagogues by those who think they are thus doing God service, and also receiving revilings of men who think differently.

I have read your publications with great avidity, and have been able to say, Amen, to a great many new truths that I had never before noticed, nor even dreamed of.

In meeting friends of mine in the store, upon the street, or in the social and family circle, I have broached the all-absorbing topic, "Life from among the dead only through the Prince of Life," who was the first fruits (of them which slept), over 1,800 years ago.

Conversations have arisen upon this subject which have lasted until near midnight in some cases: in one case, a friend, for the sake of argument, admitted that the wicked dead were actually out of existence forever; but, said he, how about the righteous who have died? Show me some way of identifying them personally during the interim between death and the resurrection, and I shall then be more likely to accept your theory. I proposed to him to answer me by explaining the text. "Them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." I also told him that "Our life is hid with Christ in God." Still, I should like to have some Scriptural evidence with which to convince him of the truth of our views, and at the same time satisfy his inquiry. Would you, if possible, enlighten me, and through me this friend, upon the above? By thus doing you will oblige your brother.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—If men will not believe till they can have demonstration of the how a thing is to be done, we know of no way to remove their unbelief. If God has said he will raise up the dead in Christ, we have no fears about the matter but what "He knoweth how" to preserve their identity. Those who doubt in this matter may find they "err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God." A child is told by his father that he will do a certain thing for him. But, saith the child, I do not see how you can do it. Very well, saith the parent, you may not see how it can be done, but nevertheless, I will do it. If the parent always has performed what he has promised, is it becoming in the child to insist on knowing how his father is to do what he has now promised? Would he act faith by such a course? God has pledged himself to raise up from the dead "them who sleep in Jesus." The how he is to do it is his concern, not ours. Our business is to believe he will do it.

FROM WM. R. WARNER.

BOSTON, MASS, June 12, 1868.

"THE angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them."

It is now as it was when this was written. God has a special care for those who love and fear him, and regard his truth; and although they are few that walk the straight and narrow way, few that will stand up for the truth and speak out the truth, yet these do realize the truth of David's language in regard to the righteous.

God has always had his faithful witnesses, in all ages, who would not bow down to error; those who would not bow down to the image that the king had set up in the plain of Dura. Some like Phineas ready to take the javelin in his hand and go and smite it through those who transgress and lead away others; no matter if they are princes or leaders. There are some, like William Tyndale, in our day, who are not afraid to speak out the truth in regard to the Pope and the King, and tell them to their face the whole truth, though it cost him his life. While his words were and are now respected by his worst enemies, those who tried to flatter the king and conform to his notions and the popular erroneous opinions of that day, are forgotten, are perished. It is as was spoken by Solomon, "The name of the wicked shall rot."

I never could have sympathy with those who know the truth, yet are afraid, or make some excuse for not speaking it out. They must certainly lack faith in God. They cannot believe that God is able to take care of them, and of his truth that he has committed to their trust. Will not God punish this weakness or wickedness as he did old Eli, whose sons made themselves vile and he restrained them not? If all who know the truth would act without fear of men, as did those poor illiterate fishermen of Judea who were with Christ, could God's holy truth be perverted by men, as it is now? No.

I like your article in last week's paper, "No Life out of Christ." It is to the point, and clear. I've read it to several; also your answer to W. E. Manly, on the nature of man. Its true, is Scriptural, and cannot be answered. I love to see these cities of refuge which the enemy flee to, besieged and taken.

No matter how many believe error, or how deeply it is rooted, Jesus says, "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." Please send me the "Three Campaign Documents," spoken of in your last paper. Two of them I have never seen.

I have been circulating those tracts you sent me last Fall. Mostly in the church to which I belong, among the Baptists; and although I have received severe persecution and bitter words from those of my own denomination, who ought to show more of the spirit of Christ, I will not complain, but will strive with all my power to bear the cross where it is his will, who bore the weight of all our sins before us. Yours as ever.

ELD. LIBERTY WETHERBEE, Bangor, Me., writes: I would say to our Brethren, who travel this way, that there is an open door for the gospel to be preached in old Kenduskeag, although a new place. Some twenty believers have come out on the Lord's side; and are expecting life only through Christ. This glorious God-honoring doctrine is gaining ground fast in these regions. The common people are becoming satisfied that the old theological notions about heaven, hell, a personal spirit-devil, and the judgment, together with the idea of making alive the wicked dead to torment and kill them again, are all unsound and false. Hence, when we bring out Paul's weapons of war, and Peter's ammunition, and place all on God's battery, with the love of truth in our hearts, the old theories tremble to their foundations, which are sandy indeed. Men are led to say, "O the goodness of God." Do not forget us in this field. Preaching brethren give us a call, and help on the truth.

DAVID C. JOHNSON, Toms River, N. J., writes: I had no knowledge of the HERALD OF LIFE till last winter a good brother sent it to me. I have not seen him since to thank him. I thank you and the other Life believers for the words of truth you have sent me. I thought, at first, I could not advocate the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, but I have become fully persuaded that is the truth. Now when I go to the Methodist church and hear them talk about going to heaven at death, and eternal torments, I think it is the greatest error in the world. But some will not listen to the truth: it may be imputed to their ignorance. I hope and pray that the blessing of God may go with you all in the Life theme, and help you to sustain the cause you advocate. Your brother, in hope of eternal life, when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

DANIEL M. MILLER, Adell, Wis., writes: I thank you for the Bible truth I have received from your paper and other works. I pray the Spirit of God may help you, and hope the lovers of truth will be able to furnish the means to have it published through the world, so that it may be understood by "the common people" and prove a blessing to them. Pray that God may aid me by his Holy Spirit that I may so run that I may gain the prize of our high calling and meet you in the holy land.

ELD. J. LEWIS, at Mode, Ill., June 3d, writes: The thought of the nearness of the coming kingdom deeply impresses my mind. I wish to be ready for it, and I ask myself, have I done all that I could to get the truth before the people, so that the "Well done" may be mine when the blessed Redeemer comes? I shall be sixty-nine years old one week from this day. I remember one year ago of resolving to devote all my time and strength to the glory of God through the year, if spared. I now look back and see that I have travelled hundreds of miles where no one but myself would think of exploring; and all with little pecuniary aid. Money is almost out of the question until after harvest; but we feel no less determined, by the help of God, to persevere in sowing the good seed of the kingdom. What we do must be done quickly; for the signs of the times indicate that the kingdoms of this world are soon to become the kingdom of our Lord. Let us watch and be sober.

ELD. E. B. TAFT, Stockton, Cal., sends us this week two more new subscribers, and an order for more books and pamphlets, and says: The great fundamental truths of the Scriptures begin to shine in this place. Many seem desirous to look into these matters for themselves. I have no doubt but that I could circulate a much larger number of the works on Life to good advantage the coming winter; this, however, may be making calculations too far ahead in these eventful times. I am fully persuaded that great changes will soon take place. The second advent of our glorious Redeemer cannot be far distant; and however much we may admire the present reign of peace, the glory attending the personal reign of Christ causes many of his true disciples to exclaim with the Revelator, "Come Lord Jesus, come quickly." Your brother in the faith.

"FORGOTTEN LOVE."

THE following is an extract from an article on reading religious papers, published in London in 1793.

To reading and reflection, some part of every day if possible, should be inviolably sacred. He who never reads, forgets he is rational; and he who never reads with a thirst for spiritual knowledge, forgets that he is a canditate for immortality. As our understandings improve by our acquaintance with divine revelation, and with the writings of great and good men, we shall, in our progress through this vale of imperfection and sorrows, participate of unnumbered joys to which the trifling and the indolent are strangers.

"Sorrow," says a writer, "is a kind of rust to the soul, which every new idea contributes in its passage to scour away. It is the putrefaction of stagnant life, and is remedied by exercise and motion." The ignorant are like ships on a boisterous sea without cargo and without ballast. Let this not be read as something that relates only to another. Time will shortly moulder in the dust the hands that now write, and still the breast that now throbs at the reflection."

THE MOTHER BLESSED BY HER LITTLE CHILD.

A LADY who had charge of young persons not of kindred blood, became, on one occasion, perplexed with regard to her duty. She retired to her own room to meditate, and being grieved in spirit, laid her head upon a table, and wept bitterly. She scarcely perceived her little daughter, seated quietly in a corner. Unable longer to bear the sight of her mother's distress, she stole softly to her side, and taking her hand in both of her own, said:

"Mamma, once you taught me a pretty hymn:

'If e'er you meet with trials,
Or troubles on the way,
Then cast your care on Jesus,
And don't forget to pray.' "

The counsel of the little monitor was taken, and relief came. The mother was repaid for rightly training her child by having her become her own blessed teacher.

COLLINS, the infidel, once meeting a plain countryman, inquired where he was going. "To church, sir." "What to do there?" "To worship God." "Pray tell me, is your God a great or a little God?" "He is so great, sir, that the heavens cannot contain him, and so little that he can dwell in my heart." Collins afterward declared that this simple yet sublime answer had more effect on his mind than all the volumes he had ever read.

KNOWLEDGE, planted by the hand of affection, in the hallowed sanctuary of home, is wont to take deeper root than "seed sown by the wayside." Parents who write with their own pencils lines of heaven on the fresh tablets of their children's hearts—who trust not to the hand of hirelings their first, holiest, most indelible impressions—will usually find less than others to blot out when they read it in eternity.

MEETINGS IN NEW YORK CITY.—Believers in the Second Coming of Christ at hand, and future Life for the Righteous at his Coming, meet for worship every Sunday, at Botanic Hall, No. 68 East Broadway. Service at 10½ A. M. and 3 P. M. Seats free.

A TRUTH.

"As the twig is bent, the tree is inclined."

IT is all but impossible to eradicate early impressions; especially those gathered from those in whom we have confidence and implicit trust. How important, then, that we strive, earnestly strive to inculcate into the minds of the young, especially our own children, those truths which to us are dearer than life itself. I say "our own children" because preachers, as well as those who undertake to teach children, do better abroad than they do at home! It's a truth, it's a lamentable fact.

THINK.

THOUGHT engenders thought. Place one idea upon paper—another will follow it, and still another, until you have written a page. You cannot fathom your mind. There is a well of thought there which has no bottom. The more you draw from it, the more clear and fruitful it will be. If you neglect to think yourself, and use other people's thoughts, giving them utterance only, you will never know what you are capable of. At first your ideas come in lumps, homely and shapeless; but no matter—time and perseverance will arrange and refine them. Learn to think, and you will learn to write; the more you think, the better you express your idea.

THE "GENEROUS OFFER" REVIVED.

It will be remembered that the HON. O. S. HALSTED, last winter made the offer to send his work, "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE," to any subscriber of the HERALD OF LIFE for $2, and himself prepay the postage. The retail price of the work is $3. By accepting the judge's offer, you, in fact, get this invaluable work for a little more than half price; as the author gets but $1.68 after paying postage. The book is one to study; and with it, your Bible will be more perfectly understood. The offer is a most generous one, and we hope many more will avail themselves of it. It is not restricted to your taking one copy at this rate. You can have any number you choose to send the money for. Send $2 for each copy; writing your own name and Post Office address plain, and the work will come to you free of any other expense.

Direct your communication to "HON. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad St., NEWARK, N. J.

TENT MEETING.

The Life and Advent Mission Tent will be pitched near Dover, Morris Co., N. J., Lord willing, to commence meetings Saturday 13th inst., and hold over the two following Lord's days. The cause there is in its infancy, and there are many adversaries. We beg an interest in the prayers and sympathies of all that love the appearing of our Lord; and hope as many as can will cheer and encourage by their presence. It is on the line of the Morris and Essex R. R., running from New York to Easton, Pa.

THE CHRISTIAN AND HIS ECHO.

TRUE faith, producing love to God and man
Say, Echo, is not this the gospel plan?
The gospel plan.

Must I my faith and love to Jesus show,
By doing good to all, both friend and foe?
Both friend and foe.

But if a brother hates and treats me ill,
Must I his faults as carefully conceal?
As carefully conceal.

But if my name and character he blast,
And cruel malice, too, a long time last;
And if I sorrow and affliction know;
He loves to add unto my cup of woe;
In this uncommon, this peculiar case
Sweet Echo, say, must I still love and bless?
Still love and bless.

Whatever usage ill I may receive,
Must I be patient still and still forgive?
Be patient still and still forgive.

Why, Echo, how is this? thou'rt sure a dove,
Thy voice shall teach thee nothing else but love.
Nothing else but love.

Amen! with all my heart then be it so;
'Tis all delightful, just and good, I know;
And now to practice I'll directly go.
Directly go.

Things being so, whoever me reject,
My gracious God me surely will protect.
Surely will protect.

Henceforth I'll roll on him my every care,
And then both friend and foe embrace in prayer.
Embrace in prayer.

But after all these duties I have done,
Must I, in point of merit them disown,
And trust for heaven through Jesus' blood alone?
Through Jesus' blood alone.

Echo, enough! thy counsels to mine ear
Are sweeter than to flowers the dew-drop tear;
Thy wise instructive lessons please me well;
I'll go and practise them. Farewell. Farewell.

IRVING AND THE THIEVING BOYS.

MR. IRVING was full of the milk of human kindness, but even he couldn't submit composedly to the robbery of his orchards. The following incident will show how he stopped it:

When he first moved into this region he was much annoyed by thefts which some bold boys perpetrated upon his fruit. He determined to stop their visitations by a method peculiar to himself. Learning from the gardener that they were on the premises, after placing him in a certain spot, with instructions how to act, he, from the opposite side, came upon the boys unexpectedly, but having recently settled in the neighborhood, they were not familiar with his appearance, and kept pocketing the apples with the utmost nonchalance. He singled out the lad who apparently assumed the post of leader, and thus addressed him:

"Boy, those are very poor apples. I know of a tree on which there are far better ones."

"Where is it?" asked the wary marauder.

"Over yonder," pointing to the cottage.

"We're afraid of the old gentleman."

"He is not there now. You will be perfectly safe; but make no noise lest we be overheard."

In a few moments the party were on the march for the new foraging-ground, Mr. Irving leading. They advanced in single file, and sought the shelter afforded by the east side of a prickly hedge. Ere long the voice of the gardener was heard near them.

"Be quiet," said the leader, "or we shall be discovered. Keep near the hedge, every one of you."

Fear made them hug closely to the covert, which they imagined only concealed them from the dreaded proprietor. The thorns pricked them sorely, but the greater danger which was imminent made them indifferent to the pain inflicted by the thorns.

Soon they approached the desired apple-tree, and as they gathered round it saw the gardener approaching from a direction which made escape impossible.

"Boys," said Mr. Irving, "this is the tree I spoke of, and I am the owner—Mr. Irving. Do not be afraid," he continued, "I shall not punish you; the prickly hedge has done that sufficiently already. I only ask that when you want to eat my fruit you will come to me and ask for it. I do not like to have my property taken without my permission."

The ringleader in this affair gave the writer, in after years, the details of it himself, and added that the rebuke was so thorough he never robbed Mr. Irving's or any other apple orchard again.

FANNY AND HER MOTHER.

LITTLE Fanny reminded her mother, as they sat at work one morning, of her promise to continue the conversation on the subject of the talents; and inquired if the present were not a suitable opportunity.

"Yes, my love," her mother replied, "and a trifling circumstance which occurred this morning, brings to my mind one among the number of your talents, which it is highly important that you should remember and improve."

"What is that, mother?"

"It is the talent of influence. You look surprised, Fanny, as if you thought it scarcely possible that such a child as yourself could possess any influence. But consider, though you are young, yet you have a brother and sister still younger than yourself, and to them your example is of great consequence. There is comparatively but little difference in your ages, yet they consider you much older, and it is natural for them to look up to you, to watch your actions, and, as far as they can, to imitate them. How careful this should make you to set them a good and proper example.

"The circumstance I allude to is this: I believe you will be sorry to hear it, and I think it may prove a useful lesson to you. I told you all the other day, not to dig in my flower border, as you would injure the flowers just put there. Early this morning I found Robert and Mary digging there, and a fine plant broken off, and when I reproved them for disobeying me, they told me Fanny had been digging there yesterday, and pointed to the place. Now, though this does not lessen their fault, yet I think you will own that your example led them to it, and that if you had not first broken my command, they most likely would not have done it. Do you not see this?"

"Yes, mother, and I often wish they would not do whatever they see me do."

"Well, my dear, you can then understand what I mean, when I tell you that even you have the power of doing good or evil by your example. Be careful to use this talent aright. If you should live to grow older your means of usefulness in this way will greatly increase; and I may be spared to see my Fanny an ornament and a blessing to society, by rightly exerting on all around her, that which God has given to her care, the talent of influence.

HEATHENISM: OR, MONGREL CHRISTIANITY.

"THE heathen are at your door," was the remark of one who in his day was called eccentric. To-day, especially were he enlightened in the gospel truth of life and incorruptibility alone through Jesus Christ, he could well say —"The heathen are at your door." Never was this more forcibly presented to me than on reading a modern piece of poetry—called a hymn! It is one that has been extensively sung by children of Sunday schools at a recent anniversary. Its name is "THE ANGEL BOATMAN." The sentiment expressed is so like heathen notions among ancient Greeks and Romans, that I could not help comparing, and placing in parallel columns the views of the ancients and those of the moderns, and thereby showing to whom we are indebted for much that passes current; aye, is verily believed to be according to truth.

Before presenting the two pictures, which are easily blended in one, let me ask in all candor and earnestness those who are believers in the glorious gospel of the blessed God, who has revealed himself as the Father of light, the fountain of life, and who, it is positively stated, "only hath immortality," let me ask you, are you in the path of duty when you allow your children, who are as precious to you as the apple of your eye, to assemble with, either in Sunday school or church relation, such as sing such folly as,

"One by one we cross the river,
One by one we're ferried o'er;
One by one the crowns are given,
On the bright and distant shore.
Youth and childhood oft are passing
O'er the dark and rolling tide,
And the white-robed angel boatman
Is the dying Christian's guide,
And the white-robed angel boatman
Bears them o'er the rolling tide."

This is one verse of three which are like unto it; and now I will copy from Tooke's Pantheon, a work of acknowledged authority so far as it gives the history of the ancient mythology of the Greeks and Romans.

"Charon" is called one of the "Infernal Deities," and first is described his place of residence:

"Deep was the cave, and downward as it went,
From the wide mouth, a rocky, rough descent,
And here the access a gloomy grove defends,
And there th' unnavigable lake extends,
O'er whose unhappy waters, void of light,
No bird presumes to steer his airy flight,
Such deadly stenches from the depth arise,
And steaming sulphur, which infects the skies:
Hence do the Grecian bards their legends make,
And give Avernus to the lake."

"The passage that leads to the infernal regions was a wide, dark cave, through which you pass by a steep, rocky descent till you arrived at a gloomy grove, and an unnavigable lake called Avernus, from which such poisonous vapors arise that no birds can fly over it, for in their flight they fall down dead."

"The monsters at the entrance of hell are those fatal evils which bring destruction and death upon mankind, by means of which the inhabitants of these dark regions are greatly augmented; and those evils are care, sorrow, diseases, old age, fright, famine, want, labor, sleep, death, sting of conscience, force, fraud, strife and war.

"The Furies' iron beds, and strife that shakes
Her hissing tresses, and unfolds her snakes."

If modern theologians can better describe a modern hell, let them come on. But "Charon" is an old, decrepit, long-bearded fellow: his name denotes the ungracefulness of his aspect. In the Greek language he is called Porthmeus, that is, portiton; "ferryman." Virgil thus describes him:

"There Charon stands, who rules the dreary coasts;
A sordid god: down from his hoary chin
A length of beard descends, uncombed, unclean;
His eyes like hollow furnaces on fire;
A girdle foul with grease binds his obscene attire.
He spreads his canvass, with his pole he steers;
The freights of flitting ghosts in his thin bottom bears.
He look'd in years, yet in his eyes were seen
A youthful vigor, and autumnal green."

Again let me ask the personal devil, hell fire and brimstone believer, can you better picture his majesty than has already been done? But now comes the agreement between the children's hymn and heathenism. "He is waiting to take and carry over to the other side of the lake the souls of the dead, which are seen flocking on the shores in troops. Yet he takes not all promiscuously who come, but such only whose bodies are buried when they die; for the unburied wander about the shores an hundred years, and then are carried over."

"But first they pay Charon his fare, which is at least a half penny. There are three or four rivers to be passed by the dead. The first is Acheron; the second Styx; the third Cocytus; the next Phlegethon—so called because it swells with waves of fire, and all its streams are flames.

"When the souls of the dead have passed over these four rivers, they were afterward carried to the palace of Pluto, where the gate is guarded by a dog—Cerberus; he has three three heads, and his body is terribly covered with snakes, instead of hair."

So much for the "Angel Boatman," and so much for "Charon," his other name, given unwittingly by those who would consider themselves highly insulted were you to tell them the truth; and shall we fear to tell God's blessed truth when we see and hear so much that is not in harmony therewith? when a heathen god takes so much credit, and men, women and children are said to follow at his call if they have been (their bodies) buried, and have the half penny to pay Mr. Charon.

Now what is the lesson drawn from the foregoing? Why, Death (Charon, if you please), is a good fellow if you pay him. What saith the Scriptures, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Is he a friend or an enemy? Shall we woo him? or shall we seek refuge in Christ? who has promised, if any be in him, he will "raise him up"—not by crossing four rivers—"at the last day." Will Christ always be robbed of his glory? Rather will he not soon, very soon, come in the glory of the Father, his own glory and the glory of the holy angels, to deliver those who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage? He will; and he which hath the keys of hades and of death will soon unlock the prison house of bondage, the captives will go free; their life, future, will be without money, without price, other than that already paid, his precious blood—his life—it was taken from him, he has it again; an endless life. Trust not, then, in an "angel boatman" to do what Christ is pledged to do himself: "raise us up," NOT "ferry us over;" make us to inherit with him the throne of his glory, and reign on the earth —not in the abode of Pluto, nor above the stars, or "beyond the bounds of time and space;" but "on the earth."

THE CHURCH OF GOD.

IT is founded upon the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. (Eph. ii., 20.) To become a member of this church, each individual must make an intelligent confession (as Peter did) that Jesus is the Christ, (Anointed one) the Son of the living God. Matt. xvi., 16. Now, to understand this confession, we must know something about the anointing of the kings of Israel. God was Israel's King, from their departure from Egypt to the days of Samuel. They then rejected God, and wanted a king like other nations. 1 Sam. viii., 1–8. Samuel anointed Saul King of Israel, according to God's command. 1 Sam. x., 1. Saul departed from the law of God; (1 Sam. xv., 10, 11.) Yet while he was still king, (though a rejected one) God commanded Samuel to go and anoint David king. 1 Sam. xvi., 1–13. And according to the history, David was anointed king some time before he took the kingship. So it was with a vial, or horn of oil that the prophets anointed the kings of Israel. While David reigned as king over Israel, God made oath to him, that he should have a son, to reign on his throne forever. 2 Sam. vii., 12 –16; Ps. lxxxix., 35–37. But the anointing of this promised Son of David, was not given to a prophet. Jesus came through the prophetic door. John x., 1–2. A virgin conceived and brought forth a son, and called his name Jesus. Isa. vii., 14; Matt. i., 23. He was born in Bethlehem of Judea. Micah. v., ii., Matt. ii., 1. He is to rule God's people Israel, and reign on the throne of his father David. Isa. ix., 7; Matt. ii., 6; Luke i., 32, 33. Near the age of 30 years, he was baptized by John in Jordan. Luke iii., 21–23. And when he came up out of the water, God anointed him, not with oil, but with the Holy Spirit, sent down from heaven in a bodily from like a dove, and resting on him. Matt. iii., 16–17. This act did not make him King in fact, but one only by appointment. He is the anointed king of Israel; and has been, ever since he was baptized of John in Jordan and the descent of the Spirit, sent on him. By this anointing, Jesus became the Christ of God, or the anointed of God. He was consecrated, set apart, by this act, to reign over Israel. Or, as Peter confessed, "thou art the Christ, (the one God has chosen to reign on David's throne), the Son of the living God." God acknowledged him as his Son on the banks of the Jordan; so flesh and blood did not reveal this to Peter, said Jesus, but my Father which is in heaven. Matt. xvi., 17. Jesus then declared, that upon this rock (this confession) I will build my church, and the gates of hades (the state of death) shall not prevail against it. Although its members may go down into hades, Jesus has the keys of it, and will deliver all his followers from its dominion. Jesus then commits to Peter the keys of the kingdom of heaven. A key literally is used to open a way, or door into a house. A key figuratively, means knowledge, or power. After Jesus committed the keys to Peter, He commenced teaching his disciples that he must go to Jerusalem, suffer many things, be killed, and be raised from the dead the third day. Matt. xvi., 21. This was all fulfilled to the letter. The high priest, recollect, had a hand in taking the innocent blood of God's Son. Matt. xxvii., 1; Mark xv., 1; Luke xxii., 54, and xxiiid chapter. So they killed him, fulfilling Isa. liii. But on the third day he rose from the dead. Luke xxiv., 20–23; Matt. xxviii., 11–15. He was then with his disciples forty days, teaching them the things concerning the kingdom of God. Acts i., 3. And his disciples believed to the very last that it was Jesus that would redeem Israel; and wished to know if he would not at that time restore the kingdom to Israel. Acts i., 6. Jesus left them under that impression; but they were not to know the time it would be done. But the Holy Spirit would bring to their remembrance what they had been taught. Matt. ii., 5; xix., 28; Luke xxiv., 21. Jesus told his disciples to tarry at Jerusalem for the promise of the Holy Spirit, which, saith he, ye have heard of me. So on the day of Pentecost the promise was fulfilled; and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues, when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, for every man heard them speaking in their own tongue. Some said, these men were filled with new wine. But Peter settled this matter by saying, "These are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day." He then calls their attention to Joel's prophecy. Peter does not say that this is a fulfilment of Joel's prophecy; but says this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel. Peter makes no application of Joel's prophecy: but Joel makes his own application of it himself. Joel ii., 26–32, and., iii., 1–2 When God's Spirit is poured out upon all flesh in the last days, then will be fulfilled. Ezk. xxxix., 29; Micah iv., 1—7; Isa. xi., 6 –9. The Spirit was poured out upon the hundred and twenty on the day of Pentecost, in type of what will take place in the last days upon all flesh. Peter then calls the attention of the multitude to the miracles, wonders, and signs, which God did by Jesus in their midst, as they themselves also knew; yet, they had taken him by wicked hands, and crucified and slew him. This Jesus hath God raised up from death; because it was not possible that he should be holden of it. Psa. xvi., 8–11, Peter quotes to prove the above assertion. And as it was from one of their own prophets they seem to give this up. "Thou hast made known to me the path of life." In this verse the way of life is brought to view. Jesus lived a life of toil and suffering in the flesh; he was mistreated, even slain, was buried; but on the third appointed morn God raised him from the dead, to die no more. It was in this way Jesus got the life spoken of in Psa. xvi., 11. Will God give the sectarian world this life upon another principle? They nearly all believe that they are going to heaven as soon as they die, to be with God and Christ. And this doctrine is promulgated from nearly every pulpit in the land. But the Bible plainly teaches that everlasting life is a gift of God through Jesus, by a resurrection, or a change in the last day. Be not deceived, for God is not to be mocked. Gal. vi., 7. Peter continues, "Let me freely speak unto you of the Patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried." What! Peter; is David dead? Our divines tell us that David, and other saints, are alive in heaven. They positively contradict Peter; for he says, "David is not ascended into the heavens." Here is positive testimony showing that even righteous men do not go to heaven as soon as they die. But Peter continues, "David being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, (Psa. lxxxix., 34–37) that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." Peter still keeps up the idea, that Jesus is to reign on David's throne: and God raised him up from the dead for this purpose. But Jesus is now exalted at God's right hand to remain there until his enemies are made his footstool. All Bible readers know, that David's throne and kingdom was in that land God promised to Abraham; and not in heaven where Jesus now is.

David also spake, (saith Peter) of the resurrection of the anointed One, that his soul was not left in hades, (the state of death) neither did his flesh see corruption: whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore, let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God has made that same Jesus, whom you crucified, both Lord and Christ. Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? These Jews become convinced by Peter's reasoning from their prophets, that they had taken innocent blood. They mocked, derided, scourged, and crucified an innocent being. And according to their law, it was death to do such a thing. (Exo. xxiii., 7; Psa. xciv., 21–23). So they became convicted and condemned to death; and their high priest also being guilty with them of the same crime, they now stood in doubt what to do. They could see no way of making restitution, and their high priest being guilty with them, they could not go to him to make an offering for them. Here, the way God had instituted for Israel to meet with him (which was through their high priest), was now closed up by the sin they all were guilty of. So they were placed in a dilemma. In this way the former, or Jewish dispensation, closed, and the Jews saw no way for them to meet with God. And this caused them to cry out, "What shall we do?" A key—the power to unfold the mystery, was committed to Peter. And he presented, at that time, to the Jews, a new truth, such as never was presented to mankind before. What was it? Was it, Repent and be baptized in water? or "in the name of Jesus Christ?" Why is it men will add to Peter's answer? Why not take him at his word? Here Peter opens the way into the kingdom under a new dispensation, which is the church. And I cannot see how any one can ever get into the kingdom any other way under this dispensation. The commission was, Go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. But Peter and the rest of the apostles confined their mission to the Jews. Some eight years after Pentecost, God had to give a sign to Peter to go to the Gentiles, and preach the gospel. Acts x., 9–20. Peter obeyed the summons, and went down to Cesarea and preached, saying, "Of a truth, I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation (Gentile as well as Jew), he that feareth God and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him." Here another new truth was divulged to the human family, never heard of before. Even the apostles thought the Gentiles would have no part with them in the gospel, up to this time. Here is the test by which God accepts men: in every nation, he that fears him and works righteousness is accepted of him; and this is all we should ask of any man as a test of fellowship. If to believe that Jesus is the anointed one, the Son of the living God, and work a work of righteousness, is acceptable to God, it certainly ought to satisfy us. So all who have the one faith, Matth. xvi., 16, then exhibit in their daily walk the fruit of the Spirit, which is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; they constitute the one body, or church of God.

THE SAILOR'S QUESTION.

A SAILOR who had been a desperate character became a true convert. Resolving to serve his Saviour as faithfully as he had done his old master, he strove with untiring zeal to impart to all his shipmates the knowledge of that Redeemer who had become so precious to his own soul. He assured them that he now enjoyed more happiness in one week of his Christian life than he had done in all the years in which he had lived without the knowledge of his Saviour.

"But, Jim," questioned one of his shipmates, "how did you get this strange happiness? What did you do?"

"Do?" said Jim, "why, I believed."

"Well, shipmate, that's just what I want to understand about. How did you believe?"

"How did I believe?" repeated Jim, slowly, and with a puzzled look. "Well, I don't know as I can explain it to you. I quit swearing, but it wasn't just that. I left off drinking grog and chewing tobacco, but it wasn't that. I believed that Jesus Christ would save sinners, if they asked him to sincerely, and the thought came into my head—'He'll save me,' and I was saved—that's all I can tell you."

In this simple, artless narrative of the converted sailor we find both faith and works. First, he tells his shipmate of the outward change, the abandonment of evil habits, the forsaking of sin, "Yet it was not just that," he says, with deep consciousness that this was but the outer coating, the external folds of that kernel of truth which he wished to make clear to the mind of his companion, in answer to the question, "How did you believe?" He felt that the life and soul of that change which his shipmate wished him to describe, was a hearty belief in the invitations and promises of the gospel addressed to sinners, a personal acceptance of these invitations, a personal reliance on these promises. This acceptance of salvation, this faith, had brought forth its fruit in outward reformation, forsaking of old sins, and leading a new life of holy obedience.

These two, the inward change and outward manifestation of it, are inseparable. But there are those who seek to separate them, or put one in place of the other. The natural heart possesses a strange aptitude for the work of perverting truth, and in nothing is this more frequently shown than in the mistakes made on this subject.

Some seek to satisfy themselves with a faith that brings forth no fruit. Some fancy that external reformation is all that is required. External reformation without faith, is like cutting off some of the knotty, unshapely limbs from a dead branch. It may be less unsightly for the process, but it is a dead branch still. Faith engrafts the dead branch on Christ the living vine, and then it is no more dead. Had this sailor ceased from the sin of swearing and forsaken the use of ardent spirits and tobacco, without true repentance and faith, it would have been like the cutting off some of the unsightly limbs of a dead tree, but by faith in Christ the dead branch was grafted into the living vine.—*S. GOOD ADVICE ABOUT DOING GOOD.—Why do you begin to do good so far off? This is a ruling error. Begin in the centre, and work outwards. If you do not love your wife, do not pretend to such love for the people of the antipodes. If you let some family grudge, some peccadillo, some undesirable gesture, sour your visage toward a sister or a daughter, pray cease to preach beneficence on a large scale. Begin not next door, but within your own door; with your next neighbor, whether relative, servant, or superior. Account the man you meet the man you are to bless. Give him such things as you have. "How can I make him or her happier?" This is the question.—Charles Quill.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Professor Wilson, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we endorse the general theory that the Anglo Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage, six cents.

SIX SERMONS on the Inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged, as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind —willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY; by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTERS TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburg, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for 2 cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our own expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

SMALL THINGS NOT TO BE DESPISED.

A SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

"Who hath despised the day of small things?" Zech. iv., 10.

MEN are very apt to look upon small beginnings with a sort of contempt, as if it were folly to expect great results from that which at its commencement gave little promise of enlargement, or an increase that should prove important. Such persons are not disposed to regard small beginnings in anything, or cause, as hardly worthy their notice or examination, especially if it has a lowly origin.

When the children of Israel, after having been in captivity in Babylon for a long period, commenced to return to Palestine, under Zerubbabel, it was, no doubt, considered a small affair, and was little relished by a large portion of the Jews who had got comfortably settled in the province of Babylon. Most likely it was regarded by them as a foolish undertaking, after having become, as it were, one with the people among whom they had so long dwelt, and where most then living had been born. To rupture these relations, and to abandon the homes they had acquired in Babylon was, to them, a wild scheme, and one to be despised when connected with emigration to a land and to cities long since made desolate, and now in possession of their enemies.

Nevertheless, there were a few disposed to make the attempt, a wild scheme though it might be thought to be by the worldly wise. These set out under Zerubbabel to go up to Jerusalem, the ancient city of their fathers. The whole number that went up at this time was only 42,360. Ezra ii., 64. This must have been but a small portion of the Jews at that time inhabiting the province of Babylon; but few though they were, their hearts were in the work, for God had stirred up their spirit "to go up to build the house of the Lord at Jerusalem." Ezra i., 5. It was a "day of small things;" but a mighty work was to be accomplished.

Shortly after their arrival at Jerusalem, notwithstanding the gloomy prospect before them, they "set forward the work of the house of the Lord," and in a short period "the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the Lord." Ezra iii., 8, 10. But there were those among the people who had seen the first temple in its glory. These persons, while all the others "shouted, with a great shout," "wept with a loud voice." The present "small things," contrasted with their previous glorious temple, overwhelmed them, and they could not join in the general rejoicing on this occasion.

The work of rebuilding the temple and the walls of their city met with various hindrances and discouragements. Their enemies placed every obstruction in their way, and ridiculed their work as a contemptible undertaking. "What do these feeble Jews?" they contemptuously ask, "that which they build if a fox go up, he shall even break down their stone wall," is their language. Neh. iv., 2, 3. Truly a day of small things, that seemed to be. Nevertheless, the LORD said, "The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it." Then it is added, in the words of our text, "Who hath despised the day of small things?" Zech. iv., 9, 10.

From these introductory remarks we may learn the folly of treating with contempt any work because it has a small beginning, or because the persons engaged in it may be few and feeble. Its success depends on whether the work be of God or not, and that should be our first inquiry. Instead of this, most persons inquire, "Have any of the priests or rulers believed on him?" have any of our learned or popular men engaged in this work? If not, to them, it is a "small thing," not worthy their notice, except to despise it. How often is this the case in the things of religion. The inquiry, What does the Bible teach? is set aside in obedience to the will of men, whose temporal gains are connected with a system of theology adverse to the views which some humble souls may have learned from an examination of the Bible itself. We now come to

I. URGE THE INQUIRY.—"Who hath despised the day of small things?"

1. The Cultivator of the soil does not. See him prepare the ground, put in the seed, set out plants, watch their progress, wait for the maturity, etc. He shows no disposition to despise the work because things do not reach the highest perfection in a day.

2. The Teacher does not. He begins with the a b c, and labors on in his work through the various stages to the highest perfection of his pupil.

3. The man of Philosophy does not. He knows that the primary principles must first be understood before he can make progress, contented to add little by little to his stock of knowledge.

4. The Mother does not. The more helpless her babe, the more care and attention does she bestow upon it. She sees in her infant a man or woman, to be.

5. Angels do not. "In their presence there is joy over one sinner that repenteth."

6. Leaders into sin do not. They see the mighty results to follow small beginnings—the first oath, the first lie, the first sin of any kind, is a pledge of a mighty harvest of wickedness and death.

7. God does not "despise the day of small things." "A bruised reed—the smoking flax," a look, a sigh, a prayer, attracts his attention. "To this man will I look who is poor, of a contrite spirit, and that trembleth at my word," saith the LORD of Hosts.

8. Christians should not, in respect to themselves, personally, their families, those around them, in their attempts to spread the truth, nor in their labor for the conversion of men to the knowledge and love of God and his Son. Christianity was but a mustard seed at first—small indeed. At one time all but twelve forsook its Author; and after his ascension to heaven all his friends could assemble in an "upper room."

II. WHAT DOES THE DAY OF SMALL THINGS DEMAND OF US?

1. Care and Attention. Look again at that farmer, that teacher, that mother, to whom we have alluded. Do any of them expect to succeed without the strictest care and attention? They would consider it madness, and folly of the worst kind, to suppose success would attend them without this. We are not to expect an increase without effort continued.

2. Watchfulness and Prayer. There are dangers to be guarded against, blessings to be procured, that the things which are good may grow stronger, and go forward to increased perfection, till they arrive at maturity. This we cannot expect without the divine blessing, hence should seek that blessing in all our work.

3. Faith and hope in God. We shall not labor in vain. When Nehemiah was laboring to build the walls of Jerusalem, Sanballat was wroth and took great indignation; he spoke in the most contemptuous manner of the work in which the Jews were engaged, and his associates joined with him in contempt of the "small things" the Jews were attempting to do. Nehemiah resorted to prayer, stating before God the wickedness of their opposers, and seeking the divine aid against his and their enemies. Thus, having committed the case to God, they continued their work, "the builders, every one, had his sword girded by his side, and so builded." Our sword is "the word of God." Let us learn how to use it, not from some sectarian bigot, but from the Spirit of God, whose sword the word of God is. He can teach us how to fight as well as work. Nehemiah says, "So built we the wall: and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof, for the people had a mind to work." Their faith and hope in God nerved and stimulated them in their work. We are not likely to overcome great difficulties and accomplish great things, arising out of small ones, unless we have in exercise a lively faith and hope in God.

4. The day of small things demands of us the active use of all the means God shall enable us to bring into the work "To him that hath shall more be given." He that had one talent made it ten, by use. That is God's order in bestowing. What work was ever anything else but small at its commencement? Our earth has been peopled by one pair, and after all the antediluvians were swept away by the flood it was re-peopled by one family. Abraham went out into a strange country alone, and after years of patient waiting had one son in his old age, and from him has come a seed multitudinous as the stars of heaven. If God be for us, what shall we fear though all the hosts of the great and high ones should compass us round about? In the name of the LORD we can run through a troop and leap over all the walls which they build up, even if they reached to the clouds.

Let us then not be weary in well doing, nor despise the day of small things. If the cloud is no bigger than a man's hand, if God has raised it, we shall get a great rain.

The cause of "Life only in Christ," after having been buried for long centuries under the Romish corruptions of Christianity, has once more, in the good providence of God, been born into life. It made its re-appearance in this country as a feeble infant, with no great names to sustain and nourish it, but it was born of God by just such humble means as he saw fit to use. The high and lofty ones have labored hard to strangle the infant, and have acted not unlike Herod of old, who slew the children of Bethlehem; but God has taken care that the precious and heaven-born child, "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST," shall not be strangled, or its voice be hushed. Many have despised the day of small things, and predicted the speedy death of this infant, but it still lives and grows; yea, it bids fair to become a man.

Take courage, then, ye friends of Jesus, who love "LIFE IN CHRIST," and who look for it in no other way, or to any who are not in him. This star of glory waxes brighter and brighter; it is the morning star of the day of glory, soon to be ushered in. May God hasten it in its time.

GOOD WORKS.

EVERYTHING in religion is on the principle of cause and effect. A few texts of scripture will fully illustrate this idea. Christ says, Matt. vii., 17, 18, Every good tree bringeth forth good fruit. The fruit of the tree fixes with unerring certainty the essential character of the tree. We may make as many, and as strong efforts as we choose to get good fruit to grow on a corrupt tree, but such efforts will be wholly unavailing; for, every tree will bear its own legitimate fruit, according to its character, whether it be good or bad. Again, Paul lays down the rule, Gal. v., 16, that if we walk in the Spirit the inevitable consequence will be that, "we shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh." The only Bible doctrine of good works then is this, genuine faith will always produce corresponding action. In other words, any principle of divine truth that we believe, in the sense of having real faith in that principle of truth, will cause us to act just as though that truth with us amounted to absolute knowledge. The consequence is that in its support we shall esteem it a sacred privilege to make any sacrifice it may justly demand. No matter how keenly we might feel that sacrifice, if not under the influence of a holy faith, still, actuated by the sanctifying power of a Bible faith, we shall not only go cheerfully to the work, but rejoice that we are accounted worthy to sacrifice for God and truth. Anything we do not, or rather would not feel, if destitute of the grace of God, is no sacrifice. To give of our abundance, and still retain not only a competency, but sufficient to enable us to live in ease and luxury, to lay up an abundance "against a rainy day" may indeed be an act of benevolence, and may bless abundantly those on whom we bestow our goods, but it is very far from being a sacrifice for God and his truth. Many doubtless will make a fatal mistake in supposing that such acts spring from a heart sanctified by a holy faith, when in fact they spring entirely from the love of being thought liberal, a desire to further the interests of our particular religious party as such, or through the influence of a physical organization that makes us naturally benevolent. While a genuine faith will necessarily make its possessor to hold the world with a loose grasp, still many who are very liberal are entirely ignorant of its saving power.

Another illustration of the principle that good works are the immediate result of being in a good condition of heart, brought about by a genuine faith, is found in Eph. ii., 10. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works." The simple doctrine of the text is this, The man who is in Christ Jesus, as the unfailing consequence of being in him, will have good works. But, says the objector, does not James teach us that it is possible for us to have an imperfect faith, one that will not produce good works? I answer, if he does, he assures us that such a faith is just as dead as the body without the breath is destitute of life. And its being thus dead is the certain reason why it produces no works. He also declares that such a faith can never save him who possesses it. But it is urged again, that Abraham perfected his faith by his works. I answer, James does not intend to convey the idea that Abraham's works changed the nature of his faith. To suppose this is virtually to say that genuine, saving faith may be imperfect. If this be true, then, on the principle that like begets its own likeness, whatever faith proposes to do for us, that work may be done imperfectly. But that it is not true, is evident from the consideration that such a view of James's teachings makes him contradict all the rest of the Bible. The only idea in this text, James ii., 22, is this: he, Abraham, demonstrated the fact, both to himself and to all who shall read his history, that he had a genuine, perfect faith. This he did by having works exactly in harmony with his faith. In this sense, and in this only, was he "justified by works when he had offered his son Isaac." Abraham was reputed to be a man of faith. In his own estimation he was a man of faith. And when that faith was brought to the trying test, Abraham in his works proved that his faith was of the most genuine, the most perfect character; his profession of faith was most abundantly "justified" before God and men. That this view is correct is certain from the consideration that Abraham's righteousness is not the result of his works, but the immediate fruit of his faith. See v. 22. The entire argument of James is to establish this one truth, viz., that though we make ever so great pretensions to faith, those pretensions are absolutely unfounded in truth, unless we have works exactly corresponding with a gospel faith. But the question may be asked, how, with this view of the subject, are we to reconcile the fact that in the New Testament Scriptures we are so often exhorted to "be careful to maintain good works?" It is simply on this principle; men are liable to be deceived. Many in this age of the world are depending for salvation upon a professed adherence to certain principles or tenets, which may or may not be true. They have a mistaken idea with regard to what constitutes genuine faith. The inspired writers have therefore thrown around this subject many and clearly spoken cautions, constantly assuring us that in order to know that our faith is of the genuine stamp, we must have gospel works. That if our faith does not produce such works, it is false; spurious, a counterfeit of the faith of God's elect. In the language of James, while false professors would attempt to talk faith while they are "without works" every man who has really been made a child of God, by faith, will show that faith by his works. As, says the inspired John, "He that saith that he abideth in him, ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked." The doctrine of the text is this: that he who professes to abide in Christ can only prove that he does abide in him truly, by walking as Christ walked. This doctrine, of good works as the legitimate result of having a genuine, gospel faith, exalts Christ, or God through Christ, and, rightly understood, will save us effectually from the filthy slough of legal righteousness.

S. W. BISHOP.

[ERASTUS CLARK, Grand Rapids, Mich., sent us the following, in a tract, requesting us to publish it in the HERALD OF LIFE. We have read it with considerable interest, and concluded to comply with his request.—ED.]

BABYLONIANISM.

ABOUT one thousand and eight hundred years before the birth of Christ, there lived an Assyrian Queen, whose armies, commanded by her son, subdued nearly the whole of Asia and Egypt. She was called by the Assyrians, Astarte or Athor, and was subsequently known and worshipped in different countries by the names of Asphrodite, Cybele, Semiramis, Isis, and Ashtaroth, by which last name she is frequently mentioned in the Holy Scripture. She had a magnificent temple at Sidon, served by three hundred priests. Her son was called Assarac, and was known and worshipped in other lands by the names of Adonis, Horus, Apollo, and Tammuz, which last name is mentioned in Ezekiel viii., 14. Then the Lord was revealing the abominations that existed among the people that professed to be his servants; and he says in ver. 13–15: "Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations that they do. Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the Lord's house which was toward the north; and behold, there sat two women weeping for Tammuz. Then he said unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations than these." This individual is supposed to be a son of the Nimrod of Scripture. By this Queen Astarte, the Chaldean mysteries were invented for the purpose of forming a distinct class of mankind, drawn from all the races whom she had conquered, who having resigned their individual nationality, might become altogether devoted to herself. This was her primary object. Once admitted into this class or order, they were no longer Babylonians, Assyrians, Egyptians, or Arabians, but members of a mystical brotherhood or priesthood, over whom was placed a pontiff or high priest. This order was divided into certain classes or ranks, the higher taking the vow of celibacy, the lower being permitted to marry. Elated by the success of her original project, the Queen eventually pretended to be an incarnation of the divine Spirit, the bride of the supreme Father, and the Queen of heaven, the being who was destined to bruise the serpent's head. Henceforth, therefore, she became the object of worship in Assyria, as also did her son, whom she proclaimed to be the Son of God, the Deliverer, the Messiah, whose heel the serpent had bruised; he having been killed in one of his wayfaring expeditions. The exact resemblance of the Babylonian goddess, as shown on the cylinders and terra cotta figures found at Babylon, by Sir Robert Kerr Porter, to the images of the Madonna and child, as used by the church of Rome, is truly striking. The ostensible objects of worship in this new system of religion were the supreme Father; the incarnate female, or queen of heaven: and the false Messiah or deliverer, her son; but the last two, viz: the queen of heaven and her son, were in reality the only objects of worship, as the supreme Father was said not to interfere in mortal affairs.

No doubt, this system was the commencement of the great ancient apostasy from the knowledge of God, for we must remember that this queen lived soon after the deluge. From Babylon this apostasy spread unto the ends of the earth, and subsequently divided into three grand schisms, each having its own pontiff or high priest, each pretending to be the true, though all continued fundamentally alike, and all alienated from Jehovah, the Creator of heaven and earth. These schisms were centred in Babylon, Memphis the capital of Egypt, and in Thibet. From "Reminiscences of Tartary, Thibet, and China, in 1844-45-46," we learn that the system continues to this day in full force, in Thibet, as originally established, and the exact similarity of the whole system in Thibet with the religion of modern Rome is truly striking. The images of the woman and child, the queen of heaven and her son, the monks and nuns, the dresses and the priests, the confessional, the doctrine of purgatory and the merit of mens' works, together with the absence of anything like truth on the subject of the atonement, justification, and the salvation of sinners, proclaim aloud the identity of the religion of Thibet with the religion of modern Rome.

But to return to Babylon. In this mystical brotherhood there were distinct classes: to the first, the literal meaning; and to the second, the mystic sense of the religion was communicated. In the one class, the queen of heaven was the chief object of worship as the incarnation of the divine Spirit, but in the other, the initiated were taught that Jehovah, the Creator of the world, was a cruel tyrant, hating human happiness, that the prince of the power of the air, Satan, who was the true God taking compassion on mankind, had sent Assarac, or Tammuz, the son of the queen of heaven, who was in reality Satan's son, to be man's deliverer from the power of Jehovah, that he would free all those who worshipped him and his mother from the bondage of the body in which man's spirit had been imprisoned by Jehovah, the Creator; that Assarac would again become incarnate for final victory, and that his worshippers should dwell with him forever in disembodied felicity. This creed is held in Assyria, now called Koordistan, to this day. The initiatory rite, in this system, was immersion in water, after which, the priest made the person pronounce a formula, renouncing his nationality, and devoting himself entirely to the queen of heaven; after which he marked his forehead in mystic characters, with a mixture of salt, spittle, and water. The individual was then placed under an instructor, to whom he confessed his every thought, and when pronounced worthy by his teacher, he was admitted to the interior or higher class, and made acquainted with the mysteries of the system. He was then sprinkled with holy water, and presented with a cake called "mola," and it is very remarkable that the same name, "mola," is now applied in Italy to the wafer used in the mass. This cake he ate in honor of the queen of heaven, and swore at the same time to be faithful to her. These cakes are spoken of in Holy Scripture, by Jeremiah vii., 18, "the women knead their dough, to make cakes to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings to other gods, that they may provoke me to anger." When warned by the prophet concerning their apostasy from Jehovah, we find the women of Israel replying, though Jerusalem was destroyed, and the land an astonishment and curse at that time, for this very abomination: Jeremiah xliv., 16-19, "As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee. But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto her, as we have done, we and our fathers, our kings, and our princes, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem: for then had we plenty of victuals, and were well, and saw no evil. But since we left off to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto her, we have wanted all things, and have been consumed by the sword and by the famine. And when we burned incense to the queen of heaven, and poured out drink offerings unto her, did we make her cakes to worship her, and pour out drink offerings unto her, without our men?" i. e., without the approval of our husbands. No, all were agreed. Hence we see how firmly rooted was the apostasy in their hearts, and how this Babylonish system had usurped the place of truth in that special nation which God had separated from all other people to witness for himself in the earth; and we learn the true cause of God's righteous indignation against them. The initiated were required to keep three feasts in honor of the goddess; the feast of her birth, corresponding with the 25th of March, Lady-day; the feast of her assumption into heaven, and re-union with the deity on the 8th of September; and the feast of her son's birth on the 25th of December.

This is a brief outline of the system by which ancient Babylon was distinguished; spiritually considered, that is in reference to Him who is a Spirit, and requireth men to "worship him in spirit and in truth," who declares of the apostate heathen, by Paul, in the Epistle to the Romans, i., 19, "That which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath shewed it unto them; so that they are without excuse; because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened." My object is not only to show that the system of religion by which modern Rome is distinguished in this day is identically the same with the ancient Babylonish apostasy from the revealed will of God, but I hope clearly to prove that an actual union was effected in the fourth century after Christ, between the offices of the Bishop of Rome and the High Priest or Pontiff of the Babylonish mysteries, between apostate Christianity and the religion of Ashtaroth; so that, thenceforth the Roman Pontiff, instead of being the apostolic successor of St. Peter, as he professes to be, is the high priest of Astarte or Ashtaroth, of Assarac or Tammuz. Then if we thus dispel the halo which exists to so many eyes around Rome and her system, we shall settle the question. While the worship of the queen of heaven spread far and wide in Asia, Egypt and Arabia, it seems to have made no way among the barbarious tribes of the north, who, pouring down upon Assyria in the year 560 B. C. destroyed Ninevah and occupied Babylon. The Chaldeans found their religion at first tolerated and patronized, but subsequently opposed by the conquerors. Various rebellions followed, till at length the city was taken and sacked, and the inhabitants slaughtered by Xerxes in the year 487 B. C. Xerxes removed the capital to Shushan, in Persia, and while the soldier fled to Thibet, the priesthood of the queen of heaven sought refuge in Pergamos, and finally established themselves there, making it the centre of their system, as Col. Chesney shows in his very able and interesting work. Those who are well acquainted with the Bible will not fail to remember the remark made by the Holy Spirit, upon this city, "I know where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is." "He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear what the Spirit says unto the churches." Pergamos was the head-quarters of this great apostasy in St. John's day.

We now proceed to trace the actual connection between the Babylonish system and Rome. When the Etrurians emigrated into Italy from Lydia, they brought with them a religion and rites corresponding with the Chaldee mysteries, as is clearly shown by their celebrated monuments. Their images of the queen of heaven perfectly agree with the early representations of the Romish Madonna, both in figure and in costume, and several of the old Etrurian images are worshipped at this day as Madonnas. This people at a very early period after their arrival, had set up in Etruria a Pontifex Maximus, or supreme pontiff, who with them was above all law, and exercised a veto on all proposed laws and measures which he considered displeasing to the Deity. He was head of the priesthood, and had the power of life and death over them. From the time of Numa, the Romans (Rome being in Etruria,) had accepted the supreme pontiff as their civil chief. Julius Cæsar, the first emperor, was made supreme pontiff on the death of Metellus, having been prieviously made priest of Jupiter at the age of sixteen, and becoming heir to all the rights, powers and titles of Attalus the Pontiff, King of Pergamos, who had made Rome his heir by will, the Roman Emperor became also the head of the Babylonian priesthood, the supreme pontiff of the queen of heaven.

In the year 218 A. D., the Roman army quartered in Syria, having rebelled against Macrinus for having kept them encamped during the whole winter, unanimously elected Emperor Heliogabalus, the high priest of Cybele, at Hierapolis. He was shortly afterward chosen supreme pontiff by the Romans, and thus did all the western branches of the Babylonian apostasy centre in the Roman Emperor. The first act of the new Emperor Heliogabalus (one of the greatest monsters that ever disgraced humanity,) was to declare himself a fresh incarnation of Assarac, and to proclaim himself, and his mother the queen of heaven, the alone objects of worship. He proceeded to the capital with the image of the goddess, and henceforth the Assyrian Queen, or Babylonian harlot Astarte, took the position at Rome which had previously been occupied by Jupiter. The Emperor of Rome continued to exercise the office of supreme pontiff till the year 376, when the Emperor Gratian refused to attire himself in pontifical vestments. "He justly observed," says Milner, "that as the whole nature of the office was idolatrous, it became not a christian to assume it," and he not only declined to perform the duties of the office himself, but refused to appoint even a deputy, as his predecessor, Valentinian, had done.

Religious matters soon became so disorganized that it was found absolutely necessary to elect some one to fill the office from among the people. Two individuals were recommended to the Emperor for the office of supreme pontiff: Symmachus, the prince of the senate, who had previously acted as deputy for Valentinian; and St. Damascus, then the so-called christian Bishop of Rome. This Damascus had been put forward in 366 for the Bishopric of Rome, by the Assyrian and Egyptian monks of Mount Carmel, a college of Babylonian worship, originally founded by the priests of Jezebel, long before the birth of Christ, and in actual existence at this day as a religious house in connection with Rome. His election was distinguished by the slaughter of three hundred faithful chrtstians who opposed the measure. In the year 378 this same Damascus was declared Pontifex Maximus or supreme pontiff, a title which the Pope of Rome retains to this hour. The imperial edict, conferring the pontificate is to be found in the Appendix to the Code of the Emperor Theodosius, in which it is declared that the new high priest of religion should be sole judge of religious matters, and that sacred things shall only be decided by priests. This man, Damascus, now united in himself the office of a christian Bishop, and all the rites, titles, and power of the high priesthood of Astarte, the queen of heaven, the Babylonian harlot. Satan had triumphed, the church which could not be overthrown had now been successfully corrupted. A grand alliance was now formed. All were amalgamated, and henceforth there need be no disunion. Men had only to worship the queen of heaven under the name of Mary, and to call her child by the name of Jesus. The priests of the goddess had long been preparing the people for this measure, and had loudly proclaimed that the third person in the Holy Trinity, once revealed in Astarte, had again become incarnate in the Virgin Mary, and so widely had these views obtained, that at the Council of Nice, held some years previously, under Constantine, in the year 325, the Melchite portion of the council maintained that the three persons in the Trinity were the Father, the Virgin Mary, and their Son. At this council, the faithful remnant of christian men, anxious to secure the recognition of the Godhead of the Lord Jesus Christ, in opposition to the Arian, refrained from attacking the Melchite section, who held the Virgin to be divine, and their success was only secured by accepting the aid of such fearless allies.

We cannot describe the lamentable results which followed such a confederacy better than by quoting Dr. Newman's own words, in his Essay on Developement: "The Arian question opened a controversy it did not settle. It discovered a new sphere, if we may so speak, to the worlds of light to which the church had not yet assigned its inhabitant. Then there was a wonder in heaven! a throne was seen far above all created powers, mediatorial, intercessory, a title, a crown bright as the morning star—a glory issuing from the eternal throne—robes pure as the heavens, and a sceptre over all. And who was the predestinated heir of this majesty? Who was that wisdom, and what was her name? The mother of love, and fear, and hope, exalted like a palm-tree in Engeddi, and a rose-plant in Jericho, created from the beginning before the world, in God's councils, and in Jerusalem was her power! The vision was found in the Apocalypse, a woman clothed with the sun, and with the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars. The votaries of Mary do not exceed the true faith, unless the blasphemers of her Son come up to it. The church of Rome is not idolatrous unless Arianism is orthodoxy." (p. 403.) Truly did the beloved disciple say —"Even now there are many anti-christs, whereby we know that it is the last time." Truly did the Apostle Paul write of his day —"The mystery of iniquity doth already work." There was no new scheme, but the old apostasy still at work.

"THREE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS."

One Thousand Dollars Wanted. FOR WHAT?

To put into circulation within the next three months Ten Thousand each of the following works:

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE.

THE JUDGMENT:

TIME AND MANNER OF IT.

AND

LIFE FROM THE DEAD:

OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN.

These three documents are for the campaign before us, which is not to be ended till our King is crowned and has the kingdoms of this world subjected to his reign on David's throne. Two thousand each of the above two first-named documents have been printed, and three thousand of the last, and a great portion of them are already in circulation; but there is a wish to increase it to ten thousand each by the next anniversary of the LIFE AND ADVENT UNION. We believe it can be done. It is true, a few have generally had such work to do; but "many hands make light work." If each of our subscribers could pay, or collect one dollar for this object, the full amount and several hundred dollars over would be had to carry on the work.

Who says, I WILL DO IT? You can have all your money back again in the documents, if you wish it.

The three works can be had for 14 cents, including the postage; or, 100 of each for $12, including postage, or for $10 when sent by express or taken at our office.

THE RESURRECTION OF THE WICKED.—No. 6.

BY DR. N. FIELD.

(1.) The Pharisees believed in the resurrection both of the just and of the unjust. So says Paul. This fact will be conceded by the non-resurrectionists. Whence, then, did they derive their ideas on that subject? They did not believe the teachings of Jesus, and were not dependent on him for their religious faith. They held a resurrection of the wicked centuries before the Christian era. From what source, then, did they get their knowledge of a future resurrection? Evidently from the Old Testament scriptures. And as Daniel is the only Old Testament writer that distinctly declares the resurrection of the unjust, it is morally certain that they must have believed that he taught the doctrine.

Hence, unless it can be shown that Dan. xii., 2, is spurious or an entirely incorrect rendering of the Hebrew, it follows, incontrovertibly, that in the judgment of the most learned and popular sect of the Jewish nation, the text in question affirms the resurrection of the unjust. No criticism can change or in any wise modify its meaning. The fact is stated clearly and explicitly, that when Christ stands up in his glorious power, there shall be a waking up of many that sleep in the dust of the earth to opposite destinies. It is the truth declared and not the manner of telling it that challenges our faith. If one class is not really waked up neither is the other; for it is predicated of both classes, comprehended in the word many, that they do awake. Such must be the understanding of this text if it is to be construed literally and according to the grammatical structure of the language.

It will not do to decide so important a question as the one involved in the text by our feelings, or our ideas of necessity. We cannot safely judge God by ourselves. His ways are not our ways, and his thoughts are not our thoughts. He may have reasons for raising from the dead a bloody Manasseh or an idolatrous Ahab, of which we know nothing.

2. A Felix trembled when Paul reasoned of a judgment to come. If it were not intended that he should come to judgment after death why should he tremble? On the hypothesis that death ends his being forever, it would seem to be folly to talk to him about a judgment to come. Death is the judgment and the execution of all the punishment that will ever be inflicted on wicked rulers. Therefore, the "judgment to come" is simply to die a natural death!

3. The apostle Paul endorsed the doctrine of the Pharisees respecting the resurrection; and of course believed that the Old Testament scriptures taught the resurrection of the unjust. He was a Pharisee and understood well what they believed on the subject. He taught just what they allowed to be true in reference to the resurrection, and therefore, in his opinion they had no right to persecute him. By identifying himself with the Pharisees and avowing his faith in the doctrine that distinguished them from the Sadducees, he conciliated some of his enemies and brought about a division among them.

This is an important incident in Paul's history, as it establishes beyond all doubt his faith in the "resurrection both of the just and unjust."

RESPONSE TO DR. FIELD.

"(1.)" Our Br. is in a little too much of a hurry to prove what Paul says. We must be permitted to call in question the statement that Paul said "the Pharisees believed in the resurrection both of the just and the unjust." That some of the Jews did hold such a view, we admit; but that the Pharisees, as a body believed it, remains to be proved. This sect had no existence till after the Babylonish captivity. "Pride and hypocrisy were their prominent characteristics," says Dr. Eadie in his Encyclopedia. Josephus, Antiq. III., Book 18, Sec. 3, says:

"They believe that souls have an immortal vigor in them, and that under the earth there will be rewards or punishments, according as they have lived virtuously or viciously in this life; and the latter are to be detained in an everlasting prison, but that the former shall have power to revive and live again."

It is thus seen that some Pharisees believed in the immortality of the soul, but denied the re-investment, with a body, of the wicked souls. The foundation error of the Pharisees consisted in the idea of inherent immortality. No evidence appears that any such sentiment existed among the Jews till this sect arose after the captivity in Babylon.

Their doctrine virtually denied the resurrection; for they ascribe the "power to revive and live again," not to Christ, but to the "immortal vigor of souls." Whether they should have the privilege to exercise this power depended on the life they had lived here.

We see, then, Dr. Field's affirmation of the belief of the Pharisees lacks proof, and Paul never did say that sect believed in the resurrection of the unjust. We are glad Dr. F. has said, "Daniel is the only Old Testament writer that distinctly declares the resurrection of the unjust." But his reliance on Dan. xii., 2, we have shown in our last response, is entirely without foundation; and as he has reiterated his former assertion, without noticing our response, we pass his renewed affirmation as a baseless assumption. The word "of" in that text, is too insignificant for him to notice, only to say, in fact, that it has no meaning. Let the doctor have the glory, if it be a glory, of putting down such Hebrew scholars as Professors Whiting, Bush, and others, cited in our response to his previous article, by his mere affirmation. It may satisfy his own mind, but it will have no weight with our readers.

"(2.)" Paul said nothing to Felix about a judgment to come after death." Felix heard Paul "concerning the faith in Christ; and concerning his justification, and dominion, and future judgment." So reads Penn's New Testament; and that is clearly the sense of the text. "The faith in Christ" related to the fact, first, of his justification by the Father, in that he raised up Christ from the dead. Second, that this anointed Jesus was appointed of God to have dominion on David's throne; consequently over the province where Felix now was governor; and third, Jesus as the Christ, the anointed King, would execute judgment, or rule in righteousness, and not allow justice to be turned away by bribery, as the rulers of this world do, and as Felix was willing to do, for, "He hoped that money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him." Paul taught him that no bribery would avail under the dominion of Jesus, and nothing but truth, righteousness, and justice would avail then. Paul did not tell Felix he would die and be judged after that; but that God had determined to have a righteous government in the earth, and had demonstrated who that King was to be, by his justification unto life from the dead, after the Roman government—of which Felix was a part—had put Jesus to death. Supposing Paul's statement might be true, Felix trembled in view of it; doubtless concluding the event was near; for Paul did not preach the time was far off. Whether Felix would "die a natural death" was not revealed to him. If Christ was actually coming to reign, Felix would naturally conclude it was not likely to fare very well with him; and he was made to tremble—not in view of a distant, far off future life, but in view of such a government as Paul described, as probably near. Such we regard as the true state of this case. At any rate, there is not a word said of "a judgment to come after death."

"(3.)" Paul did not "indorse the doctrine of the Pharisees respecting the resurrection." Their doctrine was that of an immortal soul re-invested with a body—a transmigration of souls into other bodies. In name, they called it a "resurrection;" but in fact, it was no such thing: and Paul never indorsed their views; their doctrine Jesus warned his followers to "beware of." See Matt., xvi., 6, 11, 12. Paul, in Acts xxiii., 6, says "I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee." This fact relates to his birth and education. He then states another fact, which is, that he was still in agreement with them as to the fact of a resurrection; nothing more. This fact was against the Sadducees and so much gain to the Pharisees, who hated most heartily the Sadducees; and Paul's end was accomplished by making their division an open rupture, so turning their counsel against him to a contention among themselves. It was the fact of a resurrection that he "indorsed;" nothing more.

But suppose we were to admit Paul indorsed their doctrine; then he believed in the immortal soul. How does that suit Br. Field? Has he returned to a doctrine he has long since renounced? But that is not all; the Pharisees held, as we have seen by Josephus, that wicked souls would not be re-invested with bodies; i. e., would not have a resurrection; so, out of Dr. Field's own mouth we prove Paul did not believe in the resurrection of the wicked dead: and it is evident he did not, because he never once speaks of their being raised from the dead, and says that he himself labored and suffered, if by any means he might attain unto the resurrection of the dead. Phil. iii., 8–11. According to Dr. F., Paul was sure of a resurrection in any event, whether he labored and suffered or not. But Paul teaches the resurrection is a privilege that must be labored for, or not attained.

The Sadducees denied that there was any resurrection, of any body; and hence rejected Paul's doctrine wholly: the Pharisees, in name, held to the doctrine of the resurrection of the virtuous; and Paul, finding himself beset by both classes at once, ready to destroy him, skilfully divided them by avowing himself a Pharisee as to the fact of a resurrection. This was sufficient for his purpose. To suppose Paul avowed himself a Pharisee in all their peculiar notions of a resurrection, is to suppose he believed in the grandest absurdities in respect to man's nature and destiny. We do not admit that "he taught just what they believed on the subject of the resurrection;" nor can we believe that Dr. Field will re-affirm that declaration after reflecting on the facts we have presented.

A SYLLOGISM.

IF the wages, or just desert of sin, is death, it follows that any punishment which vastly exceeds this is unjust.

A revival into life, from death, to torment awhile and kill again "vastly exceeds death:"

Therefore, such revival, torment and killing again is unjust.

If the punishment of a temporary life from the dead, to be spent in agonizing torments, and followed by dying a second time, is not more than what sin justly deserves, it follows, unavoidably, that death, which will terminate all consciousness, is not the just desert of sin: it falls short of what justice demands, and the divine testimony consequently falls. "Let God be true and every man a liar," that opposes his testimony.

The proposition that the "wages of sin is death," plainly imports and teaches that the cessation of the sinner's life, or conscious existence, is a punishment perfectly satisfactory to divine justice, and adequately honors the violated law of God. It follows, therefore, that the horrible dogma of a revival of them, when dead, to life, or into a conscious existence in agonizing torments is a libel on the just God, as it is on the Father of mercies.

We long ago saw that the view we maintain of "No life out of Christ," and "The wages of sin is death," must lead to a plain and open confession, ultimately, that the wicked dead will never live again. Death is their fate: not dying, whether once or twice, nor any torments that may precede that dying, but to be dead, to live no more—death to have unbroken dominion over them. Such dominion it had not over Christ, and it shall not have over any member of his body, the true believers in him; all others are "holden with the cords of their sins" under death's dominion, eternally irrevocable.

ACTS xxiv., 15.

THIS text is supposed to justify the idea that Paul taught the resurrection of both the just and the unjust; and it is asked, What does the term "also" import but that he allowed such a resurrection? This term, in our mind, is unavailing. The original word is kai, and is translated variously in the New Testament: its first sense is that of and; it has the sense of even, moreover, beside, further, etc. Even or moreover is quite as likely to be the apostle's meaning as "also."

Paul was a believer in the resurrection of Christ and of "the dead in Christ;" for preaching this doctrine he was accused of the Jews themselves; not because they were unbelievers in a resurrection of some sort; but they disliked the doctrine of Christ raised from the dead, and of life from the dead only through him. This they called "heresy," (v. 14), as some do now. Paul professes that in his course of life and preaching he adheres to, and worships the God of the fathers, "believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets." Now, the "law" never speaks of a future life for the wicked, or of their revival from death, and hence Paul did not "allow" it, but some of his accusers did; and yet these same persons charged Paul with "heresy" for preaching a resurrection less extensive than that which they allowed, or admitted—for so the original may be translated; they admitted a resurrection "both of the just and the unjust," which was more than was ever "written in the law or prophets:" holy men of old, who "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," gave utterance to no such sentiments. Now, saith Paul, "I believe all things written in the law and in the prophets: and have hope toward God:"— hope of what? Of that which was common to all men? Nay, verily, as his language, Phil, iii., 11, clearly shows—"If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Why this implied doubt, if the resurrection of all men was a settled fact, which the apostle "allowed?" Could he fail of that which was certain to all? Paul, then, did not allow the resurrection was universal; but some of his accusers did admit such a resurrection, and yet condemned Paul as guilty of "heresy" for preaching the resurrection of "hope" by Jesus Christ.

Such are the facts in the case; and Paul rebukes his accusers for their hypocrisy in condemning him for preaching the resurrection, "which they themselves moreover allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." With such an admission on their part, why do they condemn him for proclaiming the resurrection of Christ, and of all that fall asleep in Christ? That such, and no other, was Paul's proclamation concerning the resurrection of the dead, is clear from Phil. iii., 11; 1 Thess. iv., 13–18; and the entire chapter of 1 Corth. xv. "If Paul allowed that there shall be a resurrection both of the just and the unjust," we wish our opposers to find where he taught such doctrine, and not rest it on a doubtful text. Where did he ever say, in all his preaching or epistles, the wicked dead shall live again? or shall be raised from the dead? We say again, "Paul never said any such thing." Such a plain, outspoken preacher as Paul did something more than speak doubtfully; he stated distinctly the grand fact of the resurrection of "the dead in Christ." If the awful doctrine of the wicked dead made alive, tormented, and killed again were true, we may depend Paul would not have left his hearers, and those to whom he wrote, to infer it. The great apostle to the Gentiles was not such a man. When taking his final leave of the elders of the church of Ephesus, he saith, "I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have showed you, and taught you publicly, and from house to house, testifying both to the Jews and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." Acts xx., 20, 21. To what end was this faith in Christ? To the end that they might have the promise of Christ fulfilled unto them—"I will raise him up at the last day." John vi., 40. Repentance toward God and faith in Christ are essential to being raised up from the dead "at the last day;" and, "he that believeth not shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii., 36.

Paul, in writing to the Ephesian church, after he had taken his last personal leave of them, calls their attention especially to the resurrection of Christ, and to the fact that the same power that raised him from the dead, would quicken them "together with Christ:" that "through Jesus' blood we have the forgiveness of sins;" and he taught the Corinthians, if our sins are not forgiven, when we die, we "are perished." 1 Corth. xv., 17, 18. Here we rest the question of Paul's "allowing the revival of dead sinners into life. He never preached a penal resurrection: none such did he ever speak of.

"ANNIHILATION OF THE WICKED."

UNDER this head a writer in a Christian Advocate, among other things, says:

It is unscriptural. The Scriptures represent the whole race of man as under bondage to sin, and liable to everlasting punishment; and point to Christ as the Redeemer, who shall save them from their sins, and from the punishment due to them. The idea is nowhere conveyed in the Scriptures that redemption is designed to make man immortal. On the contrary, its object is expressly stated to be, to save from sin and from wrath to come. And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal. And the smoke of their torment ascendeth for ever and ever. Eternal punishment could not be more graphically described. B.

Here is a string of assumptions: we had like to have called it theological "jargon." It is much like most preaching to which the people listen in these days of fables. A text or two of Scripture is quoted without regard to the context or the general tenor of the Bible. "B." assumes that redemption was "not designed to make man immortal!" Was a greater theological blunder ever committed? Let him read 1 Cor. xv., 50–57. What is to be done at the "last trump?" "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," saith Paul. What then? "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." Without this there could none "inherit the kingdom of God." But through what process is this change wrought? "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii., 11. The quickening process is not by an immortal soul, but by the Spirit of God. "As the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will:" John v., 21. "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ;" 1 Cor. xv., 57. Victory over what? Not only over "sin," but over "death, mortality, and corruption;" all of which are embraced in the apostle's arguments. If "B." thinks he can escape from these facts by assuming that it is the body only that is made thus immortal, he will find himself at war with Paul. It was that which sinned that has the victory here spoken of. It is that which Paul calls "we," verses 51 and 52, and "us," verse 57. In other words, it is the men themselves, and not an insignificant "shell," that is the subject of discourse. But if it were the body only, "B.'s" position is false; for "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the gound," and "B." says, "Redemption is" not "designed to make man immortal." But it is man that goes to corruption, and at the resurrection puts on incorruption—"this mortal must put on immortality, not this mortal body must have put into it an immortal soul! No, such folly did not belong to the apostle's theology. He taught that "Redemption is designed to make man immortal," and that without such redemption man "cannot inherit the kingdom of God."

Now let "B." produce one text, in all the Bible, that saith man is immortal—in whole or in part—without the redemption by Christ Jesus. Can he do it? No, there is not one such text in the Book of God.

The punishment of the wicked is "eternal," and it is eternal "death," the "wages of sin," just as certain as the reward of the righteous is "life eternal;" the righteous are redeemed from death and eternally live; the wicked are punished with death and are eternally dead— cut off from life forever. Such is the clear testimony of the Bible. There is not one word in the Book of God that speaks of the immortality of wicked men, or of their being eternally tormented—not one. The text that "B." quoted in a mangled and garbled manner, from Rev. xiv., does not answer his purpose at all. It is doubtful if he could have told us where the text was found; for if he ever read it with the context, with any sort of attention, he would have seen it is a specific class of wicked men—and not all the wicked —that is there spoken of; and that it relates to the "seven last plagues," all of which are to be inflicted on men "upon the earth," and not after death, and in another world called "hell." "B.'s" logic on this point proves to be just like all other writers on his side of the question—mere assumptions—theological fables.

ORANGE SCOTT, founder of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in the United States, said, in 1846:

"The plainest principles of the gospel have slumbered for ages.

"The church is as deeply infected with a desire for worldly gain, as the world. At least, there is no perceptible difference. Professors of religion are emphatically worldly-minded.

"The church are making a god of this world.

"Most of the denominations of the present day might be called churches of the world, with more propriety than churches of Christ.

"The churches are so far gone from primitive Christianity that they need a fresh regeneration—a new kind of religion.

"They have gone over to the world, and have opposed what the world opposed.

"The world will never be converted by such a religion.

"Christians pray for the union of the Churches, but fight against it.

"The fact cannot be disguised that the ways of Zion mourn."

Such sentiments are worthy of him who uttered them. We knew O. SCOTT well. He never would, we are persuaded, had he lived, have taken ground against the great Life theme we have so long labored to promote. He gave us encouraging words at the outset, and wrote us afterward that he could "not come out against" us! He often said to others—"If you can refute Br. STORRS' arguments, do it—I cannot."

It is a solemn truth, if "the world" were to "be converted" it never could be done "by such a religion" as that which goes under the name of "orthodox" in these days. Thought is not to be crushed by the dictation of creeds. Thought—free—must and will reject the creedized notions of God and his government of the souls he has made. The churches must change their ground, or be swallowed up with the coming flood. Let them learn to give such representations of God and his government as shall commend itself to the understandings and consciences of intelligent beings. Will they do it?

WHICH WILL BE HEAVEN?

THE late Rev. Dr. Storrs, of Braintree, Mass., in an anniversary discourse before the American Home Missionary Society some years since, is reported to have said—

"Make up your minds and take hold of this enterprise with stronger hands and larger hearts. Heaven and earth shall unite in urging you onward. Millions of the heavenly hosts stretch out their hands to you, and millions of the lost raise up their voices, exhorting you to do that which shall save millions from coming to the place of torments in which they are!"

Dr. Jonathan Edwards said:

"The saints will not be sorry for the damned; it will cause no uneasiness or dissatisfaction to them; but on the contrary, when they see the sight it will occasion rejoicing, and excite them to joyful praises."

So, on the authority of learned Orthodox divines, we are to believe that the lost in hell are influenced by the most generous, humane, and divine (for what can be more divine than such imitation of him who came to save sinners?) emotions; while the saints in heaven rejoice and are happy in the possession and manifestation of feelings of unapproachable inhumanity and fiendishness.

Good brother! which place will be heaven, and which hell?

Such teaching as that in the foregoing extracts is well calculated to beget abhorrence of a religion that is supposed to sustain it. Nor can we wonder that men are made infidels when such blasphemous sentiments as that of Edwards is made to pass for Christian.

But where is the root of such blasphemies? It lies in the great father lie—"Ye shall not surely die." Jehovah has solemnly declared "The wages of sin is death; and expostulates with men, saying, "Why will ye die?" But self-styled "orthodoxy" affirms, death is not death; but merely, in the first place, a change of state from this life to another; and in the second place, a change from happiness to misery. Thus it virtually charges the God of truth with deception and falsehood—with saying one thing but meaning another and very different thing; and the root of this slander of God is in the doctrine that man has an immortal soul—a soul that cannot die. For such a doctrine there is not one text in the Bible. The Bible teaches man is mortal, corruptible, dying; and that life eternal can only be secured as a gift of God: which gift is to be bestowed only on those who come to Christ, heaven's appointed LIFE-GIVER, and by a conformity to the will of God, without which endless life would be a curse. Such a curse God has guarded against, by making the wages of sin to be death—cessation of life.

ANNIHILATION AND SUICIDE.

BR. GRANT:—One of the leading preachers in Buffalo has violently attacked our views, and one of his arguments, which I heard, against annihilation was, that it led to self-murder. He compared us to French atheists who believe in no hereafter for any of our race. As it is doubtful if any one ever commits suicide unless more or less deranged, I send the following article, to expose the absurdity of such reasoning wherever it may be used. A number of his members read the Crisis. This article was in the Bible Examiner eleven years ago, and so will be new to most of your readers. J. BLAIN.

THE THEOLOGICAL HELL.

The following article appeared some three or four years since, in the New York Morning Express. We insert it now to make a passing remark. The Express said:

The Boston correspondent of a city paper furnishes the following item, which is said to refer to the daughter of the Hon. Rufus Choate: "I learn that a very sad case of insanity occurred in this city but a short time since, and from a singular cause. The person deprived of reason is a young lady of great promise, of a very active and extraordinary mind, the youngest daughter of the most distinguished member of the Suffolk bar. She attended church not many Sundays ago at the Trinity in this city, and listened attentively to a sermon on the subject of Hell! The influence of the discourse so operated upon her mind as to produce insanity of such a type as to require the use of a straight-jacket and confinement in the hospital at Worcester. The parents are in the deepest sorrow in consequence of this sad event. It was thought by her medical attendants, some days since, that she would recover."

"Insanity" is the natural result—to a deeply reflective mind—of contemplating the theological hell, and a sincere belief of its existence. So natural is this result that SAURIN, in his sermon on "The Eternal Misery of Hell," gave utterance to the following language, in view of his own description:—

"I sink under the weight of this subject; and I declare, when I see my friends, my relations, the people of my charge—when I think that I, that you, that we are all threatened with these torments—when I see, in the lukewarmness of my devotions, in the languor of my love, in the faintness of my resolutions and designs, the least evidence, though it be only probable or presumptive, of my future misery, yet I find it a mortal poison, which diffuses itself into every period of my life, rendering society tiresome, nourishment insipid, pleasure disgustful, and life itself a cruel bitter—I cease to wonder that a fear of hell has made some melancholy, and others mad; that it has inclined some to expose themselves to a living martyrdom by fleeing from all commerce with the rest of mankind, and others to suffer the most violent and terrible torments."—See Am. Tract Society's Tract, No. 277.

Thus Mr. Saurin freely admits all that we charge upon the doctrine of "The Theological Hell." Is such a doctrine from God, our Maker? the God whose "tender mercies are over all his works?" From a Being of infinite perfections, who has plainly declared, "As I live, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked;" has the doctrine of such a hell, as that of eternal and unmitigated misery, proceeded? A Being of whom the beloved disciple saith, "God is love;" has he given existence to creatures, whom he foreknew—and foreknowing it, determined they should exist—has he, we ask, contrived and brought into his universe such a hell as that described by Mr. Saurin, and indorsed by the "American Tract Society," as well as all other theologians who have set up the claim of "Orthodoxy?" Believe it, ye who can! We can no more credit such blasphemy against God, our Maker, than we can believe the Pope is infallible, or that Moloch is the God that made us. Such a theological representation of God and his intentions towards sinners, is well fitted to bring on such a state of mind as that described by Mr. Saurin; but that state of mind is anything, rather than that which the gospel demands and inspires.

The Bible hell is an eternal loss of life, as the result of a refusal to harmonize with God, or as the "wages of sin." The gospel is the good news of life eternal to all such as harmonize with God, or who embrace God's "promise of life" in Christ, and return from their sins to his service. Any other hell than a total and irrecoverable loss of life—as the wages of sin—is not exhibited in the revelation God has given to men; and those who continue to preach a hell of unutterable and endless torture will find themselves responsible for all the insanity and madness resulting from such a misrepresentation of God's holy and loving character. Let the utterance of Bishop Newton find way to your mind, if the testimony of God himself is slighted by you. He says:

"God is love; and he would rather not have given life, than render that life a torment and curse to all eternity. Imagine a creature, nay, numberless creatures, produced out of nothing, delivered over to torments of endless ages, without the least hope or possibility of relaxation or redemption. Imagine it you may, but you can never seriously believe it, nor reconcile it to God and goodness. God could never make any creature whose end he foreknew would be misery everlasting."—Bishop Newton's Works, London, 1787, "On the Final Condition of Man," page 330, and on.

Bishop Newton looked for the final restoration of all men; but this arose from his belief in inherent immortality in man. His mind could not but reject the doctrine of endless sin and suffering; and believing man immortal, he was compelled to adopt universal restoration as his only escape from the Moloch God of the theological hell. We are not driven to his choice; because we know that no such doctrine as that of man's inherent immortality is anywhere found in the book of God; but that great gift is for the righteous alone, and bestowed through Christ, in the resurrection "at the last day." "The wages of sin is death"—(death from which there is no recovery and no revival into life.) Such is the Bible doctrine; and it commends itself as both just and rational, and will never drive men "mad" or make them "insane." "Life and death," is "set before" them, and God calls all to "choose life that they may live." If they refuse life, as a gift of God in Jesus Christ, they die, and that death is eternal. So we teach; and so we believe the Bible testifies.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR OF HERALD OF LIFE.—As will be seen, Eld. Blain sent the foregoing article of ours to the Crisis. His note, preceding it, states the reason of his wishing it to appear in that paper and in the Voice of the West. We are glad to see it in use in our exchanges, and hope it may be carefully read. Though written by us eleven years since, it expresses our views to-day on the subject.

AN ADVENT CONTROVERSY.

FOR some time past a controversy has been going on in the Advent Herald, Boston, Mass., between Josiah Litch and others in relation to the prophetic periods. Dr. Litch was one of the great champions in 1843-4 of the theory held by Wm. Miller and others that a day symbolized a year in the prophetic numbers, and that the Antichrist was in the past. He has now abandoned both those positions and believes the days are literal, and the Antichrist is in the future; but he meets with strong opposition from some of his former associates. We honor him for changing his ground if convinced his previous views were incorrect. He may be right in his present views; we do not affirm he is not. We have seen enough of the positiveness on these subjects to teach us caution.

A Br. Haskell, a few weeks since, made some strictures on Dr. Litch's views, relating to "The Empires, Signs, and Times;" to which Dr. Litch responds as follows:

1. "The philosophy" of Adventism. This I understand to be, that the obvious reading of the Bible interpreted by the same laws of language by which all other writings are interpreted, is the true standard of faith and duty. And that all theories are to be subjected to that standard, and stand or fall as they agree or disagree with its teachings. For one, I have not now, I never have had, and trust I never shall have an opinion which I was or am not willing to subject to it. In the preface to a book I published June, 1830, I said, "These are my views at present: but I say to God and man, What I know not, that teach thou me. And if convinced that I am in error on any point, I am as ready to retract as, if I can obtain no better light, I am to go forward with this."

And here I stand to-day.

Since that day, the passing of time has proved the views I then held on the prophetic periods, to be erroneous. Why should I still adhere to them? Has Bro. H. given me other and more reliable dates for the beginning and termination of those periods? He does not even pretend to have done it: but he says they may have no definite beginning. He exhorts us to hold on. Then let him give us something on the subject to hold on to.

Will he tell us what the ten horns of Daniel's fourth beast are? For they are to exist to the end, and "make war on the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them."—Rev. xvii. I ask again who are they? that we may hold on to them.

2. The signs. Can I hold on to the darkening of the sun in 1780, as a sign to me of the Lord's immediate coming, an event eighty eight years in the past? Advent philosophy was, that one generation would not pass from that, till all would be fulfilled. The generation we stretched to three score and ten years; and then said, if "by reason of strength they be four score years." But even here our philosophy has failed us by eight years. Then the philsophy is not sound.

But is the trouble with God's word? I say No, but with us. Then what does Christ mean? Doubtless, just what appears on the face of the prediction, according to the letter of it. So I look that just before our Lord's coming there will be set up "in the holy place," in Judea, as foretold by Daniel, an "abomination of desolation," when Christ's people who read will understand, that there shall be 1290 days from that point. That there will be for a short period, "great tribulation." And that "immediately after that tribulation" "the sun shall be darkened," etc., "and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven." And the great mass of the people who see the beginning will see the end of these signs and the Lord's coming. To me there is both sense and philosophy in this view. But if this is so, how do we know how near it is? To this I reply, I do not know. Does Bro. H.? If so, will he tell us? Let us suppose that the signs have come as he holds, and that the ten horns have appeared; and that the pope is the little horn. Admit all this: Have the time, times and a half been fulfilled? If so when? If not where do they begin and end? Clearly he cannot tell. Then what rule has he any more than I have?

But I have before me tangible events foretold by the phrophet, Christ and the apostles, for which I look as the immediate forerunners of the Lord's coming. Has he? If not he has a less positive rule than I.

I have the four empires, with their course run, and the fourth on the point of falling.

I have "this gospel of the kingdom" being "preached in all the world for a witness to all nations."

I have before me the fact that many are departing from the faith, seduced by evil spirits and teaching devils.

I have every appearance of the fall of Turkey, and the speedy reconstruction of the Macedonian empire.

I have the great fact of the universal emancipation of the Jews; an evidence that the times of the Gentiles are near their close.

I have the 6000 years of the world's age near their end.

But Bro. H. says, there is sweetness in looking for Christ, none in looking for antichrist.

Did not Christ and the apostles know as much as that when they gave utterance to the predictions of his coming? How could Christ be so cruel as to tell them, you must watch for me constantly; but before I come, there will be false Christs and false prophets? There will be great tribulation such as never was before. They shall lay their hands on you and kill you. There was no sweetness in that; but even Bro. H. will admit that it was to be looked for.

There was no "sweetness," in Paul's saying, there must "come a falling away first and that man of sin be revealed." 2 Thess. ii. But he wrote it nevertheless. Then again there were the terrible scenes of Apocalypse to be fulfilled, was there sweetness in them? I marvel that my brother should use such an argument, in the face of all that was foretold of the sorrows of earth before the Lord's coming. But I will not call it "hypercritical," for I do not think it savors of brotherly kindness. If his arguments are unsound, in meekness and charity, I will expose their fallacy: and trust he will do the same with mine. But in conclusion: I must say, that I am more and more persuaded that the guilt of "generalizing" is in the body.

ANCIENT AND MODERN SAMARIA.

THE city of Samaria, situated near the middle of Palestine, was built by Omri, king of Israel, on a mountain or hill of the same name, about B. C. 925, and continued for nearly two centuries to be the capital of the Ten Tribes. All "travellers agree that it would be difficult to find in the whole land a situation of equal strength, fertility and beauty combined." "Carleton," writing to the Boston Journal, March 3, 1868, says:

"This hill, at that time, was owned by a man named Shemer, and there was no lovelier homestead in all Palestine. Its beautiful situation, its sea view on the west, the deep blue of the Mediterranean, the greenness of the Sharon plain, the succession of low hills and fertile vales, the magnificent amphitheatre of mountains around the hill—an amphitheatre seven or eight miles in diameter, this verdant hill in the centre—this grand combination of beauties caught the eye of Omri and determined him to make it the new capital of the kingdom, and all the more inasmuch as the royal palace at Tirzah was a heap of blackened ruins. We do not know how many acres there were in Shemer's farm, but we know the price paid for it—two talents of silver—about $4,500. Whether it was stipulated on the part of Shemer that the city should bear his name, we are not informed, but it has come down to us in the word Samaria, a name given not only to the city, but also to a section of the country 900 years later, when the Romans were masters of the land."

After glancing at some of the more prominent events connected with this "city set upon a hill," of which the Scriptures speak, he adds his testimony to the literal fulfilment of the prophecies concerning it. He says, under the head of

PROPHECY AND HISTORY.

"The modern village of Sebustich is on the eastern slope of the hill. It contains about 60 houses and 400 inhabitants. As we pass through the narrow alleys we see that the houses are built of the ancient stones of Samaria—cornice, frieze, Corinthian capital—blocks of purest marble, of elaborate workmanship, once adorning the temples and royal palaces, are now of no more account than common stones, untouched by the workman's hammer.

"But there is enough of ancient architecture remaining to excite the wonder and admiration of the beholder. From the modern village on the eastern slope to the great western gateway—a distance of 3,000 feet—runs the grand colonnade—two ranges of columns—shafts 16 feet in length, 2 in diameter—sixty or more standing, others half buried in the earth, some broken, a few as perfect, almost, as in the palmiest days of Samaria. Almost upon the apex of the hill are loftier columns—the remains of a magnificent temple. In the valley below us the ruins of a still greater edifice—a building 200 feet wide, 580 long. When the structure was complete, 170 columns stood in place, but they are all fallen except 15. Old olive trees wave their branches where Ahab and Jezebel held royal court. Turn the sod beneath your feet and you behold broken pottery and ashes. The ruins of the past make fertile soil. Sheep and goats find rich pasturage among these fallen columns. Here history and prophecy have a wonderful contact. Twenty-six centuries ago, when Samaria was the capital of the kingdom, a man named Micah wrote the following sentence; 'I will make Samaria as a heap of the field and as plantings of a vineyard; I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley.'

"On the southern slope, between the columns of the great colonnade the Arabs of the village have planted their grape vines, and next August you may pluck the purpling fruit where Ahab and Jezebel once reigned. In the valley below us lie the beautiful stones of the ancient temple, and the hill is nothing but a heap. The shall be of twenty-six hundred years ago is the fact of to-day."

THE LIFE AND ADVENT MISSION TENT.

THIS tent was pitched near Dover, N. J. on Wednesday, June 17, by Brethren Wolcott and Bishop, the pioneers in this good work. This being the busy season among farmers (their work having been kept back by the excessive rain) the attendance at first was rather slim. On Friday night, however, a goodly number (about 125) came out to hear. Saturday was a beautiful day. I left New York at 4 P. M., and arrived in Dover at 6 o'clock and found that the attendance had been small. In the evening there was quite a gathering of the people, to whom we preached on the coming and kingdom of our Lord, urging an immediate preparation for that glorious event. During the night we had rain. Sunday, the great day of the feast, may be set down as a rainy day; yet so gentle was the rain, and that at intervals only, that nobody seemed to care for it. The congregation in the morning was not large, but listened with the greatest attention to Br. Wolcott, who preached on the glorious hope, the appearing of the great God and our Saviour, Jesus Christ. This Br. is awake to the importance of this great work; his loins are girded about with truth and his lamp burns brightly; a man of means, and remembering the words of Jesus, "How hardly shall a rich man enter the kingdom of heaven," knowing that he must make a greater effort than the poor man, he has nobly stripped for the race; and, thank God, he has a bright prospect of winning the prize. He purchased a tent last year and procured the services of Br. Wendell. This year Br. Bishop has become his true yoke-fellow. He has left the comforts of home, and the society of a loving family, and is travelling over hill and valley to seek a bride for his Master. Brethren, the work is great; the expense is also great. Where, O where are our wealthy Advent brethren who ought to be standing shoulder to shoulder with our dear brother? If they cannot give their time, ought they not at least to lend a helping hand to forward this blessed cause? Br. Wolcott is spending hundreds of dollars beside his time in this work. Will not others who are able, help in this matter? We are looking for the soon coming of our Lord from heaven. How are we living in view of such an event? Do we deny ourselves any luxury that we may apply more to help on the cause of truth and to save dying men? Are we adding to our worldly possessions, and failing to lay up a good store against that day? Are we the stewards of God, or our own? Let us all come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

Br. Wolcott is a pattern in this matter. Let us learn (as he has learned), to the joy of our souls, that there is a blessing in it. But to return to our tent-meeting. We followed Br. Wolcott in the morning and spoke from the text, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," and endeavored to show that they were flesh only: that the popular notion that man gets two natures at his first birth—a fleshly and a spiritual nature—that one can survive the dissolution of the other, is an error of the first magnitude. We proved that Jesus was born twice, and that we must be born again, or remain eternally in the grave. In the afternoon the large tent was about two-thirds full; also many were seated outside in the lovely grove. Br. Bishop preached a most able discourse from the words, "God is not the God of the dead"—the eternally dead. But he is the God of Abraham, etc., therefore, Abraham will live again. The evening was dark and threatening, but to our surprise we had as large a congregation as in the afternoon. The people seemed anxious to hear, and we have reason to hope that a lasting impression has made in that community. A meeting was appointed for Monday evening, after which the tent will be struck, and probably pitched in Hackettstown, N. J. We are much indebted to Br. and Sister Chase for their kind hospitality and good cheer. May the Lord reward them at the resurrection of the just.

WILLET H. HANFORD.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM MRS. R. W. PIERCE.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., June, 1868.

BR. STORRS: It has been some time since I have written you, but have not forgotten you, or our dear paper, by any means. It is the only bit of meat I get, (aside from my Bible) in the course of the week; the rest of my diet is mostly water. I go to church, but am not fed; and I think it is so with most of those that go to church now-a-days. I don't know but I am behind the times, because I can't believe the church is to be the medium by which the world is to be converted; but as the church and the world meet, now, I think the world is doing by far the greatest missionary work of the two. O, why cannot poor dying man see that it is Life he needs, and that is the glad tidings, that Christ has told us about; but they would not come to him that they might have life: for he only was the way, the truth, and the life. So plain and simple, that he that runneth may read (or understand). I do thank our dear heavenly Father that he has led me to believe the words of Christ, when he said, He that believes in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and he that is alive, and believes shall never die. Yes, Lord, I do believe.

I was talking with a lady, the other day, on this blessed theme, and she said, with tears in her eyes, If this is truth I want to know it; for it seems more like God, who is love. O, that there was more hungering and thirsting for the right.

Mr. Love said, in one of his sermons, that when a man died there was nothing gone from his body as we could see; but still he was dead. He thought when the soul left the body, that was what caused death—that was death. I wanted to ask him, if a beast didn't die just like a man? we could not see that there was anything gone; but still it was dead. O what reasoning for a man that ought to know better. But his hearers swallowed it down without asking whether it is the word of God, or vain philosophy and the tradition of men. May God guide us into all truth; and he will if we desire to know it with our whole hearts.

Enclosed you will find $5 to complete my pledge, and $5 more that you may credit to a "Friend of the truth." Use it to publish your tracts.

FROM ELD. J. LEWIS.

ILL., June 10, 1868.

BR. STORRS: This day I am 69 years old, and feel to praise our heavenly Father for his unbounded love and long suffering forbearance toward a poor worm of the dust like unworthy me. Truly, the Lord is good, and by his assisting grace I am more than ever determined to spend and be spent in the altogether glorious cause. We have left Mode with the intention of travelling and preaching, not where we can get the most "greenbacks," but where the most good can be accomplished in the name of Jesus, and we want plenty of seed to sow as we pass along from place to place. Wish we had a lot on the Judgment—and Questions on Immortality, but money here is scarce, and will be until after harvest. But the old Gentile world (age) is soon to pass away, and we want to be found at our post when the Master comes to give the reward to his servants. Please send to Shelbyville, until further notice. Let those who write do the same. Pray for me.

FROM GEO. L. HART.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN, June 18, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Inclosed please find two dollars, for which you may send me some tracts. I am striving to let the light shine a little, occasionally speaking to such as will hear the words of eternal life as I understand them. I have never taken anything for tracts when I have given them out, unless offered. I have seen some good results. Thank the Lord, his Spirit has quickened the hearts of some. I hope to be able to stand at my post, though an unworthy one, yet I trust Jesus has my name enrolled. I love the blessed gospel, the offer of a Father's love to a disobedient race, the plan of reconciliation by which we may be his children; and if children, then heirs of eternal good. Yes, blessed be God, the fountain of joy is open, and Jesus is the goblet from which we are invited to drink. Not "drink, and swallow down, and be as though we had not been," but quaff a healing antidote for mortality. Yes, we drink, and the fire of a mortal system may do its best, but it goes no farther than to destroy the earthy. The heavenly is prepared; it renews it, it regenerates, it immortalizes, and at that last great day victory shall display in glory the power of the association. We in Christ receive all the benefit of the anointing; God in his mercy and love working in him to bring us to a goodly inheritance, a goodly life, a goodly society of saints redeemed, and to see him of whom we speak as he is glorified, the Lion of Judah, the King of the world.

FROM WM. B. DAVIS.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June 18, 1868.

O HOW sweet is life to all those who prize it, and yet all right to it was lost by transgression; but God so loved the world that he gave his Son to bring it back, for he came to save that which was lost, namely, life; and soon will come to give it to all them that have sought it through Christ, by obedience, in patience and well doing. O how thankful I am that Jesus died for me! Yes, and rose again triumphant over death and the grave, and has the keys to unlock the same. Praise God for this gift, through Christ, for poor, fallen man. Yes, for me, praise to him forevermore; and that he has erected a throne of grace, and made it accessible to us through and by Jesus Christ, and by faith in God's word, and in all his promises. O for faith in prayer, to ask in Jesus' name and receive. Praise God, all this is for me, and that I can have it all, and all who are his. O to live Godlike. Dear Father, help me to live godly here, that I may have eternal life at Christ's coming. He will not accept any only those who thus live to glorify him. Father, bless all thy children waiting for Christ's coming and kingdom. May they all be kept unto that day, and then be saved and crowned with life. Amen.

FROM ELD. J. PARRY.

SANDY HILL, N. Y., June 20, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I wish to correct a misunderstanding in the minds of some of your readers, that seems to imply that I am averse to the doctrine of the resurrection of the righteous, and the final destiny of the ungodly having a prominent place in the HERALD OF LIFE. How such an idea could originate from my remarks on the subject I cannot conceive. All that I said, to which you yourself agree, was, that "the final destiny of the wicked is not the gospel of the kingdom; and I would not lay too much stress upon it, to the exclusion of matters of more vital interest." This certainly could not be so constructed as to exclude that or any other subject, but to give it all due prominence, rightly dividing the word of truth. I have often thought the prejudice against the doctrine of the future age, as advocated by some of us, has a tendency to bias the minds of some against those who are so unfortunate as to indorse this unpopular view. May I hope that this is not the case in this instance, but that all of us who love our soon coming Lord, may be one with him and each other, in faith, hope, and love. Yours in the good hope.

THE "GENEROUS OFFER" REVIVED.

IT will be remembered that the Hon. O. S. HALSTED, last winter made the offer to send his work, "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE," to any subscriber of the HERALD OF LIFE for $2, and himself prepay the postage. The retail price of the work is $3. By accepting the judge's offer, you, in fact, get this invaluable work for a little more than half price; as the author gets but $1.68 after paying postage. The book is one to study; and with it your Bible will be more perfectly understood. The offer is a most generous one, and we hope many more will avail themselves of it. It is not restricted to your taking one copy at this rate. You can have any number you choose to send the money for. Send $2 for each copy; writing your own name and Post Office address plain, and the work will come to you free of any other expense.

Direct your communication to Hon. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad St., NEWARK, N. J.

TRUTH AND FREEDOM.

"He is the freeman whom the truth
Makes free; and all are slaves beside."—Cowper.

For the truth, then, let us battle,
Whatsoever fate betide,
Long the boast that we are freemen,
We have made and published wide.

He who has the truth and keeps it,
Keeps what not to him belongs,
But performs a selfish action,
That his fellow mortal wrongs.

He who seeks the truth, and trembles
At the dangers he must brave,
Is not fit to be a freeman;
He, at best, is but a slave.

He who hears the truth, and places
Its high promptings under ban,
Loud may boast of all that's manly,
But can never BE A MAN.

Friend, this simple lay who readest,
Be thou not like either them;
But to truth give utmost freedom,
And the tide it raises stem.

Bold in speech, and free in action,
Be forever! Time will test
Of the free-souled and the slavish
Which fulfils life's mission best.

Be thou like the noble Roman;
Scorn the threat that bids thee fear:
Speak! no matter what betide thee,
Let them strike, but bid them hear!

Be thou like the great apostle—
Be thou like heroic Paul;
If a free thought seeks expression,
Speak it boldly—speak it all!

Face thine enemies—accusers;
Scorn the prison, rack or rod;
And if thou hast Truth to utter,
SPEAK! and leave the rest to GOD!

A NEW ROBINSON CRUSOE.

IN the midst of the Indian Ocean there is a little island called Providence. It was called by that name by a ship's crew who were saved there after their vessel had been struck by lightning. It lies in the channel of Mozambique, and if any of my little readers have a map at hand, I hope they will search it out; for then I think they will be more interested in what I am now about to relate. You will find it not a great many days' sail from the Island of Bourbon.

In the year 1820, the captain of a merchant vessel made arrangements to sail from Bourbon to Providence, in order to get a load of the cions of cocoa trees, which grow there to an unusual size. At that time the building and sailing of vessels at Bourbon was by no means well understood. Little sailing boats did nearly all the business which was done, for they could go up over the reefs that surrounded the island, while the larger vessels could not do so. The only anchor which was used was a box filled with stone, and instead of having a large chain to hoist it and lower it, the anchor was held only by a rope made of the bark of trees.

Captain Cremasy had a favorable voyage from Bourbon to Providence. He sailed close up to a reef, and cast anchor. Taking one of the little boats connected with his vessel, he proceeded to the shore, and then sent the boat back again by the two sailors who had rowed him ashore. While he was walking about on the little island, and admiring the magnificent cocoa-nut trees, the rope that held the anchor broke, and the wind, which was blowing very heavily at the time, drifted his vessel off. In vain did the sailors try to control the ship and get it back again against the wind and tide, for their efforts were of no avail whatever. Night came on, and the captain lost sight of his vessel. He had nothing on except his light clothing, neither did he have any weapons of defence except a short pistol. The next day there was no sign of his vessel, and on the evening of that day he came to the conclusion that he was now upon a desert island, and that he must make the best use of his solitude that he could. By the aid of stones and fallen leaves he built himself a little cottage, and by opening a number of cocoa-nuts, and drinking the milk and eating the fruit, his hunger was satisfied. But he knew he could not live all the time on cocoa-nuts. He accordingly went to the centre of the island to see if he could not meet with some other kind of food. He discovered during that walk some wild cucumbers and wild beans and peas; all of which he thought himself very fortunate in finding. The birds were very numerous and quite tame. By one shot of his pistol he killed two pigeons.

It now occurred to him that people used to make fire by rubbing wood together. He made the same effort, but on the first day he did not succeed. Another morning came and he went down to the shore as soon as it was light to see if there was any trace of his vessel. But he saw nothing save sea and sky. He made a second effort to kindle fire, and this time he succeeded. He brought cocoa-nut shells together, and had the satisfaction to see them all in a blaze. That evening he was very tired because of his labor and anxiety, and he lay down to rest. He heard a rustling near by him in the leaves. Was it a poisonous serpent? He opened his eyes, and with a trembling heart he looked at the great broad animal that was crawling up toward him. Cremasy seized his pistol and made himself ready to kill anything that might oppose him. He soon saw that he had to deal with a large turtle, which had come to the shore to lay its eggs in the sand, where the water of the sea could not reach them. These animals always choose those places for laying their eggs where the beams of the hot sun can shine upon them all day. They then make a hole in the sand, lay their eggs in it, cover them over with sand, and by a wonderful instinct of nature, return again after the lapse of fifty days to take away the sand. After they have done this the little turtles creep out and follow their mother to the seashore. So soon as she goes into the water they climb up on top of her back and learn from her how to enjoy their new life in the sea.

So soon as Captain Cremasy knew what kind of an animal it was, he went to it and turned it over on its back. Of course it could not get away. The next morning he killed it, and the meat lasted him several days. He kept the fat in cocoa-nut shells, and with it he was able to make a good light at night. I suspect that there have been worse lamps in the world than Captain Cremasy's cocoa-nut shells filled with turtle-fat. In order to salt the turtle flesh he had to get some sea-water and sprinkle over it. After having eaten his turtle, he saw that the large shell was a splendid dish for future use. He found it difficult to get fresh water to drink, but by seeking a place where a little spring bubbled up from the ground, and by digging deeper down, he made for himself quite a good well of water. The only enemies he had to contend with were rats, and at night he was always compelled to take great care against their attacks. Cremasy's clothing became threadbare, and scarcely covered his body any longer. How to supply its place was a grave question with him, but he had managed to weave with his fingers a kind of cloth out of the thinnest inside bark of the cocoa-nut tree. In due time he was clad from head to foot with a cocoa-nut suit.

He naturally had a very strong desire to get relieved from his solitude. From early in the morning until late in the evening, on some days, he would lie on a rock and look out over the broad sea. Had his vessel struck a rock and gone to pieces, or had it sailed back again to Bourbon, and did the people there know any thing of his fate? But he was a Christian man and he felt that God would provide a way for his deliverance. He determined to raise a signal which might be seen far and wide over the sea. It was a signal of a very different kind from that usually employed. It was a ball of cocoa-nut bark, saturated in oil. He took it to the top of a tree, and resolved that just as soon as he could see a sail he would set it on fire; of course the sailors could see it from a great distance. But day after day passed on without deliverance.

Cremasy began to conclude that his fate was hopeless. One day, as he sat buried in thought, a new hope arose in his mind. On the way to the shore he collected a few mussels for his supper. Suddenly he saw a vessel far off in the horizon. But was it not an illusion?—for he had several times been deceived before. Previously the clouds had formed into such shapes that he thought they were vessels, but after giving them a little time they would disappear and be lost forever. But this time Cremasy noticed that the clouds changed, while the object that he saw with his keen eye always remained the same. His heart now beat with hope. Yes, it was a ship, and it came nearer and nearer. He went to the top of the tree where his signal was lodged between the two topmost branches, around which all the leaves were cut off, and he set fire to it. Immediately a high pyramid of flame arose. It was perfectly dazzling, and a great deal larger and more beautiful than Cremasy had any idea of before. Three minutes elapsed, and it was answered by a cannon shot from the vessel. The signal had been seen and understood. Cremasy stayed there hour after hour until midnight came; then he heard the sound of a vessel near to the outer reef. He then called aloud with his strong voice, and his cry of joy was answered by shouts from the sailors on the deck of the vessel. They spoke his own language. They were the sailors on his own ship, that had been driven far away by storms to the island of Anjouan, not far from Majotte, and they had now returned to deliver their captain.

The new Robinson Crusoe wrote the story of his solitude of months, and stuck the paper in a bottle and hung it on a tree in the neighborhood of the shore. It was found there about a year afterward by a French sailor, and it was taken to France and published. You can imagine what an excitement it made, especially among the little folks.—The Methodist.

"'TWAS MY MOTHER'S."

A COMPANY of poor children who had been gathered out of the city, were preparing for their departure to new and distant homes in the West. Just before the time for the starting of the cars one of the boys was noticed aside from the others, and apparently very busy with a cast-off garment.

The superintendent stepped up to him, and found he was cutting a small piece out of the patched lining. It proved to be his old jacket, which having been replaced by a new one, had been thrown away. There was no time to be lost. "Come, John, come," said the superintendent; "what are you going to do with that old piece of calico?"

"Please, sir," said John, "I am cutting it out to take with me. My mother put the lining into this old jacket for me. This was a piece of her dress, and it is all I shall have to remember her by." And as the poor boy thought of that dear mother's love, and of the sad deathbed scene in the old garret where she died, he covered his face with his hands and sobbed as if his heart would break.

But the train was about leaving, and John thrust the little piece of calico into his bosom to "remember his mother by," hurried into a car, and was soon far away from the place where he had seen so much sorrow.

Many an eye has moistened as the story of this orphan boy has been told; and many a heart has prayed that the God of the fatherless would be his friend. He loved his mother, and we cannot but believe that he obeyed her, and was a faithful child.

A PERFECT AGREEMENT.

THE word of God is not yea and nay; it is not an "old violin, on which any tune may be played;" it is not a book in which contradictory statements are found, as the rule; such is not the word of God; and yet, to hear the various views stated and insisted upon, and that too often with a great show of plausibility, it would seem as though a desperate effort was needed to unravel the knotty problems of theological science put forth by the learned in this world's wisdom. But how is it? God has revealed himself in the person of Jesus Christ; life and immortality are brought to light in the Scriptures; Jesus taught the good news of God, and said none other things than Moses and all the prophets said should come to pass; he proved, by the mighty works he performed and the wise sayings he uttered, that he was a teacher sent from God; his whole life was the exponent of a character so pure, so spotless, that in very deed he was worthy of his claim to be the Son of God; and yet how few in his day gave heed to his sublime teaching; and, alas! how few in this our day are willing to acknowledge him as the lawgiver and prophet like unto Moses, the hearing of whom, with obedience thereto, justifies unto eternal life; and the rejection of whom involves them in ruin, from which there is no escape; Universalists, Restorationists, and Spiritualists, to the contrary, notwithstanding. Such then being the character of him in whom wisdom was justified—for she crieth unto the simple, even to him who delights to obey. Jesus was willing and ready at all times to follow the divine counsel of his heavenly Father; and his obedience led him to the cross, there to die that we might have life.

There is a perfect harmony of truth as revealed in the Scriptures. Because so rotten a foundation has been laid in the systems man has raised up and called Bible truth, the investigation of which has led men to doubt, and even to deny the authenticity, and, as a matter of course, the authority thereof, it is urged that what is called the Bible is but a tissue of fine spun theories of heaven and hell, and of a tormenting devil, whose shape and color are legion. Yet after all, those of us who have looked outside of human productions, and have laid hold on the only hope set forth for man, see very little that is fine spun, but that which is substantial and full of solid truth.

Of all the doctrines set forth, there is none, that I am aware of, that is so little understood, and therefore under-valued, as the doctrine of life future. Some of the ablest writers on the question of the kingdom of God, on the earth, are as void of understanding what the true nature of man is, as it is seemingly possible. I have been delighted beyond measure in reading the productions of a school of literalists in England, as they harmoniously bring into agreement what prophets and the Christ have said concerning the glorious future when Christ shall reign in Mount Zion before his ancient ones; and then, in the midst of all, I have been saddened to discover how much lost there is in their want of acquaintance with the glorious life views such as I am permitted to entertain.

There is a perfect consistency of agreement on this question, as stated in the Scriptures, but a decided want of agreement, as expressed in creeds and formulas of faith of the colleges and universities. Who then shall decide when doctors disagree? Why, poor fishermen and tent makers and physicians and herdsmen, and others of whom the world was not worthy; they utter their voice in thunder tones in favor of the resurrection being the only way through which man can ever have life; this life is in the Son, and he gives it to as many—no more—as the Father giveth him; and his promise is, "I will raise him up at the last day." Who then, in view of the gracious promises held out, will delay to come to Christ. He offers life and incorruptibility; his invitation is as wide as it is deep, and its depth who can fathom?

ABYSSINIA.

PUBLIC attention has been directed to this country by the movements of the English forces against King Theodore. But it is believed very little is generally known of the country or the cause of the war. Our readers may be interested in a few facts gleaned from recent investigations.

Let one turn to his map of Africa and he will find lying under a tropical sun a country not unlike an irregular Bartlett pear with stem end pointing toward the north, having for its eastern boundary the Red Sea and Arabian Gulf, extending west from the Strait of Babelmandel about eight degrees. The country is of a somewhat broken surface, but rich in all tropical productions, and on its higher lands said not to be unhealthy for Europeans.

There is a strange mixture of Judaism in the Christianity of Abyssinia; the rite of circumcision is practised; Saturday, the Jewish Sabbath is observed as well as Sunday; there is the prohibition of the sinew which shrank, which is upon the hollow of the thigh: and there is a prevalent anxiety to accomplish, if possible, a pilgrimage to Jerusalem. Priests and people are the slaves of the most debasing superstition. It has been for generations a land of strife, cruelty and licentiousness.

The royal family boasts its descent from Solomon, and the descendants of those Jews who emigrated to the country on the destruction of Jerusalem, are still to be found there.

In 330 of the Christian era, Athanasius of Alexandria is said to have begun the evangelization of Ethiopia, which work was completed two centuries later. Nothing further is known of the Ethiopian Church, till the time of Loyala, who sent Jesuit missionaries to attempt the task of inducing the king to acknowledge the supremacy of the Pope. This he refused to do, and summarily ejected the Jesuits from his kingdom. Still the Jesuits worked on with admirable patience, gaining no inconsiderable power in the country, and considerably influencing the national church.

A little more than 35 years ago the Church Missionary Society of England turned its attention to this field. Bishop Gobat and others, including lay artisan missionaries from Germany, and some Scotch missionaries have directed their labors to the conversion of both Jews and native Christians. Their prospect had been hopeful, and the disposition of the court and of the native patriarch was quite friendly till the recent disturbances.

These missionaries have been supposed by some to be the cause of the great Abyssinian war. This is a great mistake. The facts are briefly these: Mr. Cameron, British Consul at Mossowah, was sent by King Theodore with a letter to Queen Victoria, claiming her hand in marriage. Instead of going to England, as the King supposed he had done, he turned aside, in direct violation of Lord Russell's instructions forbidding all such interference on his part, to undertake a mission of pacification in territories contiguous. Upon once more going to Abyssinia, Theodore asked him what answer he brought from the Queen. Mr. Cameron had no answer from the Queen, and the result was that the King became very angry, considered himself greatly insulted, and put Mr. Cameron in chains. He also seized several missionaries from England and Germany, and has since kept them in confinement. The English Government has felt forced to make war upon this petty barbarian, not so much with the object of freeing the captives as of maintaining British prestige in India.

ANECDOTE OF WASHINGTON.

BEING accustomed to visit an old and hospitable friend whose mansion is not far from the place I have been describing, I formed an acquaintance with the worthy dame by often stopping in my rambles to rest myself, and listen to her stories about Washington and Putnam, and other revolutionary heroes of less note. Washington was her hero. She had a picture of him hung up just below her best looking-glass, and whenever she looked that way it reminded her of something the general said or did, or some event of those doleful times when the foot of an enemy pressed almost every threshold in the land. She would look at the picture with the affection of a mother, and exclaim:

"Ah! he was a good man. I remember he used to come over sometimes, nay, very often, to talk over matters with Gen. Putnam, who had his quarters here. If ever man loved his country, it was Gen. Washington. I could tell, but I am old, and lose my memory every day—I could tell of his perplexities, his watchings, cares, and sufferings of mind and body, which I believe he never let any one see but myself; and I shall never forget his kindness when I lost my youngest son. My boy was quite a hero among the young men of the hills, and night after night used to go out with parties of militia, beating up the plundering Yagers that came from below and carried away everything they could find, to the ruin of many of our poor people, who stayed between the lines because they were old, and knew not where else to go.

"One night—it was the twentieth of January—I can recollect that—in the dead of night, my son and his little troop were surprised in turn by a party from below, while warming themselves in a house, which the enemy surrounded in blank silence and then set on fire. In attempting to escape they were all butchered by the Yagers, who hacked them down, though they begged for quarter. The next day, while I was out at a neighbor's house, my son's body was brought home by some people who knew him; and when I returned, there I saw it, with the blood frozen in the gashes with which he was covered.

"I don't remember what became of me till I found myself sitting in our old arm-chair, and the general standing just by, with his hat in one hand and the other resting on the back of the chair.

"'Mother,' said he, when he saw I was come to myself—'Mother'—and the word made me so proud I almost forgot what had happened—'Mother, you have given a son to your country—a brave man to his God. Go now to your room; I will see everything done.'

"I went, for no one could say nay to him when he soothed or commanded, and they buried my boy like a soldier. The troops fired, while the general himself stood over the grave, and the pride of a mother almost overcame her affection. Time, hardships, and more sorrows that succeeded each other for years afterward, drove away the bitterness of this bereavement; although when the floor was washed, or the sun shone bright upon it, we could see the stain of blood where the body had lain. I can talk of these things now, for when I think of the death of my son, I remember also that he died in the service of his country, and his country's father followed him to his grave."—Paulding's Life of Washington

THE SIGHT OF HELL.

'The following is extracted from a Romish book, entitled The Sight of Hell, one of a series of "books for children and young persons," composed by a priest named Furniss (pretty aptly named too) and published permissu superiorum: "The roof is red hot; the walls are red hot; the floor is like a thick sheet of red-hot iron. See, on the middle of that red-hot iron floor stands a girl. She looks about sixteen years old. Her feet are bare; she has neither shoes nor stockings on her feet; her bare feet stand on the red-hot burning floor. The door of this room has never been opened before since she first set her feet on the red-hot floor. Now she sees that the door is opening. She rushes forward. She has gone down on her knees on the red-hot floor. Listen! she speaks. She says, 'I have been standing with my bare feet on this red-hot floor for years. Day and night my only standing place has been this red-hot floor. Sleep never came on me for a moment that I might forget this horrible burning floor.' 'Look,' she says, 'at my burnt and bleeding feet. Let me go off this burning floor for one moment, only for one single short moment. Oh! that in this endless eternity of years I might forget the pain only for one single moment.' The devil answers her question, 'Do you ask,' he says, 'for a moment, for one moment to forget your pain? No, not for one single moment during the never-ending eternity of years shall you ever leave this red-hot floor!' 'Is it so?' the girl says, with a sigh that seems to break her heart; 'then, at least, let somebody go to my little brothers and sisters who are alive, and tell them not to do the bad things which I did, so that they will never have to come and stand on this red-hot floor.' The devil answers her again, 'Your little brothers and sisters have the priests to tell them these things. If they will not listen to the priests, neither would they listen even if somebody should go to them from the dead.'" The concluding sentence proves that the "mocking fiend" can twist Scripture to his own ends. It is clear also, that the Rev. J. Furniss has no scruple in accepting the devil's advocacy of "the priests."

What is this worse than the common Protestant idea of a burning hell, or place of eternal torments for the finally impenitent? If the wicked are to be tormented eternally, suffer untold agonies in body and mind, it will only be an aggravation of such cases as are proposed in the above popish fable: the only difference lies in the means of torture. In fact, the whole system of eternal misery is a popish fable, founded upon this greatest of fables and delusions, the dogma of man,s natural immortality.—Voice of the West.

THE LORD'S WALL.

SOMEWHERE about fifty years ago, one bitter January night the inhabitants of the old town of Sleswick were thrown into the greatest distress and terror. A hostile army was marching down upon them, and new and fearful reports of the conduct of lawless soldiery were hourly reaching the place.

In a large commodious cottage dwelt an aged grandmother with her widowed daughter and grandson. While all hearts quaked with fear this aged woman passed her time in crying out to God that he would build a wall of defence around about them, quoting the words of an ancient hymn.

Her grandson asked her why she prayed for a thing so entirely impossible as that God should build a wall about their house, that it should hide it; but she explained that the meaning was that God should protect her.

At midnight the dreaded tramp was heard, an enemy came pouring in at every avenue, filling the houses to overflowing. But while the most fearful sounds were heard on every side, not even a knock came to their door, at which they were greatly surprised. The morning light made the matter clear; for just beyond the house the drifted snow had reared such a massive wall that it was impossible to get over it to them.

"There," said the old woman, triumphantly, "do you not see, my son, that God could raise up a wall around us?"

Truly, "with God all things are possible."

A WRITER in The Christian Visitor (St. John, N. B.) is discussing the "eternal punishment of sin." We wonder if he knows that it is only denied by those who teach the soul is immortal! He claims that "the eternal justice of God" demands that the sinner should suffer eternally, also that Jesus Christ "rendered a complete satisfaction to the divine justice"—"has paid" his [the sinner's] debt in full. "Not one mite is left unpaid." If the "divine justice" demands eternal torment as the penalty of sin, will this writer please inform us at what period in the past our blessed Saviour suffered this eternal punishment? for he says "the justice of God was fully manifested" in Christ. And if this "justice" (?) demands eternal misery, then of course Christ, to be an efficient Saviour, must have suffered the same! Will he tell us how the sufferings (which at least could not have exceeded thirty-three years) and death of Christ could satisfy a claim God had on us for eternal misery? We fail to see the justice here.—Voice of the West.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS, Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents, Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

THE STATE AND HOPE OF MAN IN DEATH.

BY B. S. BATCHELOR.

"If a man die, shall he live again?" Job xiv., 14.

THIS question was proposed by Job, the perfect man of Uz, at a time when he was so overwhelmed with affliction that life seemed a burden. "My soul," he exclaims, "is weary of my life." x., 1.

Wearied with this life, his thoughts were directed to a contemplation of man's future state. He desired to attain a clear idea of the state and hope of man in death. Job's afflictions, in God's providence, became the occasion of drawing out, by the pen of inspiration, some plain truths concerning this important and interesting subject.

In pursuing this subject let us first consider the state of man in death, as taught in our text and its context: and secondly show that the resurrection alone is the hope of those who are dead.

I. CONSIDER THE STATE OF MAN IN DEATH.

There are two prominent views entertained by professing Christians, concerning this matter. The one is that death is not a reality, but only a change from one mode of life to another, and therefore that the dead are conscious, intensely so. The other is that death is a reality, an utter end of conscious existence, so long as it continues.

The latter we suppose to be the truth, and the truth of our text and its context: which position we attempt to sustain by presenting the following considerations:

1. The question proposed is not, "If a man die, does he still live?" but "If a man die, shall he live again?"

Now, had Job believed death to be a state of consciousness, would he not have been likely to have mentioned it here? This is now usually held up by believers in it, with greater prominence even than the resurrection. If, on a funeral occasion, comfort is presented to the mourners, death is commonly mentioned before the resurrection; and too often the latter is overlooked.

From the fact, then, that Job inquires, not concerning a state of consciousness in death, but rather whether the dead should live again, we conclude that he believed death to be a reality, a cessation of conscious life.

2. The illustrations used in the preceding context strongly sustain this view.

"For there is hope for a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease, though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground; yet through the scent of water it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant." The tree may be cut down, and be burned in the fire, yet, in the tender branches which grow up from its roots it may be continued. But man's destruction in death is more complete than this. "But man dieth, and wasteth away,") see Pick's Concordance) "Yea, man wasteth away, and where is he?" Is there hope that, in some way, his life will be still continued? Nay; more completely than the tree that is cut down, he perishes.

"As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down, and riseth not till the heavens be no more: they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." Imagine, if possible, the water evaporated, till the bed of the ocean is left dry: the sea no more exists. True, the waters that once rolled unceasingly in its rocky bed exist in the form of vapor, but the ocean is no more. Is the figure strong? Yet it is drawn by the pen of inspiration as a fit emblem of man in death. The elements of which the man was composed are not annihilated, but man, as man, exists no longer. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." The component parts, which, in their composite state, formed the man, by dissolution, return to the state in which they existed before they were combined to form a man. Neither dust nor spirit was a conscious being before united, nor are they, either of them, after being separated at death. The living power, the vitality or breath of life being withdrawn, man returns to dust.

3. Death is here termed a sleep: "Till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep."

There is a very strange construction sometimes put upon this and similar passages, as that the sleep referred to the body, and not to the "immortal soul," which man is supposed to possess. The absurdity of this idea is manifest, when we consider, for a moment, that sleep does not so much affect the body as the mind. During natural sleep the blood circulates, the digestive process goes on, and the lungs respire, but the mental action is suspended, and sound sleep is a state of unconsciousness. By one in a deep sleep, time and passing events are not heeded: in a troubled sleep, approaching wakefulness, men dream, and such sleep does not refresh the wearied system. To admit, then, that death is properly termed a sleep (which all must admit who regard the Bible as God's word), and yet affirm that the dead are intensely conscious is a plain contradiction. If the dead sleep, they are not conscious, or if the dead are concious they do not sleep. God says they sleep, therefore whoever affirms that they are conscious contradicts God. Let them do this, who dare!

Viewing death as a state of unconscious repose from the sorrows of life, the weary sufferer, worn out by the afflictions laid upon him, desired to be hidden "in the grave, to be kept secret till God's wrath was past," when affliction shall be do more the portion of the people of God.

Job says not one word, he gives not an intimation of an expectation of going to enjoy the bliss of heaven when he died: his entire thought is fixed on that sheol, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. There the prisoners rest together, they hear not the voice of the oppressor. The small and the great are there, and the servant is free from his master."

It may be regarded as not a very inviting prospect to think of lying down in the grave, to make one's bed in darkness, "to say to corruption, Thou art my father, to the worm, Thou art my mother and sister." And truly, death is not lovely, nor is it in the nature of man to love death, in itself considered. But, if we consider the circumstances of Job, at the time that he thus longed for repose in the dust, we shall not be surprised at his choice; nor will it seem strange that he chose "strangling rather than life." His children, his servants, and his cattle had been destroyed: "from the sole of his foot unto his crown," he was covered with sore boils: his wife had turned against him, advising him to "curse God and die," and his three friends had become his tormentors. Is it then a strange affair that a man, in such a case, having no hope of obtaining relief, should be willing to sleep in the grave, that he might "be at rest?"

Yet, with all his sorrows, Job was not willing to die unless he might have a hope beyond the grave. To lie eternally unconscious, he could not endure. He was willing to sleep, but not an eternal sleep.

Is there, then, hope for man in death? Shall the deep sleep be ever broken? If a man die, shall he live again? There is hope: death is not an eternal sleep: the dead shall live again.

II. THE RESURRECTION IS MAN'S HOPE IN DEATH.

1. Death being a reality, a state of unconsciousness, a sleep, there can be no hope for those who are dead, but that of a resurrection from death. The question, then, is not, "If a man die, does he still live?" but "If a man die, shall he live again?" And as if the blessed assurance was that instant impressed upon his mind, Job responds, "All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change comes. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee, thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands."

The resurrection of that which has lost its identity, may seem to man to be impossible, but with God all things are possible. Should the waters fail from the sea, and the flood become dry, yet God could again condense the vapor, and cause old ocean once more to roar in its pride. So, if man is decomposed in death, God, who made Adam from dust at first, can cause the several parts to unite again and become a living person, conscious of its own identity with that person that died and mouldered back to dust. If any doubt, we can only reply, "Ye therefore do greatly err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God."

In chap. xix., Job more fully declares his hope. As if in vision, he saw eternal realities pass before him, he exclaims: "Oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were printed in a book! That they were graven with an iron pen, and lead in the rock forever! For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold and not another, though my reins be consumed within me."

2. The time of the resurrection is fixed. Men may not know, but God, in the counsels of his own will, has appointed the time when the long night of death shall end in eternal day; when the saints shall wake from their long sleep to perfect and blessed consciousness. "All the days of my appointed time," said Job, "will I wait, till my change come."

Does it seem gloomy to think of so long time elapsing, and the saints still asleep, not having received the promise? Remember that they are not conscious of their unconsciousness. To them the passing of time is nothing, and when they awake, the moments of death and resurrection will be to them as two successive moments; of the intermediate time they have no remembrance.

To the living it seems more satisfactory to know that their pious friends are safely lodged in the tomb till the morn of resurrection, then to awake to immortality, than to entertain a necessarily vague and undefined idea of their dead friends, in some strange mode of existence, with ghostly forms in some far-off region of the universe, or, perhaps, wandering around them, beholding the sin and misery existing in this world among those still living in the flesh. And most intolerable is the thought, of those who have died impenitent, suffering unremitting and undescribable woe, and living in shivering anticipation of a worse fate, to be endured after the judgment day!

How superstition vanishes, like the early dew before the rising sun, when once this truth is recognized, that the dead sleep, until the time appointed by God, when they will arise again!

3. The resurrection is to occur at the advent of the Lord. "Thou shalt call and I will answer thee." "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." Thus perfectly does the teaching of Job, who lived contemporary with Moses, or nearly so, harmonize with that of the enlightened apostle of the Gentiles, after Christ had brought life and immortality actually to light through the gospel.

The coming of our Lord, then, to raise the dead, is the only hope for man beyond this life. To that time Job looked; to that great event Christ and his apostles directed the eye of the church. Till he comes, death will reign over the sleeping saints, and mortality will be the condition of God's waiting ones; till the time appointed comes, when the long sleep of the pious dead shall be broken, this mortal put on immortality, and death be swallowed up in victory.

What wonder, then, that the church of Christ, in every age, has longed for the advent of her Lord!

How strange that any who profess his name should fail to long for his appearing!

How wrong is any theory which turns the mind away from that blessed hope!

Oh, Saviour, quickly come. Amen.

AN IMPORTANT INQUIRY.

IS THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL TAKEN FOR GRANTED IN THE BIBLE?

WHAT is the "everlasting life" revealed to mankind in the gospel? And what is the death, from which that life is an eternal salvation? Here, at threshold of this discussion, we are told that the soul's immortality is assumed in the Bible, and that all the language of scripture must be understood accordingly. "The immortality of the soul," says one, "is rather supposed, or taken for granted, than expressly revealed in the Bible."* The words in question are therefore referred to man's physical destiny, or they are taken to denote happiness or misery in an immortal destiny. The literal sense commonly allowed in the Old Testament, and is supposed to be exhausted in temporal deliverances and destructions. The metaphorical sense is supposed to predominate in the New Testament. In either case, the Word of Life is no message of eternal being for man—he did not need to be told that; it is news simply of eternal well-being to those who believe in Christ.

The silence of the scriptures respecting man's natural immortality is commonly admitted, and converted into an implicative argument. The fact is denied by one late writer,† who thinks it is expressly asserted of all mankind, in at least one passage, that "they cannot die any more." But he must then allow that the lost—the children of the wicked one—are in the same passage said to be "accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead;" and to be "equal unto the angels," and "the children of God." This last resort to find a distinct statement of the soul's immortality in the scriptures, will make their silence more obvious. For none, we think, but the Universalists will accept such an exposition of the passage.

To divest the argument of its appendages, we shall here say the question is not respecting the immortality of the righteous. Nor has it to do with the passages supposed to intimate or to imply the immortality of all men in general, or of bad men in particular; but simply with the acknowledged fact, that such immortality is nowhere in the Bible stated, spoken of, or alluded to, in proper terms. It never appears as a plastic element in the language of the scriptures. Neither such expressions as "to live for ever," "to exist for ever," "never to die," "to be immortal," nor any equivalent expressions are ever used in speaking of the nature of the soul, or the destiny of the lost. They are used only in speaking of the destiny of the righteous. And our business now is with the statement, that the immortality in question is silently assumed and taken for granted in the Revelation.

For argument's sake, we will admit this; and we will compare the scriptural treatment of this supposed implicit doctrine, with the scriptural treatment of another doctrine, which is undoubtedly taken for granted in the Bible, and with which the doctrine in question is often associated as one of the main pillars of religious truth—to wit, that of the divine existence.

If now these two are the cardinal truths of religion, we should expect them to receive similar treatment in the revelation of the divine character and of human destiny. If one of these doctrines is stated explicitly and categorically, we should expect the same of the other. If any one of them is not directly stated, but is explicitly assumed, with frequent mention or allusion, we should expect the same of the other. If one is assumed implicitly and silently—taken for granted as a doctrine clear past all doubt and all need of mention—we shall expect the same of the other.

What are the facts? The divine existence is, indeed, never asserted categorically, or stated as a proposition. It is assumed, as too clear for argument—a first truth of the religious consciousness, to prove which would be preposterous. The Bible never goes into debate with the atheist. His error is not to be treated with logic. He is, perhaps, the fool, who "says in his heart, there is no God." But so far from being tacitly assumed, the divine existence is named and alluded to, and involved in various forms of speech continually. It stands out in bold relief, on almost every page of the Bible. It meets the reader at almost every turn. The silence of two short books respecting it has been deemed perplexing, impeaching their inspiration, unless it can be explained by special circumstances. One of these—the book of Esther—is a historical episode; the other—the Song of Solomon—is an allegory; and thus they hold their places in the sacred canon. In every other book the doctrine of God's existence is the apple of gold in the picture of silver. It is the Koh-i-noor, the mountain of Light, that illumines the volume. It is the central truth that makes the Bible a Discourse of God—the Word of God. It is the Shekinah that imparts sacredness to the book, so that even skeptics have approached it with awe as standing on holy ground. And lest this one great truth should weary the devout reader with monotony, it appears in endlessly varying forms, in manifold names of the Divine Being, and of his glorious attributes. And to arrest the attention and invite the study of reluctant men, the Bible yields a thousand expressions of the power, wisdom and goodness of GOD. If we strike out from the record all those passages that tell of His Being and his works, we reduce the dimensions of the volume almost by half; we make it a book without sense or meaning; we exchange its radiant light for midnight darkness.

But if we expunge from the same book all those passages in which the immortality of the soul is mentioned or expressly assumed, we leave the volume unchanged; it remains as it was. It might have been written just as we now have it, and the Revelation would have been just as complete as it is, if the sacred writers had conspired, with one consent, to avoid all reference or allusion to that form of doctrine which is sometimes called one of the two cardinal truths of all religion.

Whence this contrast in the scriptural treatment of these ideas? Will it be said that the immortality of the soul is sufficiently clear to man's unaided reason? But that important truth ought to be surpassingly clear to human reason, which need not be named in a Revelation. And if we suppose the more obvious truth to be named less frequently because more obvious, then the soul's immortality should be a thousand fold clearer than the divine existence—nay, clearer beyond all comparison as any large number is incomparably greater than zero.

That the soul's immortality is so clear, past all shadow or dream of doubt, will hardly be claimed. But, granting, for argument's sake, that it is too clear to need explicit mention in the Bible, we only encounter a new difficulty. The Revelation which God should make to man, is of necessity given in man's language. Not only in the single words of human language, but also in the correct phrases and forms of human speech, so far as these are not false, or such as should be corrected or modified by the Revelation. But if the soul's immortality were so marvelously clear a postulate of human reason, it must be a most cherished sentiment, and must give rise to many common expressions—household words of natural theology. In fact, whenever and wherever this doctrine has obtained, it has created various modes of expression that reveal the sentiment. Why, then, are these expressions altogether avoided or ignored in the Bible? Why should the Holy Spirit—so ready to catch the language of the mortals who were to be taught the way of life—have failed to conform to their style of thought in this most important item of their own immortal value? Why, if God has told men that they must enjoy or suffer forever, has he never urged his invitation or his warning in the name of the immortality he has given them? Such a gift surely would be pre-eminently worthy of mention to those who think and say so much of their supposed possession of the boon. Did he not desire them to be grateful for that which would so liken them to himself?

Such are our difficulties, on the suggestion that the soul's immortality is too clear to need mention in a Revelation. We meet only a new difficulty when we turn to facts, and consider the anxious doubts of men for thousands of years on this very subject. Because man was made for immortality, we find in the ruins of his fallen nature, through all history, some sentiment of the birthright he had lost. He finds himself subject to death; but he also finds, or thinks he finds, some remnant within him, of that which is too good to die. Hence that question of ages, "If a man die shall he live again?" But when the question came to be answered, and life and immortality were brought to light by One who did gain a signal victory over death, there was not a word uttered of that immortal nature respecting which there had been so much talk. He who had "the words of eternal life" never said that all men were to live or to exist forever. He never spoke of the life which he gave, as an attribute or quality of some other essential life which they already possessed.

It becomes, then, at least a fair question, tion, whether the "taking for granted" of man's immortality is not extra-scriptural—an assumption out of the Bible and foreign to it.

BABYLONIANISM.

[Concluded from last week.]

WE have referred to the monks of Mount Carmel. There had existed at Mount Carmel, long before the birth of Christ, a college of priests. The Romanists say, they were disciples of Elijah and Elisha, but let us remember those men stood alone in their day and generation, therefore, it is not likely that they should have founded a college. There is little doubt that the college belonged to to the idolatrous priests of Baal and Ashtaroth, who ate at Jezebel's table. "The prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the groves four hundred." (1 Kings xviii., 19.) We also find the names of these two idols coupled together in Holy Scripture, at a very early period in Israel's history; as for instance, (Judges ii., 13.) "They forsook the Lord, and served Baal and Ashtaroth." These names evidently signify Baal, the supreme father or lord; and Ashtaroth, the queen of heaven. In the second century after the birth of Christ, a man named Basilides was the high priest of the order at Mount Carmel. He was a man of profound knowledge, and first astrologer of the day. All the Chaldee leaders were magicians, as we learn from the Book of Daniel, for we find that Nebuchadnezzar sent to consult them about his dream. Basilides saw the progress of the gospel; it could not be overturned (he thought,) but it might be corrupted. Hence he proposed, like our Broad Church dreamers of the present day, to bring about an alliance of all sects and creeds, who could unite in one common form of worship without regard to the peculiar views which each might entertain. Basilides and his followers now joined themselves to the Christian church. Thus they secured a share in the election of pastors and bishops, and the worshippers of the queen of heaven could now, by exercising judicious reserve, slowly, but surely, introduce their doctrines. Henceforth no congregation could tell whether the pastors were worshippers of the queen of heaven, or believers in the God of the Bible; and no minister could tell whether or not the deacons of the church, or the most influential persons in his congregation, were worshippers of Astarte or Jesus Christ. The same part was thus played in the second and third centuries which was afterward played by the Jesuits in the seventeenth century, at the period of the Reformation, who, pretending to be Episcopalians in one place, Presbyterians and Independents in other places, as best suited their purpose, disseminated their own views without suspicion.

Is not this very much the case in our own day? Are not the present enemies of the gospel those who creep in unawares into churches and congregations, insinuate themselves, and finally overturn and upset every thing, nothing new but the same old working of the mystery of iniquity? Basilides was joined in his profound scheme by Ammonius Sacchus, a Greek by birth. He had settled at Alexandria, and was first philosopher and metaphysician of the day, deeply skilled in human nature, by intercourse with mankind and experience. He was benevolent and well meaning; but alas! here was the failure, he was altogether ignorant of the divine truth, by divine teaching. At length, this mighty philosopher applied to be admitted into the Christian church of Alexandria. He was recieved, and became the instructor of the Christian youths of Alexandria. The chief characteristic of this man's teaching was its defectiveness. He had only got at the husk and knew nothing of the kernel. The most distinguished of his pupils was the celebrated Origen. He had been sent early in life to Chaldea, where he studied and became initiated in the highest mysteries of the Assyrian apostasy. On returning to Alexandria, he became head of the school and finally bishop. During the reign of the Emperor Alexandria Severus, himself a member of the Oriental apostasy, the whole weight of Origen's talents and influence was directed to aid the emperor in his design of uniting all creeds in one at Rome, and with a view to this end, he prevailed upon the emperor to add the name of Christ to the number of the gods. Origen then immediately changed his own name, originally Adamantus, adopting that of Origen, which signifies the son or offspring of Horus or Assarac. Suffice it to say that the views of Basilides were successfully advocated and enforced by the then so-called fathers of the church, Clement of Alexandria, Basil, Origen, and both the Gregories. They were entirely successful, yet these are the men of whom many falsely called Protestants boast, and from whose writings they seek to obtain testimony, instead of turning to the unerring word of the living God. We fully believe, that with the exception of Augustine, the whole of the men called Fathers, from the commencement of the fourth century downwards, were corrupt and dangerous writers, and the seeds of all errors are moreover found in all the earlier writers after the apostles themselves.

From the moment that Origen lent himself to the Emperor Alexander Severus, in his attempt to combine all creeds in one, from that very moment the distinctive doctrines of the gospel ceased to be taught generally. The atonement was no longer spoken of. The second advent of Christ and his future kingdom were denied; the resurrection of the body was explained away, and magic was maintained to be a true and lawful science. The conspiracy triumphed under the pontificate of Damascus, raised to that position by the introduction of such men and teaching as we have just referred to, into the Christian church. The worship of the Virgin was everywhere set up in the year 381, moreover Damascus is said to have immediately after enforced it throughout his dominions. Mary was everywhere worshipped as the mother of God, the queen of heaven. Sir Isaac Newton states, that at the close of the fourth century, the worship of the queen of heaven had superseded the worship of Christ throughout the Roman empire. Gibbon considers the system of virgin worship as established throughout the Roman empire in the fourth century. The Romanists themselves admit that the worship of Mary was enacted by the Council of Constantinople 391, and universally sanctioned by the expulsion from church of all who refused it, in the year 431, when the faith of that church was finally established at the council of Ephesus. Under Damascus the heathen temples were restored and beautified, and the rituals re-established. One point alone was insisted upon, namely, that the many-named goddesses should henceforth be called Mary. Thus the queen of heaven occupied the place of the Lord Jesus Christ, in the professedly Christian church at Rome. The faithful loudly opposed this, they declared their hope and expectation to be that the Lord Jesus Christ would speedily return, take to himself his great power, and reign and set up his everlasting kingdom. Damascus declared that the millennium had already commenced, and expelled from the church as heretics all who looked for Christ's second advent and kingdom. In the East, things for a time wore a better appearance.

According to Dr. Newman, the school of Antioch was practically Protestant, but at length arose Gregory the Thaumaturgus, and proclaimed that the queen of heaven had appeared to him and miraculously instructed him to go forth and preach her worship. He did so with all signs, lying wonders, and magical performances. He used reserve, he spake mysteriously and eloquently: this succeeded, all the world went after him; he proposed to be received into the church at Alexandria, and the church not only received him, but made him bishop, though unbaptized and wholly ignorant of God's word. In one day he was baptized, confirmed, ordained, and consecrated bishop. The emperor alone was alarmed; he appointed Nestorious head of the school at Antioch, in order to check the progress of the apostasy. However ignorant on other points, we know not or care not, certain it is Nestorious has become stigmatized as a heretic, by Rome. (A common device nowadays with the enemy, respecting men whose teaching damages their craft, and is according to truth.) But at all events, he directed men's minds from the virgin to her Son. He declared that she was not the mother of God, that her Son derived only his human nature from her, and that, although blessed above other women she was but a woman still; in other words, he denied that God had become incarnate in the person of the Virgin; he denied the old Chaldean and then Romish doctrine, that the Virgin and not her Son should bruise the serpent's head. The bishops, clergy, and people were excited. The emperor called a council, which assembled at Ephesus, and in the year 431 Nestorions was expelled from the church, and the worship of the Virgin was established in the Eastern branch of the Roman empire, as it had formerly been in the West. Solemn curses were pronounced upon all who refused to worship the goddess, and the festival of her assumption into heaven was imposed upon the falsely called church of Christ, to be observed throughout the empire on the 8th of September.

"THREE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS."

One Thousand Dollars Wanted. FOR WHAT?

To put into circulation within the next three months Ten Thousand each of the following works:

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE.

THE JUDGMENT: TIME AND MANNER OF IT.

AND

LIFE FROM THE DEAD: Or, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN.

These three documents are for the campaign before us, which is not to be ended till our King is crowned and has the kingdoms of this world subjected to his reign on David's throne. Two thousand each of the above two first-named documents have been printed, and three thousand of the last, and a great portion of them are already in circulation; but there is a wish to increase it to ten thousand each by the next anniversary of the LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.* We believe it can be done. It is true, a few have generally had such work to do; but "many hands make light work." If each of our subscribers could pay, or collect one dollar for this object, the full amount and several hundred dollars over would be had to carry on the work.

Who says, I WILL DO IT? You can have all your money back again in the documents, if you wish it.

The three works can be had for 14 cents, including the postage; or, 100 of each for $12, including postage, or for $10 when sent by express or taken at our office.

THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY.

WE have received the "Sixth Annual Report" of this Corporation, located in Boston, Mass. It seems to be in a prosperous condition. We give the following extract from the Report before us:

The directors take pleasure in calling the attention of the members of this institution to its increased usefulness. Nearly three times as many persons have used the Library during the past, as during the previous year, and the taking out of books has multiplied in the same proportion. These books have been taken to forty-six different towns and villages, the most distant being seventy miles.

About 3,000 visits have been paid to the Library during the year, and these visitors have probably consulted 15,000 books and periodicals. Of the visitors, at least two-fifths are either laymen or females, and as there are from 50,000 to 75,000 Sunday school superintendents and teachers in New England, as well as several hundred students preparing for the ministry, against 5,000 clergymen, the time is not distant when the great majority of those using the Library will be laymen.

THE READING ROOM.

This establishment, which is connected with the Library, receives regularly, eighty-five periodicals. Quite a number of new and important reviews and papers have been added the past year.

The HERALD OF LIFE has been sent to the "Reading Room," regularly, from its first issue, and is acknowledged among the periodicals received from the proprietors or publishers.

RUBBER CEMENT.—Pure virgin rubber a piece the size of a walnut, cut up as fine as yarn, the finer the better, put in a pint or twenty ounce bottle; add one pint of benzine free from oil. Let it stand a few days, shaking occasionally and it will become thick as honey, and cement leather straps, shoe soles, backs of books, etc., drying in a few minutes. If too thin add rubber; if too thick add benzine. Keep the bottle closed.—Scientific American.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Professor Wilson, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we endorse the general theory that the Anglo Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage, six cents.

MEETINGS IN NEW YORK CITY.—Believers in the Second Coming of Christ at hand, and future Life for the Righteous at his Coming, meet for worship every Sunday, at Botanic Hall, No. 68 East Broadway. Service at 10½ A. M. and 3 P. M. Seats free.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JULY 1, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

NO. PAPER NEXT WEEK.

OUR subscribers all understand that 48 numbers of our paper make a volume, according to our "Terms." Hence in a solar year we have four weeks in which we issue no paper. We leave these vacancies where it seems most desirable, all things considered. The vicinity of the "Fourth of July" is one of them.

We are perfectly willing that the amount of reading matter for a year in the HERALD OF LIFE should be compared with any other paper in the land, published at the same price. Look at the advertisements and standing matter in other papers, for twelve months, and see if we do not exceed any of them in the amount of other matter. The "LIFE AND ADVENT UNION" have never thought it advisable to advance the price of our paper, though the cost of publishing has doubled, in some parts of the work, since the first issue, and nearly all other papers have advanced in price more or less. Think of the amount of matter given our subscribers for $2, compared with the amount received for $1 in a monthly magazine of 32 pages octavo, small pica. The latter contains, in what printers call ems, about 564,000 in twelve months. The HERALD OF LIFE contains in 48 numbers 3,456,000 (about three millions five hundred thousand) ems. That is, the HERALD OF LIFE, in 48 numbers, contains about six times the amount of matter of the supposed monthly; and yet some think a monthly is so cheap they will take that to the neglect of the weekly. The HERALD would be as cheap at $6 per year as the monthly at $1. Are any of our readers willing to hazard the life of our weekly by substituting a monthly in its place? or, by introducing a monthly among us, till such time as it is decided that we can no longer sustain a weekly? The Bible Examiner, our pioneer monthly, was suspended expressly for the sake of trying the experiment of a weekly. The friends of truth have nobly sustained it hitherto. Will any of them leave it now for a mere monthly? We trust not. They love the HERALD OF LIFE too well thus to be drawn aside to a private monthly enterprise.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

WE are reluctant to part with any of our readers; but there are some to whom the HERALD OF LIFE has been continued though their subscription ran out some time since. We would be glad to wait on them longer, but our necessities admonish us that we must be just before we are generous. If the persons referred to should fail to receive our next issue they will understand the cause. We would be glad not to be obliged to discontinue the name of any one now on our books. Must we do it? Please help us to say, No.

THE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

Life from the Dead.................. 5 cents.
The Judgment....................... 2 "

If sent by mail the postage must be added. For either one of them, alone, the postage would be two cents. It is desirable, therefore, that they be ordered in parcels. Send what money you wish to apply for them, and state which you want sent, or what proportion you would have of each, and we will send them at the above prices, deducting the postage from the money sent.

Three editions of 1000 each of LIFE FROM THE DEAD are nearly all gone, within a short time, and we shall put the fourth 1000 to press immediately. They are accomplishing a mighty work. The Tract on the JUDGMENT should invariably accompany this, whether the DEFENCE does or not. This post, of "NO LIFE OUT OF CHRIST," is to be defended with unabating energy. It must and will be maintained: it is "never to be surrendered." With it all the strongholds of inherent immortality, endless torture, and a mortal resurrection are to be assaulted and overthrown. Each of these three errors stand in the way of the triumph of truth, and are doomed to perish from the theology of Christendom, sooner or later. Neither of them can live in the light of the Bible. Against these three fundamental errors we oppose our "THREE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS." Let our friends give them "free course" and they will "run and be glorified" in spreading the grand Bible doctrine of "NO LIFE FUTURE OUT OF CHRIST." He is "the Resurrection and the Life." Out of Him the sinner perishes like "the natural brute beast." See 2 Pet. ii., 12 and Psa. xlix., throughout. Let the Campaign Documents be read, and we have no fear but what candid minds, willing to follow truth, irrespective of sect or party, will soon discover that the Bible teaches no other way into a future life but the way of holiness in Jesus Christ, by a union with him.

Our work has begun well; let there be no faltering in it. A large outlay now is better than protracting the campaign. The battle is to be fought "out on this line, if it takes" till the Lord comes. Our Lord and King will soon be crowned on David's throne. Let us now give him the glory as the only LIFE-GIVER for dying men; and as giving a future life only to the members of his body. Blessed truth. Let it fly to the ends of the earth with lightning speed and lightning power. Ye men of God, all of us, let us be found working "while it is day; the night cometh in which no man can work."

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

THE Advent Herald, Boston, Mass., was originally under the supervision of Eld. J. V. HIMES, and continued so for many years. During those years he favored the theory of inherent immortality; nor did he abandon that view till after his connection with that paper ceased, so far as we have any knowledge. Some five or six years since, he removed from Boston to the West, and started a new paper at Buchanan, Mich., called Voice of the West. From that time he has advocated the mortality of man and the final destruction of the wicked; while the Advent Herald has kept on in its old course as to the immortality of the soul, the conscious state of the dead, and the eternal torments of the wicked.

Recently Eld. HIMES has published a work called "ADVENTISM," etc., in which the author (Wm. Sheldon) has taken up the subject in two parts. The first part is devoted to the consideration of man's nature and destiny, showing that he is mortal, and that the end of the wicked is, after a resurrection and judgment, to be destroyed. This work has been noticed by the old paper—the Advent Herald—and among other things, it says:

> More than one-fourth of which is devoted to a discussion of the state of the dead and end of the wicked; and an attempt is made to show that the scriptures teach the unconscious state of the departed, the final extinction of the being of the wicked, and that this view of the condition of man in death "is not a new doctrine, but harmonizes with the views of primitive Christians," and of Luther, Tyndal, and "the first Reformers." We regard much of what is said on this point as being a miserable perversion of scripture and historical facts.

ELD. HIMES, in his response to his old friend, sets this matter in its true light, so far as it relates to "primitive Christians" and "the first Reformers." He has introduced a mass of testimony which goes very clearly to show that the doctrine of an immortal soul in man is a corruption of Christianity, and that Luther and other Reformers, did, in fact, repudiate it. His testimony and remarks fill near six columns of his new paper, Voice of the West, and will well pay for reading. We thank him for this expose and defence, and hope he will give it a wide circulation.

As ELD. HIMES has so nobly defended this part of the immortality question we hope he may yet be able to do the same with the crowning doctrine of "Life future only to those in Christ." We trust he may yet see, and seeing, as nobly defend this Bible doctrine as the other. Had he grappled with the concluding remarks of his old friend, the Advent Herald, we would have been glad to see how he would have disposed of a difficulty. It is as follows:

> That the volume before us contains some prophetical views on which Adventists generally are agreed, is readily conceded—though we have looked in vain for the doctrine of two resurrections a thousand years apart: if it is there we have overlooked it; and as the author maintains that "there must be a resurrection before there can be a judgment" (p. 42), that "the dead ones must come out of death's dark prison before being judged" (p. 43), and "that the judgment is connected with Christ's appearing (2 Tim. iv., 1)," we are unable to see how he can get the millennium between the resurrection of the "blessed and holy" and that of "the rest of the dead." (Rev. xx., 4–6.)

Here is a point where the author of "Adventism" has left us all in the dark; nor can we see but what his theory drags after it, inevitably, the heresy of a universal "mortal resurrection." If there is no judgment of decision before the resurrection, how is it that the righteous "dead are raised incorruptible?" as Paul affirms they are; and the wicked dead (if raised at all) are raised mortal? as they must be, if they are to die again. How can these things be, if there has not been a judicial judgment before the resurrection? What position does the author of Adventism occupy here? Will Br. HIMES tell us plainly? He has said not a word on this part of the Advent Herald's article. We can excuse him for not entering at this time into that part of the subject, because of the length of his response to the other parts; but we can hardly excuse the Voice or Br. Sheldon for further silence on these last remarks of the Advent Herald. That paper is not the only one which desires to see an open declaration on this matter.

Here are the questions we would be glad to see the Voice meet with a frank declaration viz.:

1. Is the resurrection of the whole Adamic family to take place at one and the same time?
2. If so, are they all raised mortal?
3. If all are not raised mortal, how are we to account for it without admitting a judicial judgment before the resurrection? or,
4. Why is one class raised mortal and the other immortal?

Will Br. HIMES himself give us an answer to these questions in the Voice; or, if he prefers it, send them direct to the HERALD OF LIFE? We earnestly desire to harmonize with him and all others so far as our convictions of truth will allow. We oppose no one's views from the love of opposition; and when fairly convinced we are in error, we trust we shall never count any sacrifice too great to exchange it for truth. At present, we are solemnly impressed that the position of "Adventism" is deeply in error on the judgment question; and leads to other conclsions irreconcilable with the testimony of the Bible on the resurrection of the dead.

WILLIAM MILLER AND ANNIHILATION.

THE Advent Herald, in opposing the view of the final destruction of the wicked, says:

> Mr. Miller, the leader in the Advent movement, truthfully said: "The doctrine of annihilation and the soul's unconsciousness in death has been connected, in the minds of some, with the doctrine of the Advent. With this there is no necessary connection. The doctrine of the Advent was the faith of the primitive church; while the doctrine of annihilation was no part of their faith. It evidently arises from a mistaken use of Bible terms, and a stress on words not warranted by parallel Scriptures. . . . That doctrine [of unconsciousness in death] carried out, must lead to a denial of the divinity of Christ; and we find that in all past history, in the different periods when it has come up for a time, it has been connected with that and other heresies." (Memoirs, pp. 333–4.)

In reply to this statement ELD. HIMES, in the Voice of the West, makes an expose which we are glad to see, as it wipes a stain from the memory of Wm. Miller which has heretofore looked to us out of character in so good a man. The following is the expose:

> Father Miller held the common view of the nature of man and doom of the ungodly. He was prejudiced against the opposing view; and this was the more natural because his mind was so fully occupied with the great truth of his early mission, and he feared the introduction of such a doctrine might hinder our mission, and prove a new source of weakness and division, from which we had already suffered much. Time has proved this fear an ungrounded one; and instead of proving a source of weakness, "the life and death question" has been a tower of strength to the Advent cause.
> One by one the old Adventists of the original movement have adopted the view they once called "heresy," until, comparatively speaking, but few of them are left standing on the old Orthodox platform of eternal misery for the lost. We by no means depreciate the Christian character of those who still cling to their erroneous views. We respect them and their work. But still we hope, both for their own sake, and the world's sake, they may yet see, as we have seen, wherein their doctrine dishonors God and his Word, ask his forgiveness, and strive together with us for the truth they now reject.
> The quotation from the Memoirs of Father Miller was written by Br. S. Bliss, while on a visit at Father Miller's house in Low Hampton, N. Y., in August, 1845. The old man was sick at the time, and Br. Bliss wrote the article, shaping it as he deemed best to make it most effective against the "annihilationists," as he called them. Father Miller assented to it, and it was published in The Herald at that time.
> Subsequently Father Miller's views were modified, or, at least, his prejudices. Before the close of his life all his children, and many of his nearest personal friends, had been converted to "the life and death question," and if we may judge by his last conversations with his son, Eld. Geo. W. Miller, (now of Millersburg, Minn.), had the old man lived, he would, with us, to-day, no doubt be an advocate of the Pauline theology of the sleep of the dead and the destruction of the wicked. Therefore Br. Bliss' sharp words in the name of Father Miller must go for what they are worth.

GEN. GEO. W. DEITZLER, Kansas, writes; I do not know to whom I am indebted for the HERALD OF LIFE, which reaches me regularly, and is read with much satisfaction; but I do know I have not ordered or paid for it. If it is mailed to me directly from your office, which I suppose is the case, you will please continue to send it while it or I live. I enclose $5. Please send me a copy of "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST," [etc.]

ANNIHILATION DREADFUL.

A FEW years since the following sentiment was uttered, in his pulpit, by HENRY WARD BEECHER—"I had rather go to hell—I was going to say—than go to annihilation."

He was speaking of the consequences that would follow from one's being disconnected from God, and said, if such disconnection could be entire, "they would go to annihilation." Such a result, to his mind, was awful, as well it might be; and we were glad to find that Mr. Beecher was not of the opinion of some, who say, "To be annihilated is nothing." Persons of this last named sentiment must be persons of very small intellectual development, and seem so near a mere animal being as to be incapable of understanding the magnitude of the glory and enjoyment of an endless life: to such sensualists it may be fortunate that God has suffered their minds, hitherto, to be blinded as to what is the real "wages of sin:" they may need the dread of sensual sufferings, with the idea that such sufferings are to be eternal, to restrain them from sin. Such a doctrine might have been "winked at" in the "times of ignorance" which are passed, when men have been shut up in heathenish darkness, and enveloped by popish superstitions. But now that the system of keeping men in ignorance is passing away, and men will read and think for themselves, the true Bible doctrine of death, as the "wages of sin," needs to be brought out and enforced, if we would save men from real infidelity, for thinking men cannot much longer be made to believe in endless misery; hence, if it is still insisted that the Bible teaches such doctrine, they must and will reject that book. If such is not the result with them, it will be strange indeed.

We hope Mr. Beecher may yet see that such an "entire disconnection from God," as he seemed to think impossible, may take place, and then the awful annihilation may be, and will be, the fate of the sinner. Such a result commends itself, to the mind of an intelligent man, as just and right, if the sinner persists in forsaking God, "the fountain of living waters," etc. Jer. ii., 13.

SECTARIANISM.

To show the inconsistency of the sectarian arrangements with the spirit of Christianity, let us suppose the Lord Jesus to come again personally to earth to preach among men. To which of these churches must he go? Would it be to the Methodists? If so, would the Baptists give up their meetings and "order" to attend his ministry? Who believes they would? Suppose he go to the Baptists—would the Methodists and Presbyterians at once amalgamate with the Baptists? "Adventists," perhaps, might claim he would come to our churches; but to which among the dozens of parties into which they are divided would he go? And if he should go to one only among them, would all the others leave their places to go after him? Would those who can hardly speak peaceably of such as differ from their peculiarities in belief or practice suddenly give up to be led elsewhere? Surely the so-called "Adventists"—take which party you may—are no less sectarian than the older churches, but rather more denunciatory of the two. Would Jesus be allowed to stand in the pulpits of any of these sectarian churches if he preached against any of their division walls, viz., their creeds, whether written or unwritten? If he would preach in none of these churches, must he not preach in the streets, field, or some other unusual place? If he did this, who would go to hear him? Would any of the sectarians leave their churches to go? Perhaps you say—"Certainly—all of them who are Christians." Well, then—suppose he remain and preach in that place: will all these "real Christians" continue to attend his ministry? If so, will there be any one left in the sectarian churches except hypocrites, formalists, and self-deceived souls? If that would be true then, is it not true now that the sectarian divisions are kept up by those classes of professors? And is it not the duty of all "real Christians" to protest against all such arrangements as now part any that would cleave to the personal ministry of Christ? Can Christians be justified in keeping up divisions that would not bear the personal presence of their Lord, and which are a manifest violation of his design in leaving his church in the world, as expressed in his prayer, John xvii.? "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word. That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one; I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me." Shall this prayer ever be answered? It never can be while "real Christians" suffer themselves to be separated and divided by different creeds imposed on them by "the commandments of men." Let every "real Christian," then, ask himself what is his duty in this matter, and act accordingly.

HOW SHALL WE READ?

IT has been a rule with us, for a long time, that words are to have their literal and obvious import, unless there is a manifest necessity for departing from it. On this ground we have maintained the terms life and death—in the Bible—convey the same sense as in common use: life, that of living existence; death, that of cessation of living conscious existence. That these terms are sometimes used in a figurative sense we have never denied; but such cases are exceptions, or cases where the literal meaning would be absurd, and their figurative use is apparent.

Further, we have always admitted, if it could be proved that man has an immortal soul, there would be an irresistible necessity for understanding the terms life and death, in the Bible, in a figurative sense—i. e., in the sense of bliss and misery. But, in the absence of any Scripture proof of man's natural immortality, and with not a single instance throughout the Bible where such a doctrine is affirmed, it is idle and absurd to claim that the terms life and death are employed mystically or figuratively in relation to man's destiny: there is no necessity existing for such a departure from their literal import.

The case may be very different with some other terms, and no absurdity be involved in it. In other cases the literal sense may be the primary idea, but this idea involving a higher, or more spiritual one, the overlooking of which involves the interpreter in the mere "letter," to the neglect of the more important idea of the "Spirit" of God in the communication. Such interpreters lead themselves and their followers into "the ditch" of mere formalism; or, their religion is one of words and outside performances. Such think "gain is godliness;" and if they are aggrandized, or "receive honor one of another," they are quite satisfied with their religious attainments—they become a body without divine life—the life of God within. Such is the inevitable tendency of an adherence to extreme literalism.

Such a course neither Christ nor his apostles gave any countenance to. Some things which seemed of the literal character, as recorded in the Old Testament, they have applied distinctly to things spiritual, or to things of a more purely spiritual dispensation. We have only space for one illustration in this article, but may resume the subject hereafter.

Take the promise of God to David, 1 Chron. xvii., 9–14. "It shall come to pass, when thy days be expired, that thou must go to be with thy fathers, that I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall be of thy sons; and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build me a house, and I will establish his throne forever:" "I will settle him in my house and in my kingdom forever."

Solomon received this promise in extreme literalism, and acted accordingly, aggrandized himself, fell into idolatry, and died—so far as we have positive evidence—in his folly. He said to Hiram, king of Tyre, "Behold I purpose to build a house unto the name of the Lord my God, as the Lord spake unto David my father, saying, Thy son, whom I will set upon thy throne in thy room, he shall build a house unto my name." 1 Kings v., 5.

Here is literalism, which might have done Solomon no harm if he had not rested in it, instead of looking through the figure to the spiritual import of the promise to David. Paul, being spiritual, and inspired too, looks at the matter in its true light. Hear him:

"Christ as a Son over his own house, whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." Heb. iii., 6. "That thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself, in the house of God, which is the church of the living God." 1 Tim. iii., 35. "Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God, and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone, in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." Eph. ii., 19–22.

Had Solomon, as a "wise master-builder," not stopped in mere literalism, but gone forward—as did the great apostle—he might have been saved from his great shipwreck; but he fell by his "strict literal principle of interpretation," and is left as a standing monument to all such confident interpreters and their adherents, who begin by overlooking the spiritual design of literal things, and end in the flesh.

THE WICKED DEAD.

WHILE that class of religionists, rapidly increasing in numbers both in this country and in Europe, who hold to the eminently plain scripture doctrine that "all the wicked will" God "destroy," agree that the penalty for transgression of divine law is death, literal death, they differ somewhat widely respecting God's future dealing with them whose "end is destraction;" some taking the ground that the unrighteous will have no resurrection from the dead; others that they will be raised at, or a period subsequent to the coming of Christ and afterward be destroyed. In the absence of so much as one text from Genesis to Revelation which clearly declares a wicked dead man will have a resurrection, some of those who seek to maintain that theory assign as two reasons why the wicked dead will live again, firstly, that the death men now die is in consequence of Adam's transgression, consequently all who die unforgiven have yet to die for their own also; secondly, that they must be made alive in order to be judged. Let us briefly examine these positions.

Suppose men do now die in consequence of Adam's transgression, what then? Unless we are wrong in our common faith that death, deprivation of life, is the divinely announced penalty for sin, it must be apparent to every candid mind that to take the impenitent out of the very condition specified as the penalty, for the sole purpose of putting them back into it again would be an act so objectless that very few men could be found to practise its like; infinitely less so a God of love and of order. Remember, the penalty is death; not dying; so that though the death men now die were in consequence of Adam's sin, Christ's simple confirmation of that condition, in the case of the impenitent dead, could only be requisite in performing the act of executive judgment, which consigns them to their eternal doom. It is quite evident, however, that the advocates of the reliving of the wicked dead have not entirely freed themselves from the old torment delusion, but cling to the notion that pain, suffering is a part of the penalty proper. But upon the presumption that this is true; that the act of dying, with its attending pains, is a component part of the penalty, does not the theory that men now die wholly and purely because of sin committed by Adam involve manifest injustice? What does scripture say on the subject? It says that when Adam was placed on trial in the garden, he was commanded not to eat of the fruit of a certain tree; that if he ate of it he should surely die; that he did eat of it, thereby transgressing divine law, committing sin; and that he died in accordance with the threat. It cannot be said that he died in consequence of anybody else's sin, for he had no ancestor from whom to inherit any curse. Whose sin did he die for? The Bible could not well be more explicit in its declaration that Adam died for his sin. He must of necessity, therefore, have paid so much of the penalty as consists in the pain of dying. Mark, then, he having died for his sin, suffered the deprivation which was unequivocally stated should be the result of transgression, there is no possibility of getting him up from the dead to suffer a second time for his offences unless the penalty for sin was expressly stated to be to die twice. Are there any who are willing to believe there is the slightest intimation of such a thing in the provision made for violation of the law which God gave to Adam? We think no man would so far jeopardize even a very limited reputation for candor and soundness of judgment as to take the ground that twice dying was the penalty announced for violation of the Edenic law.

Here, then, is one man who can in no possible way be subjected to a conscious punishment beyond what he has already received, without transcending the limit of a plainly expressed penalty, an act which it were unwise, at least, to charge upon a God of justice, saying nothing of love and mercy. Then, too, if Adam, chief of sinners as he was if his crime was so enormous as so impose an extra death upon almost countless millions of his posterity, only dies once for his sins while all the finally impenitent, who live after him, have to die once each for his and their own, it follows that the greater the crime the less the punishment. A great sinner dies once; lesser ones die twice. Is it reasonable or just?

But it may be urged that Adam may have been faithful after the Edenic transgression, and by reason thereof will come forth to eternal life through Christ. That is true, he may. We think it not unlikely the attainment to that glorious state was placed within his reach; but, in the absence of any scripture allusion to the contrary, it is not unreasonable to presume he failed to avail himself of any offer of eternal life; and, whether he did or not, the argument loses no force, for the principle is the same.

When men die they incur the same loss, make the same forfeiture to the claim of violated law that Adam did by his death. So, as Adam died for his sins, suffered the penalty of the law, it follows that his posterity cannot be subjected to an additional death, if that second death be a distinct operation, without an imposition beyond the obvious requirement of the law. There is no avoiding this conclusion, for the Bible gives no account of the penalty first announced having been superseded by another. Where is the authority, then, for saying the finally unforgiven will die twice for transgression? Certainly not in the Bible. No such doctrine is found there. It says of certain members of that class, "they are dead, they shall not live; deceased, they shall not rise." And again, of certain other ones, "they shall sleep a perpetual sleep and not awake, saith the king who is the LORD of hosts." The "LORD of hosts" says this of some who have only died the death which it is contended is wholly because of Adam's sin. Why will men affirm of such as God has declared shall "not awake," shall never live, that they will be raised from the dead to die gain?

One of the frailest arguments ever adduced in support of any theory is the one most general, perhaps, among advocates of universal resurrection, viz., that the wicked dead must be raised in order to be judged. Are all the dead raised to the same kind or quality of life? The answer is, no; the righteous are raised immortal, while the wicked are raised mortal. If this be so, is it to occur by chance, or by design? The dullest mind cannot fail to see at a glance that the two classes must have been judged and determined to their respective conditions while yet dead. Why, then, are the wicked brought up, since they must be judged before their resurrection? Oh, is the reply, "in order to be put to death, that is a part of the judgment." What is a part of the judgment, the act of dying, or the condition of death? If the former, we reply, they have once suffered it. But if it still be urged the first act of dying was because of Adam's sin, and not at all because of their own, then the conclusion becomes inevitable that, after all, the penalty for Adam's sin was not death, or two deaths, even, but as many thousands of millions of deaths as there have been and will be people to die them. Is the conclusion an inviting one? If, on the other hand, it is the latter, the state of death, we say, what must be apparent to every mind, that they are in just that condition both when and after their future is decided. Why, then, we ask, the solemn farce of taking them out of it merely to put them back again? Why? In endeavoring to show some real object in the resurrection of the wicked dead, thus hoping to escape this judgment dilemma, it is claimed by some supporters of the doctrine that both righteous and wicked are raised mortal. Well, if that were true it would be a relief from the difficulty that judgment must necessarily precede resurrection if the two classes come forth to different states. This position possesses the virtue of an approach to self-consistency, but it lacks that indispensable element of all sound argument, truth. Again and again does scripture positively declare that the dead are raised incorruptible, immortal, none of its language affording anything stronger than doubtful inferences to support the theory in question. Can earnest seekers after truth long prefer inferences to positive declarations? This part of our subject has been so exhaustively treated by the Editor in his "Judgment" tract recently published, that no more need here be said. Divest the doctrine of a revival to life of the wicked dead, of the idea of torment, torture and what would there be left? A loathsome thing, from which all would turn. Its best form is hideous, ghastly. The idea that the pain connected with dying forms a part of the penalty proper, is the door through which this error of a universal resurrection is permitted to enter. Better let it go with the rest of the unscriptural torment doctrine, and keep close to the word of God. L. C. T.

THE DECOY SHEEP.

READING in an English magazine lately, we met with an account of a curious device of the London butchers. It is a difficult task, as might be supposed, to drive a flock of sheep through the streets of a large city, where the resemblance is so small to green pastures and country roads. They are liable to be scattered in all directions by the crowd of vehicles, and to turn every few rods down the cross streets, in a manner sorely trying to patience. Hence when the butcher has purchased a number of sheep at the general market, it is no small matter, even with the help of a dog, to get them to his private yard for slaughter. Can any expedient lessen the trouble? A knowledge of the animal's instincts points out a method of relief. A sheep is taken and petted till it becomes wonted to the place, and attached to its owner. It is then used as a decoy, being led to the market place, where the purchase is made of the little flock for the slaughter, and there placed at their head. The butcher then starts for home, the decoy sheep accompanies him, the others instinctively follow, according to sheep-nature, and refuse to be separated, threading their way through streets and lanes, carts and carriages, pleased with following their leader, till they reach the place of death!

We said, just now, that this was according to sheep-nature? Is there nothing like it in human nature? Alas! we see the same device in use on every hand by the great enemy of souls. How few he would entrap without a decoy. Fish do not bite the bare hook. Birds will not enter an empty trap-cage. Even sheep do not wittingly go to the slaughter, but must be enticed there. Sinners love sin but not death, and do not crowd the broad road with any idea that it leads to destruction. Men, like sheep, are gregarious, and prone to go in troops after leaders. One good decoy sheep will conduct a thousand flocks to the slaughter.

Here are young men in a great city, come in multitudes from virtuous homes in the country to learn business and make a fortune. At first they are bewildered with the novelty and excitement, and scarce know which way to turn. They are unaccustomed to city ways, and fearful of danger. But the cunning tempter has his decoy sheep on hand, in some fine looking, dashing companion with whom they make speedy acquaintance. He has lived in the city for several years, and can tell them where to go and what to do. He makes little delay, indeed, in inviting them to accompany him after business hours to haunts of pleasure. They want some place in which to spend their evenings besides the dull boarding house, and the only Christian young men they meet, have nothing to propose but a young people's prayer meeting once a week. So this friend suggests a game of billiards, as innocent, amusing, and affording good exercise, but (good men having provided no other place) takes them for the purpose to where drinking and gambling are the invariable accompaniments. Then he leads the way to saloons, to the mis-called museum, to the regular theatre, to the opera, to the ball room, to the Sunday excursion, to the gambling hells, and finally to the brothel. They are startled at first, but, as he operates gradually, and assures them that all the young men frequent such places, and that if they would cease to be country rustics, and appear city-bred, they must follow the customs of the city, and as he seems to be such a generous, wide-awake, enjoyable friend, they soon lay aside their scruples and follow in his path. Poor fellows! they imagine that they are making great progress in gentility, and are the admired of all beholders; but men of sense, who see them trooping after their leader, pity them as the Londoner does the flock racing through the streets after the decoy sheep.

And so it is with older men, in whom greed of gain, or other depraved passion has taken the place of the intoxication of pleasure. They seldom go their ways singly. Satan leads them in a mass, by their gregarious impulses, and the powerful influence of their favorites. A few prominent merchants will set an evil example in business which will corrupt the trade of a city, and against which few have sfficient character to protest. In politics we see parties ignore the moral principle of measures, and follow blindly their respective leaders. It is this tendency which enables wickedness to lay its plans with so few elements of calculation. It is thought sufficient to decide upon the object desired and the readiest means of gaining it, trusting to the willingness of the mass to do as they are bidden. Prepare the decoy sheep, and the whole flock will follow, through all manner of windings and dangers, and to the very door of death.

But the decoy sheep at last shares the fate of the rest. He grows old, and his place must be supplied with one younger and more active. So, fattened into prime condition, he one day goes to the knife, and his carcass hangs where, through his agency, so much mutton has hung before. And it is the same with his human parallel. The devil does not use his decoys forever. They have their brief day, then wear out and drop swiftly into destruction, replaced by others with fresh attractions. It is so in the haunts of pleasure, in the walks of business, in the temples of ambition. The flocks and the decoys all belong to the butcher, and serve his profit only. The tempters and the tempted all belong to the devil, and are equally his victims in the end.

Men will follow some one. They have their choice, to follow Christ, their true friend and leader, who will conduct them to eternal life, or to rush on after the devil and his decoys, till they reach eternal death!

The foregoing we have taken, with slight omissions, from The Advance. It is very instructive for young and old. There are any number of these "decoy sheep;" really goats of the worst kind. They are found in all places and in all professions, civil and ecclesiastical. We are much pleased with the last paragraph. "Men will follow some one." How true. Even the "decoy sheep" is first led; then becomes a leader unto evil. How few really "follow Christ," even of those who profess to do so. They are in the leading-strings of sect or party. Let them refuse all other leadership except Christ alone. He "will conduct them to eternal life." We thank the Advance for saying that. If they follow evil, or, as the Advance chooses to say, "rush on after the devil and his decoys, they will reach eternal death." Such language is Scriptural, and is truth. Let all, saints and sinners, "abstain from all appearance of evil," as they value life and would shun death, "the wages of sin."

"FUNNY."

WHAT is funny? Let the Advance answer.

"As one of the funny things which it is desirable to find place for now and then, in the midst of more sober reading, we clip its (The Liberal Christian's) closing paragraph: 'Let the doctrine of endless punishment, as laid down in the creeds be preached from the Evangelical pulpits, by men who really believe it, and and feel the danger of it, and there would be such a secession from the Evangelical churches as they have never witnessed; or, what is more likely, the preachers would be dismissed in the most summary manner.'"

Is not "endless punishment," in the form of eternal torment in fire and brimstone, or in remorse of conscience endlessly protracted, a cardinal doctrine in the creed of the Methodist, Congregationalist, and Episcopal churches? Jesus Christ came, did he not, "to save never dying souls" from an eternal hell? A "funny" doctrine this, to preach, is it?

Were this made the chief theme from week to week (as it ought to be, if true) it would put an end to revivals (so called) and cause churches to fall into decay.

Is it a "funny" thing for "Watchmen on the walls of Zion" to suppress the truth of God? What! let "immortal souls" go down—down to eternal death! No, not death, exactly, but "eternal torments!" Where are the preachers "who really believe it, and feel the danger of it?" Where!

Letters and Extracts.

FROM ELD. E. B. TAFT.

SONORA, CAL., June 5, 1868.

BR. STORRS: In my journey to this place, the Lord, in his faithfulness, has been my helper and my guide. This has been manifest in caring for my temporalities, giving me friends, and above all things showing that he is operating upon the hearts and minds of many, inciting them to a more minute study of the Scriptures, that they may know whereof they speak, of the doctrine of "Life only in Christ," one that is made so prominent by the Lord Jesus and his Apostles, yet contemned by so many who profess to be his disciples. Notwithstanding there are these opposers, let the Lord's faithful ones take courage; for the work is his; and it will be completed according to his own purpose. I have met a few of my old friends, here, in the Life views, who are in good spirits, and are contending manfully for the faith once delivered to the saints. I expect to remain in the mountains for a few months, hoping then to become so much restored in health that I shall be able to go on with the work I so much love. May the blessings of our heavenly Father be poured out in large measure upon yourself, and all the dear brethren who are truly engaged in preaching his gospel. Yours in the gospel hope.

FROM LAFAYETTE NORRIS.

CAMPTON, IOWA, June 7, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I send you a new subscriber. He is a young man and a believer in the Advent doctrine. I lent him "LIFE FROM THE DEAD," which he is very much interested in; and has sent it to his parents. I hope they may be led to see the glorious doctrine of future life through Christ to the righteous alone.

It may be news to you, to know that some of the Adventists in the West, who follow the lead of a paper in Boston, Mass., are boldly proclaiming that they can heal the sick by the laying on of hands. One Elder B. is the leader in this matter. He is an "illiterate man, uses slang phrases, and is rough in his speech;" so says one of his followers, Elder P. S. W. D. From what I can learn, his cures are a myth. But he gets a good many followers, who believe in them. If any of the readers of the HERALD know anything about his cures, I wish they would write to the HERALD in relation to the matter; and thus put the over-credulous on their guard. I like the HERALD OF LIFE the best of all papers for its plain matter of fact and common sense articles, to the exclusion of fanaticism and bigotry. Yours truly, looking for Jesus.

FROM ABBIE M. DOUGHTY.

LYNN, MASS., June 25, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Inclosed is $1 to help spread the glorious truth of Life only in Christ. It is a small mite. I will try and send more soon: for I am a lover of the truth; it is all and in all to me. The prayer of Jesus was that his disciples might be sanctified through the truth. I feel a willingness to exchange error for truth at any time, because it is so much better; it will make us free; but error never will. When I came to an understanding of the plan of redemption, or the Gospel of Christ, I could see the character of God more fully than ever before, and could truly exclaim with the beloved diseiple, "God is love." The mission of Christ into the world was not to destroy men's lives, but to save them. Man was in death, and no means by which he could extricate himself therefrom. The life that he possessed, which was animal, not immortal, was forfeited by transgression, and must be given up to meet the demands of the broken law; and in that condition he needed a Saviour to rescue him from the dominion of death. So God, in love, sent his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, or remain in death, but have everlasting life. John iii., 36. That as sin hath reigned unto death, (and it does not reign any farther, there sin leaves man) even so saith the Apostle, might grace, or favor, reign unto (temporal life? no; unto) eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Sin reigns unto death, and there it leaves man. Why? Because the wages of sin is death. Rom. vi., 23. When this present life is given up the debt is paid; for it is all the law demands: the life we get through Christ is not a forfeited life; and he who lives again from the dead, will live through Christ; and consequently will live forever. Truly the Gospel is good news, and glad tidings to all people. No curses; no threatenings; no penalties in the Gospel; they are all in the broken law. The law worketh wrath. Christ came to redeem us from the curse of the law; and all we have to do is to believe on him. Jesus says, he that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day. John vi. If we will be benefited by the death and resurrection of Christ, let us believe on him. If not, we must remain in the congregation of the dead. Prov. xxi., 16. Let us believe and live.

J. HAMILTON, Fredonia, N. Y., writes: I approve of the "Campaign" movement to put in circulation ten thousand each of the "Documents" which set forth so clearly the "Platform" of Truth which we have chosen to stand upon; for they clearly set forth the character of our chosen King; and we will contend against all opposition till he comes, or we sleep in him.

JOSEPH LACIAR, Pa, writes: I send you another subscriber. Thank the good Lord; for the leaven is working, and I hope to send you more names soon. Desiring earnestly to be remembered in your prayers, I am, with love to all, your brother.

"FINE SPEECHES FOR BREAD."

UNDER this heading The Telescope remarks:

The Saviour asked: "What man is there, who if his son shall ask for bread, will give him a stone? Ministers of the gospel often furnish the answer to this question. With too much truth The Watchman and Reflector says the following: "Sometimes we hear sermons where the preacher's aim seems to be to make a fine impression; to present a discourse faultless in structure and delivery; and this main idea crowds out the gospel—not intentionally, but none the less really. We listened a Sabbath ago, to two sermons from the lips of one of our able evangelical ministers, which, as addresses, were admirable, but as sermons were failures; that is, if the object of preaching is to turn sinners unto Christ. Had there been in the congregation a person anxious to know the way of salvation, he could not have learned it from the preacher. There was nothing of Christ, nothing of sin or a Saviour."

The real bread of life is what the famishing world wants. "Christ and him crucified" is the great central theme of the gospel, and no sermon is a true gospel sermon that has not this for its warp and woof.

Is it true that "Christ and him crucified" is the great central theme of the gospel? Did not the prophets search and inquire diligently concerning "the glory which should follow" Christ's sufferings? Is not the trouble with what is presented in these days as "the bread of life," that its real vitality is substituted by that which while it promises life can never give it? In short, would it not seem more like Bible bread, to preach man's mortality, Jesus and the resurrection, his second advent as the only hope, and kindred doctrine, as the apostles did; rather than "the Gospel and water" theology of a Christ crucified to save immortal souls from eternal woe, and take them to heaven at death? We think it would.—Voice of the West.

REPLY TO AN INFIDEL.

AN American traveller, being unexpectedly detained at the mole or quarantine in Odessa, was offered "half of his apartments, and a sofa to lie on," by a young Englishman who acted as translator to the mole. After they had formed intimate acquaintance, and one evening had retired to rest, the traveller asked his friend how he could endure the blasphemy which was so constantly heard there. The young Englishman replied that "as a gentleman these things were disagreeable to him, but as to their being intrinsically wrong, it was no matter of concern to him, as he denied the truth of all revelation, and believed Jesus Christ to be an impostor."

The traveller, without supposing that the remark would be heeded except by courtesy replied, "Either Christ was an impostor or he was not. If he was an impostor, we have the inconceivable phonomenon of a base man practising virtue, self-denial, charity, forgiveness of injuries through his whole life, in spite of scourging, contumely, and even crucifixion. Is it philosophical to suppose that a bad man would take so much pains to make men good? But if he was not an impostor, then he has told the truth and we must believe him."

"Is it possible that I never saw that before?" was the only reply of the young Englishman. But the argument sunk deep into his heart and when the traveller had arrived at Alexandria, he received a letter from the former skeptic acknowledging him as "the best friend he ever had," encouraging him to be equally faithful to others, and praying him not to forget "his Odessa convert."

REV. ROBERT COLLYER AT BOSTON.—We learn from the Liberal Christian that Rev. Robert Collyer, pastor of the Unitarian Church on the North Side of this city, was one of the speakers at the Free Religious Association in Boston, and that he thus publicly and severely lectured himself:

I believe science is the handmaid of Christianity, and that both together they will sweep all things into their bosom—but my reliance has been Christ, as God in man and God to man. I long to be like him in two things. I long to be able to stand up before the rich and the mighty and the proud, and and preserve, as he did, truth and dignity in all their sweetness. I long, too, to be able to emulate his independence and goodness when he sat down with an abandoned woman at the well of Samaria, and talked to her of her wickedness, her duty and her destiny. Ah, Robert Collyer, would you have the courage to seat yourself down beside a public prostitute on the corner of Clark and Lake streets, in Chicago, and talk to her of Christ? I fear you would not. Would you not be looking round to see if Dr. Plummer [Gulliver?] was not on one corner, and Dr. Patton on another, both eager to report that Collyer had been talking to a woman of the town? Collyer, I fear you would.

Anxious to aid Mr. Collyer in realizing his his good aspirations, and willing to remove all stumbling blocks out of his path, we hasten to relieve him from that "fear of man which bringeth a snare," so far as one of the persons named is concerned. We pledge ourselves that whenever we shall see him talking as did Christ at the well of Samaria, with an abandoned woman, in a public place, at noonday, or in any other such place or manner as that in which Christ addressed fallen females, we will report that we saw him engaged in a good work, and a poor outcast entering on the the pathway of hope.—The Advance, Chicago, Ill.

THE "GENEROUS OFFER" REVIVED.

IT will be remembered that the Hon. O. S. HALSTED, last winter made the offer to send his work, "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE," to any subscriber of the HERALD OF LIFE for $2, and himself prepay the postage. The retail price of the work is $3. By accepting the judge's offer, you, in fact, get this invaluable work for a little more than half price; as the author gets but $1.68 after paying postage. The book is one to study; and with it your Bible will be more perfectly understood. The offer is a most generous one, and we hope many more will avail themselves of it. It is not restricted to your taking one copy at this rate. You can have any number you choose to send the money for. Send $2 for each copy; writing your own name and Post Office address plain, and the work will come to you free of any other expense.

Direct your communication to Hon. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad St., NEWARK, N. J.

A PRIEST was intensely anxious for the conversion of his Jewish neighbor, who, not so unwilling to inquire as his race generally, determined to travel to Rome, that he might see the full bloom and beauty of the Church. There was the Holy Father, and there were monks and nuns devoted to a religious life, shedding on all around them the charming influence of their example. There society must be pure, reflecting more of heaven than of earth. He went to Rome, and instead of beholding in reality the beautiful dream of his imagination, he saw ambition and wrangling in holy places, and licentiousness and crime the indelible stain of those who professed better things. Disappointed and sick at heart, he turned back to his home. He sought his friend, and told him his experiences. The priest supposed, of course, that he had lost his convert. But no, the Jew desired immediately to be baptized. He was converted. If Christianity could survive, notwithstanding such exhibitions of it, it must surely be from heaven. A religion which was not from heaven would have perished under this load of reproach. The reasoning of Boccacio's Jew was not bad. If Christianity could have perished, it would have perished at Rome.

DR. PAYSON.

A FINE illustration of Dr. Payson's tact is recorded. At the instance of the females in the family of a distinguished lawyer, Dr. Payson was invited to tea. The lawyer had predetermined the utter exclusion of religious conversation and services from his house on that occasion, and as the evening passed, rallied all his powers to fence such unwelcome matters out. Dr. Payson saw at once his object and determined to foil him. He had in part succeeded, when tea was announced—not in the usual form, at a table, but by the appearance of a servant with a waiter to carry the tea around. Quick as thought, the Doctor, turning to the lawyer, interposed the question: "What writer has said the devil invented the fashion of carrying around the tea to prevent a blessing being asked?" "I don't know," replied the baffled lawyer, "what writer: but if you please, we will foil the devil this time —will you ask a blessing, sir?" The blessing was of course asked, and at the close of the evening, the Scriptures read, and prayer offered—all at the request of the master of the house, who had predetermined their exclusion.

Poetry.

An Acrostic.

Exalted Saviour, at thy feet we bow—
Vouchsafe thy Spirit's aid our suit to bring,
Expecting soon thy face to see: henceforth
No earthly trifles can allure: our faith
Surveys the glory, soon to come, for which
Our waiting hearts, in confidence, cry out—
Come, quickly come, great Prince of Peace, and reign!
On thee alone our hope of life depends;
May we not, daily, look for thy return?
Events foreshow thee, even at the doors
Let not thy people's hope be long deferred:
Our hearts grow sick of carnage, blood and strife.
Regard the tears of thine afflicted few—
Despised and hated—as unfit to live.
Justice and truth are fallen in the streets,
Extortion, violence and wrong prevail;
Scattered to the four winds thy people are—
Unpitied, slandered, poor, despised, oppressed;
Such is their portion, till, at thy return,
A brighter scene shall open to their view:
Nor will the vision tarry long, though now
Delayed, beyond what we so fondly thought.
Content thine own appointed time to wait,
Our wills subdued, to thine we meekly bow,
Much as we long and pray for thy return.
Ere long we know, from what hath been revealed,
Quick as the lightning's flash, thou wilt appear,
Unbar the gates of death, the saints wake up
Immortal, from their slumbers, long or short.
Call home thy hidden ones from every clime,
Known best to thee, who reads and knows the heart.
Let this glad day of triumph soon arrive!
Yet will we wait, and pray, "Thy kingdom come!"
Amid the perils of these passing scenes,
May we not long to share the promised rest?
Exult in prospect of our coming Lord?
Not distant far—and would be welcome now.

Grandpa's Sermon.

"I never did, I never can, and I never will! That's just the English of it," and down went Harry Haydon's book upon the floor, with a jerk that sent the leaves flying in all directions, while the neglected slate and pencil lay beside him untouched, as if saying, "We'll help you all we can if you'll only give us a chance;" but all to no purpose. Harry had no idea of giving anything a chance for the present but his fit of ill-nature. "The hateful things!" he muttered, as he gave them a push indicative of anything but gratitude for their good services. "I wish I never could lay eyes on them again. If there's anything in this world I do despise, its arithmetic."

"Hoity toity!" said Grandpa Gray, leaning back in his chair, "What's all this about!"

Now, it so happened in his excitement that Harry had forgotten his grandfather had ears, and pretty keen ones, too, under the red silk handkerchief he had thrown over his head to take his after dinner nap; so he blushed a little, and stammered a good deal as he answered, "I forgot you were there, Grandpa. But I can't help it! This plaguy —I mean—stupid arithmetic sets me nearly crazy. What with fractions, and compound interest, and the dear only knows what else, I say it's enough to drive a fellow out of his senses.

"Whether it is enough, I question, Harry. That it has done so in your case there seems but little doubt," said the old gentleman gravely, looking over the top of his spectacles, at the discomfited boy.

"But, Grandpa," persisted he, not willing to give up his case without a little argument, "You didn't have to do these horrid sums when you were a boy."

"Not perhaps these identical ones, but those quite as hard, I imagine; and I'll tell you how I did them. Walked three miles to school in winter—for in summer I didn't get the chance—and often after doing up chores enough to make a hard day's work for you, Harry, would puzzle out my lesson by the light of a pine knot—candles were a rare luxury in those days—and thought myself lucky if I was allowed to remain in school until plowing began in the spring."

"Why, Grandpa, I thought you were a rich man," said Harry, his big eyes wide open.

"Not rich, my boy, but enough, thank God: for He it is who has given me all that I possess. But, under Him, I owe all my prosperity to the very sums I heard you just now abusing so roundly."

"How so, Grandpa? What do you mean? asked master Harry, eagerly.

"I'll tell you, my boy, and it's a story I hope you'll remember.

"There was a difficult example given to our class one day, so difficult indeed that I think the teacher hardly expected us to do it —at least we all thought so, and some even declared, from the start, do it they could not and would not. But I felt my cheeks get very red, and I suppose my eyes must have sparkled, for I saw the teacher smiling at me, as I determined that that sum should be done before I slept, if it took all the pine knots I could scrape together to light me through it. Starting for home, as I turned the corner, I said aloud, 'I have done as much; I can do as much, and I will do as much'—when up I ran straight against Squire Bradshaw, the man of the village, and of whom we stood in great looking very good-natured, while I, blushing and stammering, for I was a timid lad at best, told him the story.

"'What's that you can do, John?' said he, awe.

"'That's right, my boy, that's right!' he said, putting his big hand upon my shoulder. 'Call in as you pass to-morrow, and let me know how goes it. Be sure and come, for I have a good memory,' and I knew he had. As I bade him good night, my resolution, which was strong before, grew ten times stronger."

"Did you do it, Grandpa? Did you go the next day? What did he say to you?"

"Softly, Harry; one question at a time. Yes, I did do it, and it proved the hardest fought battle of my life. Long after all were sleeping soundly, there I sat working, then rubbing out all that I had done, and at it again, though the room grew cold before I knew it. But the answer came, and all right, and that would have warmed me if I had been ten times as cold. The next morning on my way to school I stopped as I had promised, though I felt a little shy. There stood the Squire by the stove, warming his hands.

"'Well, how goes it?' was his greeting.

"'I got it, sir!' and with all my bashfulness I held up my head higher than I had ever done before.

"'Got it—Eh!' and the old Squire, with his hands in his pockets, stood a full minute looking steadily at me till I grew hot all over. 'You've got the right sort of spirit, lad. It suits me. Come and see me to-morrow noon.'

"Well, to cut a long matter short, I went. From that day, to use Bob Gridley's words, 'my fortune was as good as made,' for the Squire, who was a shrewd business man, honest and reliable, took me at once into his employ, giving me in winter the benefit of school. There I staid until I started for myself, with a nice little sum as a nest egg."

"Wasn't that splendid, Grandpa!"

"Very good, Harry, but not the best. The Squire was an earnest Christian, and not only did he look after my temporal welfare, but my spiritual. There was a revival that spring, and I, with many others, halted between two opinions. I could not say 'Yea, Lord.' Then the Squire preached me a sermon. 'John,' said he, 'I'll take your own words for my text. You could, and did what you resolved to do, and gained for this world. Will you fail when eternity is at stake?' Night and day these words kept ringing in my ears, and I found no peace, until I laid down the burden of my sins at the Saviour's feet, and gave up all into his hand. I firmly believe when the Book shall be opened at the last day, many who shall stand at the 'left hand' will acknowledge that through want of resolution the great battle of life was lost, for no one gains the crown without a struggle."

"But, Grandpa," said Harry, very thoughtfully, "it seems strange that such a little thing as doing or not doing a sum should make any difference."

"No, Harry, that's just where you're mistaken. It's the little things that make the big ones. If we commence by giving up to little trials, how shall we gain strength to battle against greater?"

"That's so, Grandpa. I declare it makes me feel awful solemn, though. I never thought of it so before."

"And will never think lightly about it again, I hope, my boy," said Grandpa Gray. "Now get your cap, and on your way to school remember Grandpa's sermon."

That he did remember it, few who knew him could have doubted, and often in after years he has declared that all the steady industry and patient perseverence he possessed he owed to the teachings of Grandpa Gray.

—The Advance.

Prayer Answered.

In one of the cottage houses of a densely peopled village in the West Riding of Yorkshire, years ago, a pious woman was sitting waiting the return of her husband from his daily toil. It was almost midnight; her children were in bed—they were accustomed to rise early, from the eldest to the youngest, to add to the common stock—a stock diminished by the intemperance of the father, who, for some time, had been in the habit of spending his evenings at a neighboring public house. His wife was an industrious woman, and the duties of her family had engaged her attention up to that hour. She put away some articles of clothing she had been mending for one of the children; and, wearied in mind and body, anxiously waited for the well known step of her husband. Her thoughts wandered back to her early wedded life; they were both at that time thoughtless and gay. She thought of the gradual estrangement from home of her once devoted husband; of the birth of her first child; and how, when watching over it, she had been led to think of the prayers of a pious mother; how she, too, had knelt and prayed for the forgiveness of sins, and obtained mercy, through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and how she had been enabled to hold on her troubled way, at times rejoicing even in tribulation. She had prayed long for her husband's conversion, and, thus far, saw no answer to her prayers; but her confidence in God remained unshaken; and now, placing the Bible (her solace and joy since she had found the way of peace) on the seat of the arm-chair, she knelt and read some of the precious promises of God; then, pouring forth her soul in simple child-like prayer, such as only a woman could have offered, she rose, refreshed, strengthened, and calmed. Throwing a shawl over her head, she wended her way to the too well-known public house. As she raised the latch, the clock struck one.

Her husband was sitting in the bar with some of his fellow workmen and the landlady, when she entered. In an angry tone he bade her go home. The landlady said, "Wait a little, your husband will go with you." She advanced to the table where they were sitting, and said in a calm voice to the landlady:

"Mrs. ——, seven years is a long time to wait for anything, is it not?"

"Yes," said the landlady, "but fourteen years is longer, is it not?"

"Yes," answered the wife, "but twenty-one years is longer still. I have waited and prayed twenty-one years for the conversion of my husband; and as sure as he is sitting in your bar, I shall live to see him pass this house and have no inclination to enter; for God will answer my prayer."

She turned to leave the room, and her husband followed her; but no angry word passed his lips—he seemed to quail before her.

About this time, the Rev. J. Rattenbury was stationed at Leeds. On the Sabbath following the night just mentioned, Martin —— was induced to accompany his praying wife to hear him. The text announced was the pious resolution of Ruth; "Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." The word came home with power, the arrow of conviction sank deep into his soul. For several days he groaned for mercy; but the hour of deliverance came.

"The spirit answered to the blood,
And told him he was born of God."

On the Sunday after his conversion, Martin returned from the chapel to his own happy home, with a firm step—the mid-day meal was spread upon the table—children were already seated: but his heart was full. "Children," said he, "your mother's prayers are now answered. I have passed that house where I have spent so much time and money, without the least design to enter. Let us praise the Lord together." They fell upon their knees—he by the arm-chair, on the spot which had been, in times past, a Bethel and an Ebenezer to his wife—and, with joyful hearts, they two raised their hearts and voices in gratitude and praise to God, who had plucked him as a brand from the burning; alike acknowledging his weakness, and asking strength to stand in the hour of temptation.

God heard those prayers: and Martin —— became as eminent for piety as he had before been prominent in the service of Satan.

The Idolatry of Wealth.

Wealth is the goddess whom all the world worshippeth. There is many a city in our empire, of which, with an eye of apostolic discernment, it may be said, that it is wholly given over to idolatry. If a man look no higher than to his money for his enjoyments, then money is his god. It is the god of his dependence, and the god upon whom his heart is staid. Or, if apart from other enjoyments, it, by some magical power of his own, has gotten the ascendency, than it is an actual supplanting of the living God. He is robbed of the gratitude that we owe him for our daily sustenance; for, instead of receiving it as if it came direct out of his hand, we receive it as though it were the gift of a secondary agent, to whom we ascribe all the ability and independence of God.

This wealth, in fact, obscures to us the character of God, as the real, though unseen author of our various blessings; and, as if by material intervention, does it hide from the perception of nature, the hand which feeds, and clothes, and maintains us in life, and in all the comforts and necessaries of life. It just has the effect of thickening still more that impalpable veil which lies between God and the eye of his senses. We lose all discernment of him as the giver of our comforts, and coming, as they appear to do, from that wealth which our fancies have raised into a living personification, does this idol stand before us, as a substitute for that Great Being, with whom it is that we really have to do. All this goes both to widen and to fortify that disruption which has taken place between God and the world. It adds the power of one great master idol to the seducing influence of all the lesser idolatries.

When the liking and the confidence of men are toward money, there is no direct intercourse, either by the one or the other of these affections, towards God; and in proportion as he sends forth his desires, and rests his security on the former, in that very proportion does he renounce God as his hope, and God as dependence.

And to advert for one moment to the misery of this affection, as well as to its sinfulness, he, over whom it reigns, feels a worthlessness in his present wealth, after it is gotten; and when to this we add the restlessness of a yet unsatiated appetite, lording over all his convictions, and panting for more; when to the dullness of his actual satisfaction in all the riches he has, we add his still unquenchable desire for riches that he has not; when we reflect that as, in pursuit of wealth, he widens the circle of his operation, so he lengthens out the line of his open and hazardous exposure, and multiplies along the extent of it those vulnerable points from which another and another dart of anxiety may enter into his heart; when he feels himself floating on an ocean of contingency, on which, perhaps, he is only borne up by the breath of a credit, that is fictitious, and which, liable to burst every moment, may leave him to sink under the weight of his overladen speculation; when suspended on the doubtful result of his bold and uncertain adventure, he dreads the tidings of disaster in every arrival, and lives in continual agony of feeling, kept up by the crowd and turmoil of his manifold distractions, and so overspreading the whole compass of his thoughts as to leave not one narrow space for the thought of eternity; will any beholder just look to the mind of this unhappy man, thus tossed and bewildered, and thrown into a general unceasing frenzy, made out of many fears and agitations, and not say, that the bird of the air which reflects its unreflecting song, and lives on the fortuitous bounty of Providence, is not higher in the scale of enjoyment than he? and how much more, then, the quiet Christian beside him, who in possession of food and raiment, has that godliness with contentment, which is great gain—who, with the peace of heaven in his heart, and the glories of heaven in his eye, has found out the true philosophy of existence; has sought a portion where alone a portion can be found, and in bidding away from his mind the love of money has bidden away all the cross and all the carefulness along with it.—Dr. Chalmers.

Babylon.

Babylon stood on a large plain, in a very fat and rich soil. The walls were in thickness eighty-seven feet, in height three hundred and fifty feet, (authors differ as to the height of the walls,) and in compass sixty miles. These walls were drawn round the city in the form of an exact square, each side of which was fifteen miles in length, and all built of very large bricks cemented with bitumen, a glutinous slime arising out of the earth of that country, which binds much stronger and firmer than mortar itself.

In every side of this great square, were twenty-five gates; that is, one hundred in all, which were all made of solid brass. From the twenty-five gates in each side of this great square, went twenty-five streets; in straight lines to the gates, which were directly over against them, in the opposite side: so that the whole number of the streets was fifty, each fifteen miles long, whereof twenty-five went one way, and twenty-five the other, directly crossing each other at right angles. The streets next to the wall were about two hundred feet broad; the rest were about one hundred and fifty. The whole city was cut into six hundred and seventy-six squares, each of which was two miles and a quarter in circumference. The houses were all three or four stories high, and beautified with all manner of ornament toward the streets. Babylon was greater in appearance than in reality, near one half of the city being taken up in gardens and other cultivated lands as we are told.

A branch of the river Euphrates ran quite across the city, from the north to the south side; on each side of which was a wall of the same thickness as the walls that went around the city. In these walls, over against every street that led to the river, were gates of brass. These gates were always open in the day-time, and shut in the night.

There was also a bridge across the river, at the ends of which were two palaces. The old palace which stood on the east side of the river, was three miles and three quarters in compass; near which stood the temple of Belus. The new palace which stood on the west side of the river opposite to the other, was seven miles and a half in compass. It was surrounded with three walls, one within the other, with considerable space between them. In this last palace were the hanging gardens. They contained a square of four hundred feet on each side, and were carried up in the manner of several large terraces, one above the other, till the height equalled that of the walls of the city.

Another of the great works of Babylon, was the temple of Belus. A prodigious tower stood in the middle of it, six hundred feet in height. It is asserted that this tower much exceeded the greatest of the pyramids of Egypt in height.

Some authors believe that this is the very tower that was built there at the confusion of the languages; and the rather, because it is attested that this tower was all built of bricks and bitumen, as the Scriptures tell us the tower of Babel was.

Take Freely.

A ship was sailing in the southern waters of the Atlantic, when her crew saw another vessel making signals of distress. They bore down toward the distressed ship and hailed them.

"What is the matter?"

"We are dying for water," was the response.

"Dip it up, then!" was answered. "You are in the mouth of the Amazon River!"

There those sailors were thirsting, and suffering, and fearing, and longing for water, and, supposing that there was nothing but the ocean's brine around them, when, in fact, they had sailed unconsciously into the broad mouth of the mightiest river on the globe, and did not know it. And though to them it seemed that they must perish with thirst, yet there was a hundred miles of fresh water all around them, and they had nothing to do but to "dip it up."

Jesus Christ says: "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink." "And the Spirit and the Bride say, come, and let him that heareth say come, and whosoever will let him come, and take of the water of life freely." Thirsting soul, the flood is all around you; "dip it up!" and drink, and thirst no more.—Earnest Christian.

Wilful Children.—Be sure to give no commands of which you cannot enforce obedience. The powers of resistance possessed by some little children are truly extraordinary; be careful not to arouse them. A spirit of antagonism, when once awakened, may never again become dormant through life. Once let a child conquer you, and it will never forget the lesson. Let your commands, then, be few, and insist on obedience to them.

Our Israelitish Origin.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Professor Wilson, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we endorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage, six cents.

A Mob Dispersed by a Joke.

When an officer of the government of the Revolution, the first Napoleon had been ordered out to disperse a body of rioters. Having drawn up his soldiers and some guns across the street, he waited their advance. They at length appeared, sweeping down on him and his party like a roaring torrent. The artillerymen, with their port-fires, stood ready at his signal to pour showers of grape into the body of the mob. Unwilling to shed blood, he stepped out from his men to reason with the suffering and misguided people, and soon found himself vis-a-vis with their head, a virago of a woman, whose appearance presented a remarkable contrast to his own. She was of great size, and enormously fat; while he, always very little, was at that time so thin, as well as small, that he was known by the soubriquet of "La Petit Caporal." He remonstrated with the lady; but she replied with volleys of abuse, telling him that while she and other honest, hard-working people were starving, such idle fellows as he and his soldiers were fattening on the best of the land. With that eagle eye and remarkable promptitude which afterward turned the fate of many a battle-field, Napoleon saw at once the weak point of his adversary's position. He paused till she was out of breath. Then taking off his hat, he bowed to the mob; and, placing his own thin figure beside that of his fat opponent, he asked them to say whether the good lady or he looked most like starving? As happens in more respectable assemblies than mobs, and elsewhere than in witty France, a good-humoured joke won the day; and the people, for the time at least, quietly dispersed.

How to Make an Oath Strong.

On the accession of a new auditor in one of our custom-houses, several years ago, he found considerable looseness in the machinery by which the fishing bounties were paid at that establishment. He determined to correct the proceedings, and then return with joy to the original and honest state of things. Be it known that the oath required of an applicant for this bounty is a long, rude compilation of solemnities, and had usually been sputtered over with indelicate and unseemly haste. One day a blustering and confident-looking skipper came to the desk with his bundle of papers, looking as if he had robbed the circumlocution office, and wanted some bounty. The new auditor rose to a tall majesty, took the great book of oath in his hand and, fixed his keen eye on Mr. Skipper, requested him to uncover his head, hold up his right hand, and repeat after him the oath as he read it. They had not travelled more than half way through the serious business when the hand of the skipper fell as if his arm had been struck by a chain shot. "You may stop there," he exclaimed; "I can't swear to any more of that. Give me back the papers." He nervously grasped the package, hurried out of the office, and to this day his fate and reflections are unknown.—Cyclopædia of Commercial and Business Anecdotes.

Relative Duties.

It is incumbent on every Christian to ascertain for what he is qualified, and what service he is called to perform for the body of which he is a member. You can easily conceive what would be the consequence, in the human body, should the feet attempt to perform the work of the hands, or the hands the office of the eye. Almost equally pernicious and ridiculous are the consequences occasioned by the self-ignorance, vanity, or false modesty of many Christians. They either do not know their place, or if they do, they will not perform the duties of it. Hence, some will attempt to perform the duty of social prayer, or of exhortation, or of expounding the Scriptures, whom God never designed, and therefore never qualified for that work, and who, of course, cannot perform it in an edifying, acceptable manner; while others, whom he has thus qualified, for some cause or other, decline attempting it. Hence it is too often the case that a church of Christ, instead of resembling a well-organized body, in which the several members know and keep their place, and perform its duties, resembles a disorderly family, in which no one knows his employment, and of course there is nothing but confusion and complaint.

It lightens the stroke to draw near to Him who handles the rod.

He who sins against men may fear discovery, but he who sins against God is sure of it.

Do but the half of what you can, and you will be surprised at the result of your diligence.

Franklin, the St. Benjamin of the typographical profession, made one of the greatest blunders on record in his day. In putting to press a "form" of the Common Prayer, the letter "c" dropped out of the passage, "we shall all be changed in the twinkling of an eye," without his noticing it. When the book came into use, what was the consternation of the devout when they read, we shall all be hanged in the twinkling of an eye."

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind —willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity; by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or, The Wicked Dead remain eternally under death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letters to a Clergyman; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburg, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for 2 cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our own expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

THE Saviour inquired of the hypocritical Pharisees and Sadducees, "How is it that you cannot discern the signs of the times?" This inquiry implies that the indications of the times, if carefully observed and inquired after, will show clearly the position we occupy in the world's history, and need not be mistaken. The times in which men live are to determine, in a great measure, their course of conduct; for it will appear in the course of our remarks that what may be proper and right to be done in one age, or in one period of an individual's life, may be exceedingly improper and wrong to be done in another age or period.

We may illustrate the truth in various ways. For example—a man may go to sea at once, when his vessel is loaded, if wind and tide favor him, and there are no indications of a disastrous storm about to burst over him; but should such indications appear, so as not to be mistaken by a careful observer of the signs, would he do well to disregard them and rush out to sea, perilling all, rather than delay the commencement of his voyage? And if he should thus disregard the signs of the coming storm, and launch forth, and is wrecked and all lost in the tempest, is he not justly stigmatized as a fool for his course? And is he not blame-worthy? Did not Paul censure the centurion of the vessel which carried him prisoner to Rome, because he disregarded the sign he had given him, that if he loosed from a certain port it would be attended with loss and damage? See Acts xxvi.

Again—the farmer when about to gather his crops, or the fruits of the earth, carefully watches the signs of the weather, waiting for favorable indications to reap down his fields. He will not be guilty of the folly of reaping down his ripe grain, when there are indications of a storm immediately upon him. He watches with care and solicitude signs to satisfy his mind as to the course he is to pursue, and he is governed in his operations by the conclusions at which he arrives in his observations. Does he not act wisely in doing so?

Let us now take Scripture illustrations. Of Noah it is said, Heb. xi., 7, "By faith Noah being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith."

Noah was warned of a coming flood, or had some sign or token, by word or otherwise, of that coming event. He heeded it, and prepared an ark to the saving of his house, and we all say he was wise in doing so. But suppose he had disregarded the sign, or warning, would he not have perished with the ungodly? And we here remark, to illustrate the principle we laid down at the outset, that though it might have been very proper and right for Noah to have bought land and built houses before he received the warning or sign of the flood, it would have been folly and madness for him to do so afterward, and full evidence that he did not believe the flood was coming. And what a sorry sight it would have been for Noah to have been preaching a flood at hand, and instead of giving his attention to building the ark had spent his time in buying farms, building houses, factories, railroads, or hunting for gold mines. Surely a scoffing world might justly have said he was either a hypocrite or a fool.

Let us look at another case, Heb. xi., 24, 26, "By faith, Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward."

Moses understood the signs of the times. He knew the period of the bondage of Abraham's seed in a land not theirs was near its accomplishment, and he understood that the nation that oppressed them, about that time was to be judged, and Israel brought out, or delivered. Observing these signs of the times, he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; or, refused the throne of Egypt, the pleasures of which he saw could only be enjoyed for a season. At a previous period, and under different circumstances, it might have been right and proper for Moses to occupy a place at Pharaoh's court; but the time had come—the signs had appeared—that Egypt was to be judged and Israel delivered. If Moses believed this, could he consistently continue at Pharaoh's court, and acknowledge himself the son of Pharaoh's daughter? Hitherto there had been no harm or wrong in his doing so, but now the case is different. Has he faith in God's word or not? He has; and changes his course of life, and departs from a position he could no longer occupy with safety. It is true he was guilty of an act of indiscretion, but even that was overruled to separate him from a position that to him was full of danger. When Moses came from his forty years' retirement in Midian to demand of Pharaoh to let Israel go, suppose in connection with that demand he had daily been bargaining with the Egyptians to buy their land, and contracting with them to build him houses, would that have been consistent with his professed faith that God was about to plant Israel in the land of Canaan—the promised land? Surely such a course would have been highly inconsistent, yet it might have been perfectly proper in the early part of Moses' life, but the signs of the times forbid it now.

We take another example. When the Jews were carried away captive into Babylon for seventy years, God, at the commencement of their captivity, expressly commanded them to build houses in Babylon, and dwell in them, and seek the peace of the city where they might dwell. See Jer. xxix. Hence it was right, proper, and their duty to do so at that time. But, by and by, the times indicate that they are soon to return to Palestine: would it be proper for them to be purchasing fields and building houses to dwell in, as if they were still to continue in Babylon? True, many of them did, and of course did not return with their brethren who went out of captivity; they had no faith or no inclination to share the fortunes of their brethren who left Babylon to return to Jerusalem. Did they act faith in God's promise of restoration? We have introduced this case as illustrating our principle that what may be right and proper to be done at one time, is neither right nor proper at another, and would be a mark of great folly, if not of wickedness.

We might illustrate our principle with other examples, but we judge these are sufficient for our purpose; we proceed, therefore, with the application. The Lord Jesus Christ is to return to this earth, and is to receive the throne of his father David; the present age is to end, and a new order of things is to be established on earth. We shall not stop here to prove these points, believing a large portion of our readers embrace them as settled truths, though they may differ somewhat as to the order and character of the events of the coming age, while nearly all of them will admit, a very great change is coming over the world. Believing, then, that the personal advent of Christ to the earth the second time, and that a great change is to take place in the world at that time, are events to be realized at some period; and seeing great convulsions now going on in the earth, does it not become us to be wise, and inquire what these commotions indicate? or of what times are they the signs? And if satisfied that they are signs of the kingdom of God being "nigh at hand"—that fifth universal empire so clearly exhibited in Dan. ii. and vii., and shadowed forth in the Book of Revelation—does it not become us to regulate our pursuits and course of life in agreement with such evidence and such a revolution as the establishment of the kingdom of God on earth implies? We should not suppose any sane man could give any other than an affirmative answer.

The point then to settle is—Do the events of the times in which we live indicate the soon bringing in of the kingdom of God, or reign of Christ personally upon the earth? In answering this inquiry we do not design to go formally over the prophecies that relate to the first four universal monarchies set forth in Dan. ii. and vii., as those topics have been to the minds of most of our readers fully presented, and there can remain no reasonable doubt but those four monarchies have had their day, and passed away, and that we have been for many centuries in the divided state of the fourth, i. e., Europe divided into a number of petty monarchies, amazingly controlled by a mongrel power, symbolized by a "horn having eyes as a man." This power is acknowledged by all Protestants to be the Politico-Ecclesiastical power of Rome. This power is again symbolized in Rev. xiii., by a beast rising out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns. This description marks the time of the development of the politico-ecclesiastical power of Rome as coming into existence in the divided state of the fourth, or Roman empire, when kingly governments were in existence, as the crowns upon the horns indicate.

In Rev. xvii., we are presented with another aspect of the same power, it is the politico-ecclesiastical power of Rome, after some of the kingly powers of the divided Roman empire had fallen, so that the scarlet colored beast there, though it has seven heads and ten horns, is presented without any mention of crowns at all, perhaps not because it had no crowns on any of its horns, but because some of them had become republican at the time "the judgment of the great whore" is to take place. It is evident John was shown that power at a period just prior to its destruction, and while the seventh vial of the seven last plagues was being poured out. At that time he was shown a corrupt woman—a corrupt ecclesiastical power—sitting upon a scarlet-colored beast—a bloody secular power—full of names of blasphemy. To mark its location on earth it has seven heads and ten horns, showing that it is Roman, and can answer to no other power in existence than the Papal, civil and ecclesiastical power combined, as seen in the symbol of a corrupt woman, riding and directing a bloody beast.

This corrupt woman, who has a name written upon her forehead "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and Abominations of the Earth," was riding and governing the beast that had been in the bottomless pit, but ascended out of it just prior to the aspect it presented in chapter xvii. The same power, under another aspect, in Rev. xiii., went into captivity or descended into the bottomless pit. Afterward this beast was reinstated or ascended out of the bottomless pit, though under another aspect: it was the eighth king, though in fact of the seven. On this beast the harlot is riding at the time her judgment overtakes her. The woman includes the city where her abominations have been concocted, and from whence they have been carried into execution: and, also, very likely, all those kings of the earth, or old Roman empire, that have committed fornication with her by upholding her spiritual wickedness and bloody persecutions.

Hence Rome itself, i. e., the city, may be utterly destroyed in the conflict, as was ancient Babylon, which was a type of it; and then one principal city after another, whose rulers had sustained papal civil authority, will meet with a like destruction; and Paris may be the second to fall, and so on, till they are all overthrown, and Europe is a desolation, as the prophecy seems to indicate it will be. This would bring in that state of anarchy which the Scriptures seem to teach as immediately preceding the establishment of a fifth universal monarchy—the kingdom of God—or the personal reign of Christ on the throne of his father David, which Jehovah has promised to give him, in spite of the rage of kings and rulers of the earth, of whatever form their government may be.

We do not feel justified, till we shall have further developments, in going more into details or particulars of coming events. The details may vary from any of our calculations, but the great fact that the scarlet-colored beast is soon to go into perdition, or be utterly destroyed, together with the woman who has been its rider, and that the reign of Christ is to follow, to our mind, admits of no doubt. It may, however, be several years before the whole work is accomplished; but it is nevertheless now in a process of accomplishment.

If these things are so, can we live in the same course of management of our temporal affairs that might have been justifiable and proper before the signs of the times indicated that this age is drawing to a close, and that the kingdom of God and the reign of Christ on earth and under the whole heaven is about to be opened? Let conscience do its work, and let us see to it that we do not slight its warning voice in these perilous times.

THE HOPE OF ISRAEL—THE HOPE OF THE WORLD.

. . . MILLENARIANS are not so perpetually in trouble about questions of interpretation, as their opponents appear to be. They believe, that when God speaks to men, in the language of men, He means as He says, and speaks the truth. When He says that He will send Jesus Christ at the times of the restitution, they see no reason for wresting the passage from its plain meaning, by saying that the state of things will be, as if the Lord Jesus should so come in like manner as He ascended.

If it is said, "The kingdom of God is within you," this is true, and has been in all past ages, and will be in all the ages to come, so far as His people are concerned. They are loyal at heart, yet there has ever been an outward development, as under the Patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations, and as is now the case in the visible church. Why then may there not be an outward visible manifestation in the age to come? The two things are perfectly consistent. But there is another answer to this oft-repeated objection. When Christ said to the Pharisees, as in our version, "The kingdom of God is within you," did He mean to say, that it was in the hearts of those bitter enemies? Rather did He not mean to say, as the word is rendered in the margin, "The kingdom of God is among you;" in your midst? As also John said to them, "There standeth One among you." The king himself was there. This accords with His own words, "Be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you." Besides there is still another answer to this objection. It is declared in the plainest and most positive terms, that this kingdom will not be set up, until the powers symbolized by the toes of the image, and the ten horns of the great Roman beast, are about to be destroyed. At that time the Son of man is to be seen coming in the clouds of heaven, when an endless dominion is to be given Him by the "Ancient of Days;" then, and not till then, do the saints with Him take the kingdom and possess it forever. The objection has not even sand for a basis.

If it is urged that the kingdom of Christ is not of this world, it is doubtless true. World means age. "My kingdom is not of this age;" of the present order and race of men; which plainly implies that He will have a kingdom hereafter. In the dispensation of the ages to come, all are to be put under his sway. He has gone "to receive the kingdom, and to return." "Thy kingdom come," has been the prayer of centuries, and equally, "Thy will be done on earth as in heaven." This part of the petition will be verified, when the other is accomplished. Not before then will the throne of David be reoccupied, and the government of the whole world be administered "with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." The objection therefore rests on an entire misconception of the passage quoted, and is of no weight.

If it is objected that this view of the coming and reign of Christ is based on a literal construction of the Scriptures, it is answered; this is the only rule which the Lord God of the Bible has sanctioned, and this He has signed and sealed with his own ring and signet. In a multitude of cases, He has declared the end from the beginning, and thus far, fulfilled every one of them to the letter. Not one jot or tittle, in the long track of centuries has failed. The inference is hence infallibly certain that every remaining word will be as literally verified. Why should not the second coming of Christ to reign be as real, as His first coming to suffer? The providence of God has hence stamped this rule of interpretation with the seal of truth. Every passage means as it says, taken in its plain grammatical construction. This is what is meant by the literal fulfilment of Scripture. We have in the Bible plain language, figures of speech, and symbols. When it is said that the ram and he goat came in collision, no one can doubt the meaning. The ram was the standard of the Medo-Persian, and the he goat of of the Grecian. Symbols are representative. Figures of speech are used to give force and beauty to language. "Judah is a lion's whelp." No doubt here, Judah had some of the qualities of a young lion—courage and strength. Plain language needs no interpretation, unless some theory requires its perversion from its obvious meaning. Certain it is, that no passage can be regarded as figurative, which has in it no figure of speech; and consequently the objection has no foundation.

If it is urged, that the views presented are tinged with carnality and sensuousness, it is answered, they are what the Gospel represents the kingdom of Christ to be. If to be like the Lord Jesus on the renewed earth, made beautiful, and adorned with all loveliness, and in glorified bodies, fashioned like to his own glorious body, as He appeared to Isaiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, the three on the Holy Mount, and to John in Patmos, be indeed carnal and sensuous; so be it, even so, amen. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly; and hasten on that day, with all its blessedness and beauty. If any choose not such a residence because of its carnality, doubtless they can have leave to retire. Some there were, when He was on earth, who had such an exalted opinion of their dignity and importance, that they did not regard Him as sufficiently refined and strict for elevated society. But truly this idea of carnality so often and so flippantly urged against the coming and reign of Christ on earth, is so perfectly unreasonable and frivolous, as to be unworthy a serious thought. It has no weight.

If it is said that this view is Jewish, it is answered again: such Judaism is that of the whole Bible. Patriarchs and prophets were Jews. The three Marys, and their associates of blessed memory, were Jews. The apostles were Jews. Christ Himself was a Jew. And when the Gentile church is all gathered in from the east and the west, from the north and the south, they are to sit down in the kingdom of God, with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, the fathers of the whole Jewish people. How blinding is prejudice! Just as blinding now as eighteen hundred and fifty years ago! Because a thing is Jewish, it does not certainly follow that it is to be rejected. Multitudes who scoff at such Judaism will yet be glad to sit in that kingdom with Jews. "Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you; for we have heard that God is with you." To say nothing of carnality, how exceedingly Jewish! Ah! but the Jews at the time of Christ made a sad mistake! Doubtless they did. What then? It cannot make the promise and oath of God of none effect. The Gentiles appear to be in the way of making a mistake equally fatal. The Jews rejected a visible suffering Messiah. Gentiles reject his coming in person to execute his kingly office. The Jews looked for him in this character, but denied him in the other. Gentiles accept him in his humiliation, but deny him in his glorious visible reign. The Jews explained away all that was said of a suffering Redeemer, and the Gentiles explain away all that is said of his personal coming and kingdom on earth. Both are found in the same Scriptures. His humiliation has been accomplished, and his reign will be established in its time. "What God had showed that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled." Peter tells us that he will send Jesus Christ at the times of restitution, and so verify every remaining word "which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began." It is clear, therefore, that this objection of Judaism is as worthless as that of carnality.

If it is urged that the view presented converts the earth into a paradise, and makes it the heaven of the blessed, and that this is not to be tolerated, it is answered: The prevailing notion of heaven, in some remote aerial region, is a papal dream; a mere fancy sketch of the monks. It hence had its origin in the seclusion of the cloisters, and is without a shadow of proof from the written Word. Between such a heaven as this, and that described by John, when the tabernacle of God shall be with men on the renewed earth, teeming with redeemed and holy ones in vast multitudes, each and every one must decide for himself. Wherever Christ is, the true believer will find to be heaven; consequently the objection is futile in the extreme. If any reader wishes to see this subject further illustrated, read Chalmers's sermon on the New Heavens and the New Earth.

It is worthy of remark, in this connection, that if Anti-millenarians had any arguments of as much substance as pale moonshine, they would never dream of offering such paltry objections. Had they any solid ground to stand upon, they might easily produce their cause and bring forward their strong reasons. But they have no Bible and no worthies of all antiquity to which and to whom they can appeal. Enoch, and Job, and Isaiah were Millenarians. "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of His saints to execute judgment." "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth . . . in my flesh I shall see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold." "The glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together. Lo! this is our God; we have waited for him." The glorious company of martyrs, symbolized by the living creatures and elders, were of the like faith. "And hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth." So all the prophets, and primitive Christians, and the beloved disciple above all. "And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." Backed by such a cloud of witnesses of all ages, Millenarians may stand up without fear and without a blush, and vindicate the great Bible doctrine of the coming and reign of Christ Jesus our Lord.—Prophetic Times.

FROM ELD. J. B. COOK.

POULTNEY, VT. June 24, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I send a brief notice of "The Judgment" that was written in response to a notice given through our Bulletin, perhaps without a thought of its proper bearings. "THE JUDGMENT," as set forth in your tract sent me, seems substantially right. There can be no need or occasion for the good Lord to make an examination into our characters, after a life spent under the motives and impulses of Gospel grace! No, no. My idea is that, "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" will bring up the saints, as it did the Saviour, at the precise time, and in the manner appointed.

'THE JUDGMENT' NOT 'OCT 2D.'

The announcement of "The Final Judgment" on Oct. 2d of this year, has had its course in the papers. But this cannot be.

1. Because "The Judgment" must fill out "the great and notable day—as 1,000 years." Acts ii., 20; 2 Pet. 3.

2. The mistaken reference to Oct. 2d, as the time of the "Final Judgment," may be based on the fact that some have regarded the tenth day of the seventh Jewish month, as the "presumed" point for the sounding of the anti-typical Jubilee Trumpet!

But Oct. 2d falls on the day after the full—the fourteenth day—of the seventh month! Thus the second day of October will be full four days subsequent to such supposed time for the Jubilee Trumpet on the tenth day of that Jewish month. Hence it fails.

Furthermore, the Jubilee fell on the fiftieth year; and of course after seven Sabbatic cycles—7x7=49 years! While our present time is near the end of only the sixth Great Day, in the first cycle of earth's toilsome week! Of course the Sabbatism—the seventh day—remaineth to the people of God." Heb. v., 1–9.

Thus the best light derived from the scripture shows "the four kingdoms and six great days of earth about accomplished and 'the Sabbath of the world'—at hand!" While "the ages to come"—the seven times seven, must still unfold through the opening glories of the distant future, to the anti-typical Jubilee of God's creation.

"Scenes, such as Earth saw never!
Such as Heaven 'll stoop down to see"

3. The Bible view of "The Judge" and His Judgment is altogether ignored, in the announcement for Oct 2d. Please see it as shown Psa. lxxii, xcviii. Matt. xii., 20, 21.

It involves the promised "Deliverance; Restitution, or Salvation!" The Deliverer, Restorer, Saviour, will put down all rule, authority and power, to the last enemy, Death! 1 Cor. xv., 24–17; Rev. xvii. to xxi.; Acts iii., 21.

Thus the Lord's Prayer will be answered; the prophecy will be fulfilled, and the full measure of sacred vision verified! God's glory will cover the heavens; and the earth will be full of His praise;

O blessed Lord, we little dreamed,
Of such a morn as this!
Such rivers of unmingled joy!
Such full unbounded bliss!

Insuperbable objections may rise against the human view; but none against the Divine. Respectfully,

J. B. C.

INQUIRIES BY S. COOPER.

WHILE there may be points of small consequence, it is always desirable to know "what is truth;" or, in other words, to have a correct understanding; and when we learn that others, whose judgment we respect, differ from us, the inquiry comes up, are we or they correct? In the last Crisis, is an article headed, "Spirit of man: What is it?" In which the writer says, "Man possesses the spirit of life, or breath of life: not the breath of air, but the breath of life, or element that produces life alike in man and beast, and is long manifested prior to birth, or before inhaling the breath of air."

1. I wish to inquire, was it not the atmospheric air that God breathed into the nostrils of Adam, and which he designated as the "breath of life?" [ANS.—Yes.—ED.]

2. Is there anything that lives, has life, or can live, independent of the atmospheric air? [ANS.—No.—ED.]

3. If there is not, then is it not emphatically "the breath of life," or the life giving and sustaining breath? [ANS.—Yes.—ED.]

As to the unborn, it is my humble opinion that they do not live by "the breath of life', prior to birth, only what is received through the lungs, blood and veins of the mother. But I may be mistaken. [You are not mistaken.—ED.]

If this subject and the inquiries are worthy, I should like your view of it through the HERALD OF LIFE. Yours hoping for life eternal through Jesus.

WINDSOR, CONN., June 21, 1868.

THE SPHERE OF THE BIBLE.

THE Bible is read, says a writer (and he a sceptic), on the Sabbath in the ten thousand pulpits of the land; in all the temples of Christendom is its voice lifted up week by week; the sun never sets on its gleaming page; it goes alike to the cottage of the plain man and the palace of the king; it is woven into the literature of the scholar, and it colors the talk of the streets; it is stored away in the pack of the traveller; it is the one book which you find in the hut of the settler far away on the outskirts of civilization; it is read round the camp fire of the soldier; it goes with him into the conflict, and while the eye of the strong man moistens, and his lip quivers as he reads it, it lies beneath the pillow of the sick as a comforter in time of trouble. Infancy likes the story so well that it lisps it by its mother's knee, and the aged eyes, that have become themselves dim, delight to pore over its pages. Its language falls from the faltering lips. It is whispered in the dull, cold ear of the dying, and the haggard features become radiant at the repetition of the treasured word, and souls pass away with it lingering on their lips, muttering it as the ground of their hope and their passport to immortality.

GOOD FOR EVIL.

A YOUNG girl in South Africa was seized in a wood by a savage enemy of her father's, who cut off both her hands and sent her bleeding home. Many years passed, and the poor girl recovered from her wounds, and the stumps healed. One day there came to her father's door a poor, worn-out, gray-headed man who asked for alms. The girl knew him at once as the cruel man who cut off her hands. She went into the hut, ordered a servant to take him bread and milk, and sat down and watched him eat it. When he had done she dropped the covering that hid her handless wrists from view, and holding them up before him uttered a sentence meaning, "I have had my revenge." The very sentence he had uttered when he cruelly maimed her. The secret of it was, the girl meantime had been converted, and had learned that lovely Scripture, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink."—Bible Society Rec., Sept., 1868.

"THREE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS."

One Thousand Dollars Wanted.

FOR WHAT?

To put into circulation within the next three months Ten Thousand each of the following works:

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE.

THE JUDGMENT:

TIME AND MANNER OF IT.

AND

LIFE FROM THE DEAD:

Or, The Righteous only will Live Again.

These three documents are for the campaign before us, which is not to be ended till our King is crowned and has the kingdoms of this world subjected to his reign on David's throne. Two thousand each of the above two first-named documents have been printed, and three thousand of the last, and a great portion of them are already in circulation; but there is a wish to increase it to ten thousand each by the next anniversary of the Life and Advent Union. We believe it can be done. It is true, a few have generally had such work to do; but "many hands make light work." If each of our subscribers could pay, or collect one dollar for this object, the full amount and several hundred dollars over would be had to carry on the work.

Who says, I will do it? You can have all your money back again in the documents, if you wish it.

The three works can be had for 14 cents, including the postage; or, 100 of each for $12, including postage, or for $10 when sent by express or taken at our office.

The "Generous Offer" Revivee.

It will be remembered that the Hon. O. S. Halsted, last winter made the offer to send his work, "The Theology of the Bible," to any subscriber of the Herald of Life for $2, and himself prepay the postage. The retail price of the work is $3. By accepting the judge's offer, you, in fact, get this invaluable work for a little more than half price; as the author gets but $1.68 after paying postage. The book is one to study; and with it your Bible will be more perfectly understood. The offer is a most generous one, and we hope many more will avail themselves of it. It is not restricted to your taking one copy at this rate. You can have any number you choose to send the money for. Send $2 for each copy; writing your own name and Post Office add.ess plain, and the work will come to you free of any other expense.

Direct your communication to Hon. O. S Halsted, 417 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

Grove Meeting.

There will be a Grove Meeting at Salterville, N. J., Sunday, July 19th, at 3 p. m. We held meeting in that place on Sunday last; and considering the short notice given (Saturday evening) there was a good attendance; and the greatest desire manifested to hear those precious truths expounded. Many listened to the doctrine of Life only in Christ for the first time. With the exception of a few sturdy brethren, the place has been dead for many years; so dead that they would not kick at the truth. But of late there has been a movement among the dry bones. A prominent member of the Methodist E. Church undertook to disprove our doctrine. Fortunately he made his appeal to the Bible, and found to his surprise that it taught that man is all mortal, and in death unconscious. Blessed, as he is, with an honest heart, and esteeming the honor which cometh from God only, caring naught for the frowns of the world or a worldly church, he boldly avowed his belief everywhere. This has caused the people and clergy to cry out, for more than two hours, "Great is our church." They did not, like the ancients, stick their fingers in their ears, but they did that which was just as bad; they took their ears away, and refused to hear the truth. Thank God, there is a little excitement even in Salterville. Brethren, pray for us.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JULY 15, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Ed tor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The Herald of Life.

Six weeks more and then comes the anniversary of the Life and Advent Union. Then is to be determined what is to be done in the matter of the Herald of Life. Hitherto it has been sustained by the generous contributions of its friends, as the subscription price does not more than one half pay the cost of its issue. The question is probably settled in nearly the minds of all its friends that it must be continued at whatever cost, as it was never more needed than now, nor has its circulation ever been as large as at the present time. Yet it cannot be carried forward without the same help it has had the volume now closing. A united, determined and active support is still needed for its continued success. It is desirable, therefore, that those who cannot be at our anniversary should let us know, previous to that time, what they intend to do in this matter. It is important that we should have that information at the earliest period you can give it.

The fifth anniversary of the Life and Advent Union will be held at Springfield, Mass., or in its immediate vicinity, probably on Friday, August 28th; being in the week of the annual camp-meeting, heretofore held in Wilbraham, by Advent believers. Springfiel l is much more accessible than Wilbraham, as railroads from all quarters meet there. We expect to have a large collection of believers in "Life only in Christ." They have multiplied faster the past year than ever before, and "still they come." Let us have the working material. Drones are of no use. Our work is to be done for the Lord, and as in his sight. It is a blessed work and the reward—"eternal life"—will be glorious. Let us all gird ourselves anew to the conflict and "Stand up for Jesus," our Life-giver.

Life from the Dead:

or, the righteous only will live again.

The fourth thousand of this "Campaign Document" is now ready to go out on its mission: also the third thousand of "A Defence of the Bible." Let the work go on as it has done, till we get up to at least the ten thousand we propose to have sent out in the next few weeks. This ought to be done by our anniversary or at the time thereof. Help, all who possibly can. Let us have the $1,000 we have named for this purpose and it shall be done.

Look again at the "Three Campaign Documents," and see if you can do better than to circulate them immediately.

Soul and Body in Hell.

And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in Gehenna.—Matt. x., 28.

Fear him which after he hath killed hath power to cast into Gehenna.—Luke xii., 5.

We find an article in the Universalist on these texts from which we take the following extract:

Take the common ideas as gathered from orthodox preaching, and from the first impressions of this text. Then we are to fear God because he is able to destroy both soul and body in hell: or as Luke has it "after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell." Notice, that according to Matthew, he does not cast the soul into hell for punishment, and leave the body to dust, but soul and body both are sent there together. Luke's version is not so explicit in this respect, but it clearly implies the same idea; after he hath killed hath power to cast—the person killed, the whole person, body and soul—into hell. Thus Luke and Matthew harmonize in the main point. But how does this accord with our every day experience and observation?

We know of a certainty that God does not not cast the body into hell, i, e., the orthodox hell. But our orthodox brother will say, the text proves certainly that he will cast the soul there, and for this reason we are directed to fear him. Not so indeed. The text couples the soul and body together, and you cannot separate them in explaining this text. But commentators have another hypothesis. They tell us the soul is sent at once to hell and the body perhaps a thousand years afterward raised up, reunited to the soul and then both are sent to hell together. This, I believe, is the theory of the church to-day. Now let us see if the language accords with the hypothesis.

1. The theory itself is nowhere recognized by Christ.

2. The language implies that the casting into hell is immediately after the killing; and soul and body go together.

3. But notice carefully, they are not sent to hell to be continued eternally in torment, but to be destroyed. This settles the question against the entire orthodox theory. If destroyed together, there is no more a person, no more a body or soul, and consequently neither happiness nor misery.

Though the writer in the Universalist gives a different view of the texts from ourself, in his further exposition, yet the foregoing conclusion against the popular view we regard as unanswerable. It is destruction and not torment of soul or body that our Lord speaks of; and when the wicked die, it is God's appointment—not man's power—that makes their doom a total destruction, so that there is no revival of them into life; while the "friends" of Jesus have nothing to fear from anything their enemies can do to them, even if they extinguish the'r animal life; for, saith Jesus, "I will raise him up at the last day." This is our comfort and our hope whatever inflictions our enemies may heap on us now. No such hope has the sinner, who dies in his sins: he "shall be holden by the cords of his sins." So hath God appointed.

The French Emperor.

In 1863 we wrote an article relating to Louis Napoleon, the main ideas of which are full as apparent now as at that time. He aspires to be Lord of the earth, and seeks it by means of the Roman Catholic power. This is what makes him uphold the Roman Pontiff. He intends soon to make a Bonaparte Pope. He has succeeded in making one a Cardinal, which was an important step in his vile design. We spoke of him in 1863 as follows:

The "old serpent" has laid coiled up about as long as he can endure it. He has darted out his fangs on Mexico, and the blood he has drunk there has only excited his thirst for more; so that he will probably try his skill in reducing all Europe to a state of dependence on himself, preparatory to clothing Cardinal Van Icinii (Charles Bonaparte) with the Pontifical robes; thereby, virtually, crowning himself the head of both church and state! That such is the scheme of this prince of schemers, we can have little doubt. But let no believer's heart fail him. God sits above the raging of the sea and the foaming of its waves. His counsel, it shall stand; and when He has chastised the nations for their covetousness, oppression, and corruptions of the earth, he will dash them in pieces as a potter's vessel is broken; breaking them with a rod of iron and will set His Son on his holy hill of Zion, on David's throne, as He has sworn to do; and who shall disannul that oath?

The day of earth's glory is hastening on: not in the way that deceived politicians imagine. Rulers of all grades and classes—as a general thing—have corrupted their ways before God, and are seeking their own aggrandizement, regardless of the sorrows and distress of the poor and down-trodden. God will arise to plead the cause of these outraged ones, and to "destroy them who destroy the earth." Then "shall a King reign and prosper, and shall execute justice and judgment in the earth." Even so, come Lord Jesus, heaven's appointed Ruler. Lift up your heads, ye saints, for your redemption draweth nigh.

Tent Meeting at Rockaway, N. J.

The Life and Advent Mission tent was pitched in Rockaway, N. J., on Wednesday, June 24. In the evening a small company came together, and a short discourse was preached from Rom. vii., 15. The sermon was partly practical and partly doctrinal, and was listened to attentively by the few assembled, and it is hoped not without profit. Thursday, p. m., Br. Wolcott had a very interesting time talking to a few who came to the tent about the eternal house of the saints of God. In the evening a goodly number came to the meeting, and a discourse was delivered from 1 Cor. xv., 45. The speaker endeavored to show that the first Adam was an earth man, only possessed of an animal nature, and consequently wholly mortal, and entirely destitute of a spiritual nature. That his entire posterity inherit his nature, therefore, out of Christ, all mankind are going in to death—that death is an unconscious sleep, and unending death is the doom of all who do not come out of death through Jesus Christ, the only constituted Life-giver of them that believe. At the close of the discourse the Rev. Mr. Adams made some strictures, and quoted a number of texts which are generally supposed to teach the immortality of the soul, and the consequent consciousness of man in death. Among these were the account of Moses and Elijah at the transfiguration, and 2 Cor. v., 8. The speaker remarked that as the Br. had admitted that Elijah did not die, therefore his presence on the mount of transfiguration did not in the least concern the state of man in death. That if Elijah was actually there, he must have been present in his physical organism, for that was what went to heaven. As for Moses, the account reads that "Moses died and God buried him." Consequently, if Moses was really on the mount at the transfiguration, God must have raised him from the dead. But it was shown that the whole matter was a vision, in which the disciples were shown the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. That Christ was seen in vision in his glorified body, Moses was seen in vision as a representative of all who sleep in Jesus and will be raised in glory at the last trump. Elijah was, also, seen in vision, and represented those who are "alive and remain unto the coming of our Lord," and will be changed—translated as Elijah was, and be glorified without sleeping in death.

The next Scripture urged as opposing the views advocated from the stand was, "Absent from the body and present with the Lord." To this it was replied, It will probably be admitted that "our earthly house of this tabernacle" is the mortal body. Mr. Adams answered, Yes, that is my position. The remark was then made, that if house in one place means body, it must be body in every other place where it occurs in the connection. Therefore, if the earthly house is the mortal body, the house from heaven must be the immortal body. To this Mr. Adams replied, I admit it, that is my position. It was urged that Mr. Adams' admissions spoiled the text for his use. Paul was groaning for his house from heaven, which it is admitted is the immortal body. 1 Cor. xv., 51–57, in connection with 1 Thess. iv., 13–17, was urged as proof positive that Paul neither expected to, nor would get his immortal body, until the last trumpet sounds, and the dead are raised at the appearing of our Lord the second time. But, says he, Paul did not groan to be unclothed, i. e., to pass out of life, but to be clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. It was replied, We most fully endorse the brother's expose of the text, consequently Paul was not groaning, or desiring to die, but was groaning for immortality; and we have before proved that he expected no immortality for either himself or the church till Christ shall come and raise the dead. Therefore, Paul was "willing to be absent from the mortal body, and present with the Lord" in an immortal body.

We think the audience were well satisfied that Mr. Adams was thoroughly defeated in his attempt to prove that man is conscious in death by the use of these texts.

Friday, p. m., a few gathered at the tent, and Br. Wolcott taklked to them in a very instructive and familiar manner on the resurrection from the dead. He showed conclusively that the resurrection is conditional, and an unending blessing to all who are counted worthy to attain unto it. Some questions were asked which Br. W. answered in a very clear and satisfactory manner.

In the evening the remaining texts quoted by Mr. Adams were reviewed, and we think were made plain to the satisfaction of at least a large portion of the audience. They were Eccl. xii., 7, and Phil. i., 23. On the first text it was remarked that, 1st, if this spirit is the immortal souls of all mankind, as claimed by Mr. Adams, it follows as an unavoidable conclusion that all immortal souls will be saved. They all go to God. God is in heaven, therefore, with this view of the text, all immortal souls go to heaven at death, and there the text leaves them. 2d. If this spirit is the immortal soul of man, it must have pre-existed, for it is the same spirit that returns that was given at the first. It was then shown that the text refers us directly back to the creation, and that the spirit that returns to God who gave it is the breath of life which God breathed into Adam, and that this same breath of life was common to all the beasts of the field, as well as birds and creeping things. That it is simply a vitalizing principle of life which God has put in the atmosphere which man inhales through his nostrils, by which the lungs are inflated, and as the blood passes from the heart to the lungs it becomes impregnated with this principle of life, and that the text is literally true which declares that "the life is in the blood."

In Phil. i., 23, it was shown, first, that Paul expressed no desire to die, so far from it, he positively declares, in v. 22, that he does not know whether he would choose to die or live. Consequently, unless Paul flatly contradicts himself in the very next breath, to depart and be with Christ has nothing whatever to do with dying. Paul was in a strait betwixt two (living or dying), and had a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better, than to do either, i. e., than to live or die.

An aged gentleman in the audience then suggested that Paul was caught up to the third heaven. It was shown that at the time Paul referred to, there was no third heaven in existence. That 2 Pet. iii., 5–13, makes the new heavens the third, and that this is the one Paul saw, but he only saw it in vision, as he declares in v. 1. That in vision he was caught away to the third heaven, and saw it just as it will exist when God shall make all things new.

Saturday, p. m., every one was so busy that there was no meeting at the tent. Near night our hearts were made glad by the coming of our dear Br. Roworth, of New York City. In the evening a goodly number assembled under the tent, and, as was previously noticed from the stand, Br. Wolcott took up the doctrine of hell, as taught in the Old Testament Scriptures. His first position was, that sheol from which hell is translated, literally signifies the state of death. Second, that all mankind, both good and bad, go into hell. Third, that God has arranged a plan, through Jesus Christ, through which to save out of sheol, hell, or the state of death, all who have faith in God through our Lord Jesus Christ. All these points were clearly established by direct quotations from both the original Hebrew, and from our English version, and made most positively plain by a consistent and logical course of reasoning. The points were so unquestionably proved that Mr. Adams, who was present, did not attempt to find any fault with the argument, but virtually admitted it, and then attempted to array against the texts quoted by Br. W. in his argument, barely one verse viz., Psa. ix., 17. The point he attempted to make was this: That this text declares the wicked shall be turned into hell; while the brother's argument proves that all, good and bad, go into hell. He asked what was the difference between the righteous and wicked. Br. W. showed that the wicked, going into sheol, with no hold on a future life, would be holden in death forever, by the cords of their own sins, while the righteous would be redeemed from death through Jesus the Life-giver; and that this is the difference between the two classes.

Sunday morning we had a good congregation, who listened with interest to Br. Roworth, who gave an exposition of Christ's language to the dying thief, "Verily, I say unto thee, to-day, shalt thou be with me in paradise." He showed, in a conclusive manner, 1st, that Christ did not ascend to heaven for more than forty days after his resurrection; that he declared in the most positive manner to Mary, three days after death, that he had not then ascended to heaven, consequently it was not possible for the thief to have gone to heaven with Christ that day. 2d. He showed that at that time paradise was not in existence; that Adam lost paradise by transgression, and that it is to be restored by the second Adam; that Christ gave the thief the assurance that day that he should be with him in paradise; that the prayer of the thief should be answered, which was, "Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." The kingdom is to be established under the whole heavens at the second coming of Christ; and until then the prayer of the thief cannot be answered. He remarked that the text might be literally translated, Verily, I tell you now, you shall be with me in paradise.

In the afternoon we had a large congregation, who listened with marked attention to a discourse from Ecc. xii., 14. In this discourse it was attempted to show what is the true Bible doctrine of judgment. That the judgment consists in three acts. 1st. The trial. 2d. The decision. 3d. The carrying into effect of the decision of the judge. This doctrine of the judgment was illustrated in the case of the antediluvians, the Sodomites, the Egyptians, and the Babylonians. That in each of the above named cases the judgment was final, never to be reversed, or gone over a second time. That the judgment of this age or dispensation commenced with the probation appointed under this dispensation, and consequently we are now on trial for a future life, and that the last decision of the Judge of quick and dead is to be passed on all the people of this dispensation before any are raised from the dead. Acting on this decision, all who are found worthy of life will have given them an endless life by a resurrection from the dead, or its equivalent, while those who are worthy of death will be left in death forever. This text was quoted by Mr. Adams in proof that all mankind will be raised from the dead, and brought into judgment to answer personally for all their acts, words, and thoughts. If we are not mistaken, a large proportion of the audience were satisfied that our brother of the Methodist church entertained an unscriptural view of the judgment.

In the evening Br. Wolcott took up the subject of hell, as taught in the New Testament Scriptures. He remarked that hell in the N. T. was translated from three different Greek words, viz., ten times hell is translated from hades, twelve times from gehenna, and once from tartarosos. Hades, it was shown, is exactly equivalent to sheol of the Hebrews. It was also shown that like sheol it means the state of death. That Christ went into hades, and that all his saints will also go there, save the remnant that will be alive when he comes, but that God redeemed Christ from hades by a resurrection, and that all who are in Christ will, through him, have redemption from hades in the last day. But while it is true that the gates of hades will not prevail against the church, it is just as true that death will prevail eternally against all who are not in Christ; that they will never come out of hades, the state of death.

The blessing of the Lord, in answer to prayer, rested on our dear brother, who, though suffering under a severe attack of physical debility, was so strengthened by the divine power of the Spirit of God as to enable him to present the subject with such convincing argument and such potent unction and energy that, for the time being, at least, a large proportion of our crowded auditory were brought under the benign influence of sacred truth, and listened as if spellbound during the entire time occupied by our brother in delivering his discourse. At the close of the sermon some very interesting and appropriate remarks were made by Br. Roworth on the same subject, which were listened to with marked attention, and seemingly with a strong desire on the part of much the larger portion of the audience to learn what is truth. Other remarks were made from the stand, wherein it was shown that "Orthodoxy" had always been puzzled to locate their endless hell of torture, and that as a dernier resscrt they had located it in the bowels of the earth. Rev. v., 13, was quoted as proof positive that there is a time coming when every living being in the universe of God will join in one universal song of triumphant, joyful praise to him who sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb forever. That when that time arrives sin and sinners will cease to be; suffering, misery and death will have been banished from the universe; and this prophecy can never be accomplished only on the principle as taught throughout the entire word of God, that "all the wicked will God destroy."

Our meeting at Rockaway was a perfect and triumphant success. We felt amply compensated for the great fatigue we endured in pitching our tent in that place with but little assistance save our own hands, and in preaching the gospel at nearly our own charge, in the apparent good accomplished in the meeting. Some few embraced our views heartily and fully, and rejoiced exceedingly in understanding a consistent faith. Among these was the very kind and gentlemanly station agent in that place. Also Sr. Cooper, with whom we are boarding during the meeting, not only fully embraced the truth as taught in the meetings, but laid us under untold obligation to our heavenly Father for the great kindness she showed us during the entire meeting till its close. We found that not alone in Sarepta, but also in Rockaway, God had a widow that rejoiced, not only in ministering to the necessities of his unworthy servants, but also in sharing the blessing that "maketh the liberal soul fat." We also feel very grateful to our heavenly Father that he so kindly disposed the hearts of some of the most influential men in the place to do us needed good, both in preparing our tent for meeting purposes, as also in helping us in keeping the ground on which our tent was pitched, of which through a mistaken "zeal for God" some very illiberal religionists made an effort to deprive us. Among these gentleman especially, and very kindly remembered by us, was B. K. Stickle, Esq., who, though decidedly a "free thinker," set an example that might be copied greatly to the profit of some of his very "pious" fellow citizens. Also Mr. Mattox, a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, showed us great kindness, and treated us with the utmost Christian and gentlemanly courtesy.

As to the expense of the meeting, permit me to say that the financial responsibilities of the entire tent campaign rest on the shoulders of Br. E. Wolcott, of Oceanport. Further, that any business man in the country, looking at it in the light of a mere business transaction, would decide at once that Br. W. is not able to carry forward this enterprise unassisted. This last is written without either the knowledge or consent of Br. W. To those who have funds they would like to deposit in a place where they will draw good interest, this hint is sufficient. Our tent will probably be pitched next in Morristown, N. J., and that as soon as the Lord will. Brethren, pray for us.

S. W. Bishop.

The Resurrection.

"When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, and dieth in them; for his iniquity that he hath done shall he die."—Ezk., xviii. 26.

Some persons will quote this text as a proof of the reliving of the wicked dead. Let us examine and see in the light of its connection. Let us also notice the character and language that is used in verse 21, "But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, (not die), he shall not die." This language is all very plain. The prophet merely repeats the blessing or reward a man shall receive when he reforms his character in accordance with his Maker's will: so when a righteous man reverses his character, and becomes inharmonious with God, "for his iniquity shall he die." Thus we see plainly what the doom of a righteous man is when he turns away from God, the fountain of life, he dies in his sins; there is no hope for him; his case is hopeless. Yet men will quote this text on this wise, "As he dies in his iniquity, and then dies for his iniquity;" thus endeavoring to make out that there is a period of life between his dying in them and for them. God's word declares "The soul (the man) that sinneth it shall die"—not live. Jesus speaking of the resurrection, says plainly, "They that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world"—He did not forget to add—"and the resurrection from the dead." Just mark these words. Now we have got the resurrection of the dead; mark that; it matters not whether saint or sinner—it is the dead that are spoken of in the word of God. Let us hear our Saviour again: "They that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the"—the what?—the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more." Why can they not die any more?—"for they are equal unto the angels of God in heaven, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

I feel to rejoice in the blessed hope of salvation; and that when Christ, who is our life shall appear, the resurrection will take place: for saith our Lord, "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore; and have the keys of death and hell" (hades). When he comes, he will use the keys, and unlock the gates of death and hades and set his captives free; then will they come forth singing the conqueror's song, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory"—not to sinners, as some contend—the victory is through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Brethren and Sisters, let us endeavor to be faithful unto the end. I believe that is near. Let us be watchful and prayerful. I feel stronger to-day than ever. Yours in hope of eternal life.

If half the pains were taken by some people to perform the labors allotted to them that are taken by them to avoid it, we should hear much less said about the troubles of life, and see much more actually completed.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM JAMES L. BOYD.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5, 1868.

THE following short sentence is extracted from a recently received letter (dated June 17) from a constant reader of the HERALD OF LIFE, in "Auld Scotia," which may be appreciative to its American readers, as a cheering "Word from Scotland:"

"My wife, as well as myself, is continually interested in the perusal of our weekly received HERALD OF LIFE, and we can but conclude that the God of truth has endowed Editor STORRS and his coadjutor writers with "wisdom from on high," in the good work of shedding light on the long obscured Scriptures; and we pray that divine wisdom may continue to enlighten and guide them in their labors for the advancement of truth, and of continuing to be in the advance of all other theological publications that I have seen.

"JAMES GRANT."

FROM ELD. WM. BRAYTON.

WATERLOO, IOWA, July 5, 1868.

A BROTHER gave me a dollar to-day to have the HERALD OF LIFE sent to a dear friend, in hopes that it may do him some good. He also desires to do what good he can, and knows of no better way to do it. We had a good time in presenting the truth to-day to a large audience. There seemed to be much interest and much excitement at the close of our meeting; it is in a new field, some six miles north of town. Many that were shy of us at first, are now taking sides with us, and the enemy is much enraged. One of the opposite party said, if we had never visited them they would have had nothing but peace and harmony, but it was now all contention and strife. I showed them that Christ came not to send peace on the earth, but the opposite; and where the truth was preached it would cause division; and it is surprising to see those who believe that the real man cannot die, try to prove that the wicked will be raised from the dead; as if God could raise from the dead those that never were dead! I tell them, in order to talk of the resurrection of the wicked, they must first believe that they do die, in order to believe that they can be raised from the dead; and as long as they believe that the soul is the real man, and is immortal, it is impossible for them to believe in the resurrection at all.

We have the promise of a few more subscribers as soon as they can raise the money; soon after harvest, we think. I am one that is in earnest in contending for "no life out of Christ."

FROM H. H. ARNOLD.

LAKE CITY, MINN., June 27, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Last year a beloved father who for many years was a subscriber of the Bible Examiner, and a believer with you on the Life question, fell asleep in Jesus; and last March my wife died, trusting for a future life in and through Him who is "The resurrection and the life;" and in that day I expect to see her again, clothed with immortality. I sent a letter to Br. Wendell, last April, requesting him to send a notice of the death of my wife to the HERALD OF LIFE, he having seen her at my house. I thought he would do so; but I have not heard anything from my letter yet.

If you can stand the strain upon your strength, my dear brother, tell the friends and brethren, who have done so nobly the past year, to come down with their pledges: tell them, it will pay. Yes, a crown of life awaits the faithful. If Moses had respect unto the recompense of reward, they will also get theirs. Amen.

Yours, in hope of attaining unto the Resurrection of the dead, at the coming of the Son of man.

FROM P. FLICKNER.

DELTON, WIS., July 6, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Enclosed find $2 for the "One thousand dollar" enterprise; and you can count on me for $3 more in the course of a few weeks. The people must have the truth, whether they will receive it or not; and I, for one, feel like contributing; or, in other words, adding my mite for that purpose. Let all do what they feel to be their duty, and the work will go on; and God's time is now. Pray for me, and may our gracious God strengthen and sustain you in this all-glorious work, until He shall come who shall reward every man according as his work shall be.

Please send me fifteen or twenty tracts on "The Judgment." I think I can spread them with good effect.

Yours, waiting for the King of Glory.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA, July 2, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I would say to all those that hope in God's mercy, Take courage; though in many places the enemy is coming in like a flood, yet the Spirit of the Lord is raising up a standard against him. In that I will rejoice. And I do rejoice that the truth, as it is in Jesus, is spreading, running and being glorified. I grow stronger and stronger in "No Life out of Christ." To me the death of Christ forever settles what is the penalty of God's law, and that he endured the whole penalty, and God will not require more of the sinner than he did of his Son; and when the sinner, out of Christ, has suffered the penalty of the law, he is dead, forever dead.

Reading to-day Job xi., 20, I thought how wonderfully God teaches his everlasting truth, and especially the non-resurrection of the wicked. The verse reads, "But the eyes of the wicked shall fail, and they shall not escape, and their hope shall be as the giving up of the ghost," or, as the expiring breath. In the THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE, page 99, it is said, "As to the word eye, used in this verse, it is familiar to the reader that in our own language, as little figurative as it is compared to the Hebrew, the bud, especially of a thing to be put in the ground, buried, to produce its like, is called the eye. And if that was to die, there can be no reproduction. Our Saviour said, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day." O, I bless God that he has a people begotten by the incorruptible seed, that liveth and abideth forever [that always sprouts, or will, assuredly], for "all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away, but the word of the Lord endureth forever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." How can the gospel be preached without preaching life and death? May God give us all a heart to work while it is called to-day, and the faith that works by love, and purifies the heart and overcomes the world.

I send $1 for three "Campaign Documents." May God speed them on their message of mercy broadcast over the land, may they be a blast of fire against the bowing wall of error, and a light that shall never go out till the Master comes, and shall say, "Well done. Enter into the joy of thy Lord." May this be our happy lot; yes, all of us, for Jesus' sake. Your sister, waiting for redemption by-and-by.

FROM MRS. E. C. PAINE.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., July 9, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I see that I shall have no paper next week without I send what is due on it. I inclose one dollar. I am glad you have continued it till now. We have had sickness in our family, and circumstances have prevented my sending it before. I could not think of doing without my paper any more than my food. I think it grows better. It is all the preaching on the Life theme we have now. I am glad I have got rid of the last vestige of the old theory of hell torment. God is love. He delighteth not in the death of the sinner. Of course He will never raise them to kill again. It is appointed unto man once to die. Unless we are begotten we shall never have a birth. The minister who preached Sunday last, divided the body and blood of Christ. By the death of the body the sinner is made alive at the resurrection to die again. The blood does not avail. I cannot explain it to you; but you will understand what they mean who hold to a mortal resurrection. Truth is on the march here. It is slow but sure. Meetings are held in this place, every week, to search the Scriptures, to see whether these things are so. They meet Wednesday and Friday evenings. Truth is mighty, and will prevail. Thank the Lord. From your sister in Christ.

FROM J. C. BAILEY.

LYNN, MASS., June 28, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I wish to become a subscriber to your most valuable paper, the HERALD OF LIFE; for I love the precious truth which it advocates, the doctrine of Life only in Christ. I have not been a believer in it but a short time; but I thank the Lord that I ever heard and believed it. The view that is held by some, that God is going to raise the wicked from the dead to kill or destroy them again, is not a Bible doctrine; it is nowhere to be found in the Scriptures of divine truth; and I feel to praise God that I have been delivered from such a false notion of his character. If the punishment for sin is death, why have the wicked dead to be made alive in order to recieve their punishment? I cannot see why. If there are any that can, why not inform us of the fact, if it be a fact? The idea that the sinner must be made alive to receive eternal death or eternal punishment, is too absurd. To believe a theory that contradicts itself ought not to be cherished by any one; for he who does will receive no benefit therefrom. To take the position that the punishment of sin is death, and that the punishment does not commence till the sinner is dead; and in the next breath say, there is no punishment for the for the sinner unless made alive from the dead, is a very plain contradiction to those who desire to see the truth as it is. How men of reason can believe such absurd ideas I cannot tell. Why not believe the wages of sin is death? as the Scriptures teach; instead of a mortal resurrection to kill again? If when the wicked die they remain in that condition, then of course they have received the penalty for transgression, unless limited torment is a part of the penalty. The truth is, that man must remain in death forever, unless he believes in Christ, the LIFE GIVER. If he does believe, Christ has promised to raise him up at the last day. "He that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live." John xi. Yours for the truth.

FROM JOHN SNYDER.

AVALANCH, WIS., June 29, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I wish some of those "CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS" to scatter at a Grove meeting, soon to come off, which I am going to attend, if the Lord will, and the glorious truth of "No life out of Christ" must be spread abroad. Send me the three documents, in equal parts, to the amount of $2, inclosed.

Glory to God, the truth is gaining ground all around. Take courage, brother. A preacher is here from the East—a hot resurrectionist—and has told me they do not know who to trust in the churches there on account of the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead. "Yet my prayer is in their calamity." Lord own thy word: send thy truth to every part, that none can belong to Christ's family, and be born again, unless they are begotten by the incorruptible seed, which is the word of God that liveth and abideth forever. Your brother, in the glorious hope of life from the dead when Jesus comes.

FROM O. O. ROGERS.

BETHEL, VT., July 5, 1868.

BR. STORRS: We have here a very few names of persons that are trying to live in the fear of God, and by faith in his Son Jesus, waiting and watching for his coming to be glorified in his saints. Glory to God for his giving us a pattern in the person of Jesus Christ, who was made perfect through suffering, and thereby became the Captain of our salvation. Hallelujah to his name forever. Amen. With my whole being will I sing the praises of my God, in that he created and made man a mortal being, and not an immortal one, as some affirm that he did, to suffer for ceaseless ages. Blessed be God that he did guard the tree of life that man in his fallen state, or nature, should not eat, and thereby become an immortal sinner, to live forever in sin and suffering. Thanks be to God that sin is not immortal, but shall have an end. Yes, when Christ with his saints shall possess the kingdom under the whole heavens, with peace and pleasures forevermore. Glory to God, Hallelujah to Jesus' name forever. Amen and amen.

FROM S. S. CALL.

NEWPORT CENTRE, VT., July 7, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I improve this opportunity to write a few words on the signs here. One sign is, they are afraid people will believe that man is wholly mortal, as there is a great effort made to sustain the doctrine of inherent immortality. Last Sabbath we were informed by the Baptist preacher that the spirit and the body would be reunited at the resurrection; and that Christ was possessed of two natures, human and divine; and that Christ was God himself. He also exhorted Adventists to be faithful, if they believed in the second coming of Christ. He cited them back to forty-three. Christ was coming then, and in sixty-seven he certainly was coming. Well, that is gone by, and he has not come yet. But I believe in his second coming as much as any man; he may come to some of us before the rising of another sun. The old story of his coming at death.

As there was no liberty given for remarks, Br. Drown and myself went to the desk, at intermission, and asked him for a reason for the hope of a reunion of body and spirit at the resurrection. He replied It is breath spent in vain to talk with you; you know I don't believe as you do; I might talk till Doomsday, and it would not do you any good.

We did not ask you to convince us, but simply give us your reason for the hope; we acknowledge we cannot find anything in the word of God to give us such a hope; if your hope is based on God's word please inform us where you find it.

He replied: We differ in regard to the word death; there are three deaths spoken of in the Bible. You believe that when a man dies that is the end of him; and I believe his soul still lives and is capable of enjoyment or suffering. Death, as the penalty for sin, must be eternal suffering; for we are told in Matthew, These shall go away into everlasting punishment. Now, in order to suffer everlasting punishment, they must be conscious, or else the punishment comes to an end, and is not everlasting. I told him, I thought we need have no doubts as to what death was, the wages to pay for sin, with such examples as Adam and Christ. In Adam's case, the sentence was, "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return." Nothing could be plainer than that. Christ died, the just for the unjust. Now, if eternal sufferings, as you claim, is what the unjust must suffer; as the wages of sin, did Christ so suffer or die? He replied, Christ had two natures; his humanity died; that is, his body died; but his divinity never died. Christ was God: He could not die: that is, his divinity could not die. Then which part was Christ, his body or his divinity? Why, when it speaks of Christ as dying, it means his body died; for instance, when it speaks of Christ as the Son of Man, it means his body; but when it speaks of Christ as the Son of God, it means his divinity.

Why do you divide him? was Christ divided? No, I believe in a whole Saviour. Then why do you divide him? You give me nothing but a human sacrifice. Will God accept of such a sacrifice? Well, if you do not believe Christ was God then you are an idolator; for it is said when he was brought into the world, let all the angels of God worship him; and it is said thou shalt have no other God besides me.

I soon found myself surrounded with hearers, while I preached Christ crucified; Christ buried; Christ raised from the dead; and it was the same Christ that died, that was buried; the same Christ that was buried, that rose; and after he arose he said; It is I, myself, that have flesh and bones, which ye see me have; handle me and see. The disciples own him as the Christ, and I am not ashamed of such a Christ. I believe with all my heart, this same Jesus will so come with flesh and bones. We shall see him as he is. Glory to God.

At five o'clock we went to the Whipple School-house, where we meet the loved ones once a week. The Comforter was with us in power; the Lord blessed us, and refreshed us; and we felt it was good to be there.

FROM HELEN ROBERTSON.

PHILADELPHIA, Sunday, July 12th.

BR. STORRS: It seems lonely to-day without our dear paper. It is always welcome and always contains something solid and good. Still I don't want to be selfish, for you need rest, and am glad you can get it occasionally. You have fought long in the front of the battle, and have stood firm to your post while many others have failed; but the victory will soon be gained, and the crown awarded to those who are faithful to the end.

One comfort, if we do have to go without the HERALD OF LIFE sometimes, we are not deprived of the company of our precious Bible and precious Saviour. There we can find pure nourishment that will strengthen and make us grow up into Christ, who is our living Head.

I feel as if we were living in strange times; as if the church was being shaken and sifted; and as if each one was developing an individual character. But the work is all in the hands of a kind Father, of whom we can say, He is greater than all, and no man is able to pluck us out of his hand.

I can say of myself, that I thank him for all the way in which he has led me to prove me and to try me, and to show me what was in my heart, whether I would serve him or no. He has led me in ways that I knew not, but has always given light for at least one step at a time. It is good thus to be childlike; for then we can lean on a Father's arm, and say, in entire submission, "Not my will, but thine be done."

Jesus says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." It is precious to be able to cease from our own struggling and rest in him. And so take his yoke upon us, and learn of him who is meek and lowly in heart. Then we can find rest to our souls, and say that his yoke is easy and burden light. How often and how long we sometimes struggle and can't find rest, and do not know why, when the only trouble is, that we will not be reconciled to God. We are often in this wilful condition, and hardly know it; but if we are honest children our Father will lead us along and after much discipline will bring us out all right at last.

If we are entertaining the hope of seeing the Master when he appears, and of then being like him, may we feel the necessity of now purifying ourselves even as he is pure.

Thine in our blessed hope.

A BROTHER, Bangor, Me., writes: I was glad to receive the tracts. I have given them all away, and they are preaching mightily. People ask me if I have not got more of them, for they want them to send away. Oh how the truth is gaining ground this way. I inclose $2 to be used as you think best. If the Lord will, I shall send $5 or $10 the coming year. I feel that the HERALD must be sustained and those tracts must go forward.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.— This brother did not sign his name to this communication; but we suppose it is from Eld. L. Wetherbee. We have credited the $2 to "Bangor, Me." We will send you the amount in the three "Campaign Documents," if you desire it, and will send us your name.

J. P. CHREST, St. Paul, Minn., writes: I send $1 to help publish "Campaign Documents." The leaven is beginning to work. Our preachers are trying to counteract the influence of those phamplets and tracts which are being distributed. It is the theme of almost every sermon that is now preached; and some of my old Methodist friends are trying to convert me from what they are pleased to term "Infidelity." One sister has kindly given me "Bible Doctrine of Immortality, by Hiram Mattison, D. D." The minister's wife, also, called to give me some work in contradiction to the glorious doctrine of life and immortality by a resurrection from the dead of those who love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR. Take courage, brother: the signs are good. Whitefield used to say, he did not hope to do any good unless he could "hear the devil roar." The cry of "Infidelity," is the cry of despair, when the party is out of argument. But be sure you keep to the Word, and keep full of love. That is a terrible weapon against our opposers: they can't stand that long; it kills them very soon, if it accompanies the sword of the Spirit: It makes that sword amazing sharp. Fear not, "If God be for us who can be against us?" We shall win in the end.

R. D. CHASE, Dover, N. J., writes: I feel to thank God and take courage. The efforts put forth by Brethren WOLCOTT and BISHOP, both in this place and Rockaway, are encouraging; more so than I could have reasonably wished. May the good Lord accept our humble thanks and heart-felt adoration for the grace vouchsafed and strength given, by which His plan for future life to poor dying men has been so simply, beautifully, and eloquently vindicated in this section. I feel that God and his beloved Son have been honored. Glory, honor, power and might be unto Him who liveth forevermore.

OBITUARY.

NOTE FROM MRS. ESTHER LEWIS.

NEW YORK, July 8, 1868.

BR. STORRS: My sister, Fanny A. Harris, died suddenly of heart disease, June 18th, while on a visit at South Brooklyn, L. I. We laid her away to rest in that great city of the dead (Greenwood) until our Saviour and LIFE-GIVER shall appear and raise us from our dusty beds. Then those bodies that corrupted fell shall incorrupted rise; and mortal forms shall spring to life immortal.

Yours, in hope of immortality.

THE PRISONER RESCUED.

A FEW months ago about sixty persons who are now at liberty were not only strangers in a strange land, but prisoners under a cruel king. Various efforts to procure their freedom having been made without success, the government of England determined to rescue them by force of arms. War with Abyssinia was declared, and in a short time the British forces were on their way there. After weeks of weary marching, through many dangers, and under a tropical sun, the enemy was reached, a conflict ensued, the foe was routed, his stronghold taken, king Theodore slain, and the prisoners liberated. Think you that the imprisoned British subjects trembled at the cannon's roar which indicated the approach of their deliverers? Nay; hearts did tremble—but not theirs. The foes of England quailed, but not the friends.

So, beloved, it will be in a coming day. At Magdala there were two classes—Britain's friends and Britain's foes, and when Christ comes the second time, two classes will be found on earth—those who have proved themselves his "friends" by doing whatsoever he commanded them (John xv., 14), and those whose enmity to him is well expressed in the message sent after the nobleman who went to the far country—"We will not have this man to reign over us."—Luke xix., 11–27. This coming will give joy to the former, but fill the latter with terror. One class will exclaim, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him and he will save us," while the other will cry to the rocks and mountains, "Fall on us and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb." The "prisoners of hope" will then be rescued. The prison-houses of mortality and death will be rifled of all who "have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." The King of kings may come in matchless majesty—"a fire devour before him, and it be very tempestuous round about him," but the fiery flame and tempest, are for his enemies, and the gathering to glorious rest for his friends. See Psa. l., 3–6. Reader, to which class will you belong in that day?—Advent Herald.

HOW TO PRESERVE CHRISTIANITY.

ON the other hand, there are many who think that Christianity and the Church can only be preserved by squaring itself to the rules of the culture of the present day, from which it is said to be too much estranged. It is said that for this reason we must resolve to give up a part of the ancient faith, to yield some untenable positions to the pressure of science, in order thereby to make more sure of the main substance. From this circle came the "Character of Jesus" by Schenkel. That there are many in this circle who truly and sincerely desire to preserve Christianity and the Church, I do not doubt; but I am none the less sure, that the way they take to do it cannot be the right way. What they abandon is not unessentials, but the very essence of Christianity; not temporary forms, but its inalienable substance: and their labor will only serve to prepare the way for those who come after them to reject it altogether. It is certainly the business of the Church to keep in active connection with the development of modern culture; not, however, by retreating before it, but by pervading it with the Christian spirit. To be able to do this, it must neither despise nor shun science and culture. Not everything it is true, which is now passed off for science and culture, is true science and genuine culture. No Christian may despise true science, for it is a gift of God; and to do that would be contrary to the declaration of the great apostle of the Gentiles: "All are yours." Nor may Christianity shun any science,—neither history and criticism, nor the natural sciences. It is true that they cannot give us what is highest and best; but we abide in the conviction that they cannot take it away from us, and we are also ready to give an answer to every man that asketh a reason of the hope that is in us. Still the final, thorough, heart-winning proof of the truth of the Christian faith must be set forth by our lives.

I will close by reminding all of you, that the best defence of the life of Jesus is the life of a Christian in whom Jesus lives. Let us all work together in this defence.—Dr. Uhlhorn.

JOHN NEWTON once said: "The art of spreading rumors may be compared to the art of pin-making. There is usually some truth, which I call the wire; as this passes from hand to hand, one gives it a polish, another a point, others make and put on the head, and at last the pin is completed."

PHOTOGRAPHS.

THOSE who wish the very best class of photographs will do well to call on R. A. LEWIS, Nos. 158, 160, and 162 Chatham St., N. Y. Those who try his work, so far as we have heard, are always pleased. We also speak from personal knowledge, having tested his skill recently.

THE WORLD'S MADNESS.—When I look around upon a busy, bustling world, eagerly pursuing vanity and courting disappointment, neglecting nothing so much as the one thing needful; and who, in order to have their portion in this life, disregard the world to come and only treasure up wrath against the day of wrath; it makes me think of a farmer, who should, with vast labor cultivate his lands, and gather in his crop, and thrash it out, and separate the corn from the chaff, and then sweep the corn out upon the dunghi'l, and carefully lay by the chaff. Such a person would be supposed mad; but how faint a shadow would this be of his madness, who labors for the meat that perishes, but neglects that which endureth unto everlasting life. It is a madness the whole race of men labor under, unless, and until divine grace works the cure. —Life Rev. T. Scott.

WELLINGTON'S BARGAIN.—Some years ago it was proposed to the Duke of Wellington to purchase a farm in the neighborhood of Strathfieldsaye, which lay contiguous to his estate, and was therfore a valuable acquisition, to which he assented. When the purchase was completed, his steward congratulated him upon having made such a bargain, as the seller was in difficulties, and forced to part with it. "What do you mean by a bargain?" said the duke. The other replied, "It was valued at £1,100, and we have got it for £800." "In that case," said the duke, "you will please to carry the extra £300 to the late owner, and never talk to me of cheap land again."

MINISTERIAL TOBACCO USERS.—At the last session of the New England Conference, Bishop Ames expressed the opinion that "a very large portion of the funds which are collected for superannuated preachers is paid to men who, by the excessive use of tobacco, have mentally and physically disqualified themselves for the itinerant work." Let us be thankful that bodies do get superannuated when brains have been so stupefied.

CHIEF-JUSTICE STORY was once a guest at a public dinner in Boston, at which Edward Everett was present. Wishing to pay a delicate compliment to the latter, the learned judge proposed as a volunteer toast: "Fame follows merit where Everett goes." The brilliant scholar and consummate orator, not at all disconcerted rose, and tossing up his wine-glass, responded: "To whatever heights judicial learning may attain in this country, it will never rise above one Story."

Poetry.

A German Trust Song.

Just as God leads me, I would go;
I would not ask to choose my way;
Content with what he will bestow,
Assured he will not let me stray;
So as he leads, my path I make,
And step by step I gladly take,
A child in him confiding.

Just as God leads, I am content;
I rest me calmly in his hands;
That which he has decreed and sent,
That which his will for me commands,
I would that he should all fulfil,
That I should do his gracious will
In living or in dying.

Just as God leads, I all resign;
I trust me to my Father's will;
When reason's rays deceptive shine,
His counsel would I yet fulfil;
That which his love ordained as right,
Before he brought me to the light,
My all to him resigning.

Just as God leads me, I abide
In faith, in hope, in suffering, true;
His strength is ever by my side—
Can aught my hold on him undo?
I hold me firm in patience, knowing
That God my life is still bestowing—
The best in kindness sending.

Just as God leads, I onward go,
Oft amid thorns and briars keen;
God does not yet his guidance show,
But in the end it shall be seen,
How, by a loving Father's will,
Faithful and true he leads me still.

Sin Found Out.

Halloa! Bill Hartwell is a famous batter. He had just given the ball a tremendous blow, and was running full speed, when he stubbed his toe and fell. The boys gathered round him; and I wish you could have seen their looks of surprise and indignation. He got no pity from any quarter; only just such words as must have filled him with shame and confusion.

Why? There is no harm in stubbing one's toe, is there? No, no. But when Bill fell, out fell a watch from his bosom or pocket, or wherever he had hid it. And was it not his watch? No. George Arnold, one of the older scholars, had, a little while before, lost his watch; and it had not gone without an extra pair of hands. Who took it? was the question. Bill Hartwell made more fuss about finding the thief than any one else, and at last fastened suspicion so strongly on one of the little boys, Freddie Howe, that everybody called him the thief. Poor Freddie Howe had a tough time of it. It was in vain he declared his innocence. The story, somehow or other, got going, and could not be stopped—for a lie, at first, runs faster than truth; and the consequence was, Freddie had a great many bad things said to him, which hurt his feelings so he did not dare to show his face on the play-ground; and yet Bill Hartwell, who set the story going, was a proud, boastful, selfish, cruel boy whom nobody liked or believed in.

The old saying is, "Murder will out;" which means that if a person is guilty, the smallest thing may bring his guilt to light. There are swift witnesses all along his path, ready, when least expected, to testify against him, which was now the case. Bill just stubbed his toe and fell, as boys do. Out jumped George Arnold's watch, and there it lay, right side up, on the ground pointing him to every boy who saw it as the real thief, and the meanest thief that could be; for he not only robbed George Arnold of his watch, but he tried to rob poor Freddie Howe of what is worth infinitely more than any watch that was ever made—his good name.

Freddie was vindicated before the whole school, and Bill Hartwell disgraced, as he deserved to be.

It is very hard to hide our sins. Deceiving is a dangerous and dark road to travel. Satan will be sure to try to lead you into it. But if you go, there is a certain disgrace at the end of it.

Faith and Rest:

The Blind Boy at Jacksonville.

I was going, with a friend, to the asylum for the blind. Just before reaching the grounds in which the building stands, we came to a group of five or six blind boys. They were playing together in a quiet, whispering way, pitifully unlike the boisterous sport of our clear-eyed, noisy youngsters; and on the top of a post at the corner of the field, taking no part in the play of his mates, seemingly utterly unconscious of any earthly form or sound, sat a little fellow—his feet hanging down, his little hands clasped, his eyelids shut over his blind eyes, and his face—peaceful beyond description in its expression—lifted to the sun. No picture or sculpture ever touched me so. I do not know what he was thinking of. Perhaps he was only lost in some childish dream—or listening to the tread of passing feet. But it seemed as if his thoughts had gone far away to the sun, into whose light his cheek was lifted, and the serene quiet of his young face expressed perfect satisfaction that he could feel its warmth, even though he could never behold its brightness. He knew that the sun was shining on him, and was content. And the remembrance of him shall be to me a perpetual sermon concerning Faith and Rest. When my eyes are blinded by doubt, so that I cannot see thee, who art the Light, I will remember that patient, peaceful countenance, lifted sun-ward out of its hopeless eclipse, and will still look up to thee, believing that thou art! As he was content to feel the warmth of the sun's rays, though he could not see their splendor, so, until the revelations of eternity, I will be satisfied with the kindness of thy providence and the comfort of thy love.

God bless the little fellow now and always. I shall never forget his fair, uplifted face, with the sunshine falling on it, and his attitude of perfect rest and peace. E. N. Lewis.

Taking a Stand.

Tom —— was invited to the room of a friend, where he found a party of young men.

"Will you smoke, Tom?" Tom did not smoke. He said he had given up smoking, and he meant to stick to it.

"A little hot punch, Tom?"

"No, sir," very decidedly.

"We are getting up a club, Tom, and want you, as a member of the old croquet club, to join the new one."

Tom still declined; and when asked why, he frankly told why. Members of the old croquet club occasionally drank whiskey, and what assurance was there that they would not do the same thing again, or worse? In clubs or associations of any kind bad habits of the few often drag the whole club down, and bring its members to disgrace. "So I must stay out," said Tom, "even at the cost of losing a friend."

On his way home, Tom was joined by another of the company.

"I was so glad to hear you say 'No,' Tom," cried the young man, who wanted to, but did not quite dare to take the lead.

Oh, how many thousands of young people, not quite strong enough to say "No" themselves, hail with thankful joy the "No" of a companion. They need holding up. We are not all oaks, able to breast temptation alone. We need support, assurance, the comfort of a strong brave heart to lean upon.

There is wonderful power in a clear, decided "No." It braces the person who says it; it braces every right-minded person who hears him. Oh, if the boys, and the girls too, would only be true to their conscience, to their convictions of right, to their Christian training, there would not be so many, many sad wrecks among us.

"Be steadfast," says Paul, "immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," and I am sure it is a noble part of his work to strengthen the weak.—Child's Paper.

By-Ways of the Bible.

Elijah's Servant Watching the Clouds.

"They waited for me as for the rain."—Job xxix., 23.

It is not intended to assert that Job spoke of waiting for Christ in the verse above quoted; but the servant waiting for the rain in 1 Kings xviii, 43, does manifestly typify Christ's servants waiting for Him; waiting for the "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord;" waiting for the great "latter rain" of which Zechariah speaks when every one grass of the field shall have a shower. These are not the only places in Scripture where Christ's coming is likened to the rain. It is left for Hosea, in the sixth chapter of his prophecy, to tell us that the Lord shall come twice as the former and the latter rain.

The circumstances of the case before us are remarkably interesting. It was a time of great drought. It had not rained upon the earth for three years and six months (a time, times and a half). So it is with us; the world is parched with infidelity, ungodliness, idolatry, and priestcraft. God's children cry out, "We cannot water this great burning desert." "O that Thou wouldst rend the heavens, that Thou wouldst come down." A time, times and a half have elapsed since the organized church has been mainly in the hands of the evil one, since the idol shepherd began to say,

"Come unto me and be fed,
To feed them with ashes for bread
And grass from the graves of the dead."

The servant of Elijah only shared in the desire of his people; they longed for the rain, and now that they had a promise of it we would expect them to await it nervously, feverishly, with many an anxious jumping up to look at the clouds. The servant but represented them; and in representing them he typified us. As the coming rain typified the coming Saviour, so the watching servant with the promise typifies all us who have the promise of Jesus' coming, and expect its speedy fulfilment.

Now let us turn more directly to our own case. Many are sad because servants of Jesus have looked for him and been disappointed; many drop their heads with shame when scoffers remind them of the fact. The failure of certain dates is a choice joke to season the eating and drinking of those who revel and say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" Thou fool, who ever awaited the long delayed-coming of a beloved friend without running to the window a dozen times in vain? Such disappointments are natural, the direct result of earnest desire and limited knowledge. But here we have a prefigurative prophecy plainly showing beforehand that it should be so. The prophet has declared, "There is a sound of abundance of rain," and now he says, "Go up—look." We can imagine with what alacrity the servant scrambled up the dividing ridge of Carmel, and peered out over the sea. We can see him shading his eyes with his hand to fend the rays of the sinking sun, and levelling the horizon round, carefully, repeatedly. He looks suddenly up to the zenith; he casts a glance of inquiry backward to Elijah, who pays no attention; he calls aloud to tell that he can see nothing; no answer—the man of God still sits prostrate on the ground, with his head clasped between his hands; he looks again at the western sky in vain search for a cloud, and then in a puzzled, hesitating way, comes slowly down. "Can it be that my master is a deceiver?" says he. "Was he mistaken about the rain?" Why has he sent me on this fool's errand?" So musing he comes and stands in respectful silence before Elijah. Elijah looks up at last from his reverie, and says, in a quiet serious voice, "Go again seven times."

Aye, that is it, seven times. Child of the risen Saviour, have you looked for him and been disappointed? Look again seven times. There was, surely, in the wisdom of God, some reason why this great event in Israel was ushered in with such a ceremony. The patient servant climbed the cliff six times in vain that we might be taught something. That something is this: some shall look for the Saviour several times before he really appears. When we come to look back from the threshold of the kingdom, we shall probably be able to count six dates, perhaps exactly six, which have been set with confident expectation, yet nevertheless proved fallacious. It is interesting to note that expectation has been raised about that number of times already. This is a reason, not for deeper despondency, but for more fervent hope. It may be that the next time we look we shall see a little cloud of unmistakable promise.

In this prophetic drama God did not leave the ungodly world unrepresented. While the servant of Elijah was commanded to watch for the signs of rain, Ahab, fit type for all that is bad, was commanded to eat and drink. It was late in the day, and they had eaten nothing since morning, probably nothing since the preceding day. The promise of rain would make them less careful of their stores; so it is likely that Ahab and his courtiers obeyed the command with a gusto that made them forget, for the time, both the past judgment and the promised blessing. Even so it shall be in the latter days, they shall be eating and drinking. Matth. xxiv., 38. The range of Mount Carmel, where these things took place, is Armageddon, i. e., the mountain of Megiddo. To be within such easy reach of Jezreel, the spot must have been not far from the town of Megiddo. For aught we know, Ahab may have spread his banquet on the very spot where the son of perdition will spread his on the day the Lord shall appear.

The day and the hour knoweth no man. Elijah did not specify what hour or even what day the rain would fall until the cloud became visible. The servant had stronger intimations that the shower would come soon than Ahab had, but neither had precise information.

Another event of this day has a prophetic bearing: the hurried return to Jezreel. Millenarians are aware how very intimately the world's promised blessing is connected with the return of Israel—perhaps it would be more correct to say that they are only slightly aware of it. Jezreel was the royal city. Jerusalem, even though now in her sackcloth and ashes, is the royal city of the world, the city of the great King (Matth. v., 35), and when the signs of glory begin to appear, there will be a great, a general return of Israel to Jerusalem, the royal city. Run to Jezreel, that the rain stop thee not. The day of the return of Israel and Judah is distinctly called the "day of Jezreel" in Hosea i., 11.

Then, Christian, watch and pray. It must needs be that the scoffers have their carnival. It must needs be that impatient ignorance look often in vain. It must needs be that many grow weary and sleep. But they that perseveringly watch and wait, shall not be ashamed.

Prayer.

The Apostle says: "We know not what we should pray for." We are indeed conscious of many wants: but we know little better than our children what we really need. We differ from our children, mainly in being at last, by experience, convinced that want and need are not identical. Children lean instinctively on higher power; we have learned to lean on higher wisdom. Yes, we have one more great conscious want, beyond those of childhood,—the want of some one to discriminate among our wants, and to take that paternal place to us in our blindness, which, as children, generally, we were so loth to have our parents take to us. We need to be wisely denied many things we ask for, and to have many things for which we do not ask. Says Calvin, in his comment on this passage, "We are blind in praying unto God, because, although we feel our evils, yet our minds are more intricated and confounded, than they can rightly elect what is convenient or expedient."

The Apostle adds the words, "as we ought"—"We know not what we should pray for as we ought"—perhaps to intimate, that even if, in a general way, we know what we should pray for, the mode and sphere, in which we should expect the answer, are hidden from us. We are ignorant of God's ways of granting even our right requests; so that he may at times seem to be denying them, when he is most fully and satisfactorily answering them. The groanings, or indistinct yearnings of the Spirit within us, not being capable of verbal expression, cannot be interpreted by any, except by Him who searcheth the hearts; so that though our desires may be divinely guided, we may be totally ignorant and grievously mistaken as to the mode in which they are to be fulfilled.

But the whole tenor of the passage before us to the conclusion of the chapter, is such as to emphasize the inward sphere of prayer and its answers. Men's wants are largely centred on objects outside of themselves. They sigh and cry for the removal of evils and afflictions. They crave success in this or that scheme, at the hands of God. All this time we suppose them to be moved by that Spirit, "which maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God;" and consequently, that they may with confidence look for the answer to their prayers. And when they are dismayed by supposed failures to receive answers to prayer, they doubtless overlook all that great sphere of spiritual life and growth within them, where answers to prayer may be most expected to be found. Without doubt, God often, and to some extent, always, answers the prayers of his people for outward good objects, by making them better men inwardly. Often a prayer that some bitter cup may pass away is answered in a far better way than the suppliant and sufferer imagined, by making him calmer, more patient, and more able to endure it, and then letting it come with just that reduction of power to injure. The answer is in the form of an inward elevation; the outward storm is not assuaged in the least, but it no longer threatens to overwhelm; it beats harmlessly at our feet. Of the two factors in the problem, the one which we prayed to have altered remains unchanged, but a far wiser solution is reached by altering the other and more important factor—ourselves.—Selected.

Suspended Animation.

A Singular Case.

One of the most remarkable cases that we have ever been called upon to chronicle has lately come under our notice, and we propose to lay the facts before the public exactly as they are. On Lorain street, above Jersey, there resides with her step-father, a young lady, Miss Ellen K. White, who is probably between seventeen and eighteen years of age, very prepossessing in her manner, and finely educated. About six weeks ago she was taken dangerously ill with what the family physician pronounced typhoid fever, and for some days was so low that all hopes of her recovery were given up. She rallied, however, and, under careful treatment, she was in a fair way to recover, when, about two weeks ago, she had a relapse, and sank rapidly, until the breath seemed to leave her body, and she was pronounced a corpse. Her body was prepared for the grave, and preparations were made by her bereaved parents and friends for the funeral, when her mother, who could not be made to realize the fact that her only daughter was dead to her forever, noticed that though the limbs of her daughter were rigid, yet the body retained its warmth. Physicians were called, but they decided that she was dead, and every attempt to resuscitate her failing, it was determined, last Sunday, to consign her to the grave, and a coffin was procured. On Saturday, while one of the neighbors and the mother were standing by the side of the supposed corpse, the door, which had been left open, blew shut with a loud noise, which had the effect of so acting upon the girl as to bring her to and set her lifeblood in motion. She sprang up in bed, and throwing her arms around her mother's neck, wept tears of joy over her escape from the horrid death of being buried alive. Miss White said that when she felt herself sinking she had no fear of death, but turned upon her side, and as she did so all pain disappeared and she sank to sleep as peacefully as a child. She lay, she thinks, unconscious for an hour or more, for when she came to herself, though she could not move or speak, she found that she was laid out ready for burial. She could see her mother by her side, and all those who came to see her; could hear them talk, and understand all they said. She tried to speak, but her tongue refused to do its office; she tried to move, but could not; and there she lay, blessing her mother for her refusal to allow her to be buried. Upon two occasions, when her mother was alone in the room with her, it seemed as though she left the body, and, standing by the side of her body, could look down upon it as she could upon her mother. She said she was unable to describe the feelings that she experienced upon these occasions. When not tortured with the fear of being buried alive, she was perfectly at rest, perfectly happy, and when the door slammed which brought her to, it seemed as though she was, to use her own words, "compelled to commence a hard day's work." Miss White is now in a fair way to recover. Her strength is gaining rapidly, and from every indication, we should judge she had a long life before her.—Cleveland Plain Dealer, May 31.

One Worm Did It.

One day I was walking with some friends through the "wilderness," at Sudbrook Park, in Surrey, when Dr. Ellis drew our attention to a large sycamore tree, decayed to the core. "That fine tree," said he, "was killed by a single worm."

In answer to our inquiries we found that about two years previously the tree was as healthy as any in the park, when a wood-worm, about three inches long, was observed to be forcing its way under the bark of the trunk. It then caught the eye of a naturalist who was staying here, and he remarked, "Let that worm alone, and it will kill the tree." This seemed very improbable, but it was agreed that the black-headed worm should not be disturbed.

After a time it was discovered that the worm had tunnelled its way a considerable distance under the bark. The next summer the leaves of the tree dropped off very early, and in the succeeding year it was a dead, rotten thing, and the hole made by the worm might be seen in the very heart of the once noble trunk.

"Ah!" said one who was present, "let us learn a lesson from that single tree. How many who once promised fair for usefulness in the world and the church have been ruined by a single sin!—Selected.

Boasting Christians.

What a noise do the poor people make in the streets of London, when they cry their commodities! Each telleth what he hath, and would have all hearers take notice of it; and yet it is but poor stuff they make such an outcry about.

You cannot hear of any rich men talk of the money-bags that they have in their chests, or what treasures of rich wares the merchantman hath in his warehouse; not a word of that. Every man rather desires to hide his wealth, and, when he is urged, is ready to dissemble his ability. No otherwise is it in the true spiritual riches; he who is full of true saving grace and good works, affects not to make a show of it to the world, but rests sweetly in the comforts of a good conscience and the silent applause of God's Spirit witnessing with his own. Whilst, on the contrary, a boasting of our talents, or merits, argues a miserable poverty in them all.

Ink Stains.—In a visit to Marseilles, a little incident came within my observation, which may prove serviceable to many of your large class of readers. In the Hotel des Empereurs, where I was residing, an inkstand was accidently overturned upon a beautiful table-spread; those present thought that the cloth was ruined. A servant being called in to remove the article from the table, all were surprised when he assured us that no harm was was done, and more surprised at witnessing the successful means resorted to for removing the ink stains. The servant sprinkled over the cloth a quantity of pepper and salt, and rubbed them over its surface. The mixture soon absorbed every portion of the ink, and the table-spread was in as good a condition as before the accident. The spread was of woollen fabric. I have never had occasion for testing this simple mixture when applied to other cloths, but it certainly would not be attended with any bad result.

Sleep.

The following remarks on sleep are so in harmony with nature and common sense that we commend them to the consideration of all. They express the views we have entertained for many years.

There is no fact more clearly established in the physiology of man than this, that the brain expends its energies and itself during the hours of wakefulness, and that these are recuperated during sleep; if the recuperation does not equal the expenditure, the brain withers—this is insanity. Thus it is that, in early English history, persons who were condemned to death by being prevented from sleeping, always died raving maniacs; thus it is, also, that those who are starved to death become insane; the brain is not nourished, and they cannot sleep. The practical inferences are these:

1. Those who think most, who do most brain work, require most sleep.
2. That time saved from necessary sleep is infallibly destructive to mind, body, and estate.
3. Give yourself, your children, your servants—give all that are under you, the fullest amount of sleep they will take, compelling them to retire at some regular hour, and to rise the moment they wake; and within a fortnight, nature, with almost the regularity of the sun, will unloose the bands of sleep the moment enough repose has been secured for the wants of the system. This is the only safe and sufficient rule; and as to the question how much sleep any one requires, each must be a rule for himself. Nature will never fail to write it out to the observer under the regulations just given.

Effects of Tea on the System.

The Boston Journal of Chemistry publishes a lengthy article on the properties of good tea, in the course of which the writer says that it is no matter of wonder with him that brain-workers, in all the years since tea was introduced, have regarded it with the highest favor. It has a power to subdue irritability, refresh the spirits, and renew the energies, such as no other agent possesses. When the system is exhausted by labor and study, a cup of tea invigorates and restores as no other form of food or beverage can. He thinks it promotive of longevity, and adds: "Tea saves food by lessening the waste of the body, soothes the muscular system, and affords stimulus to the brain. The young do not need it, and it is worthy of note that they do not crave or like it. Children will frequently ask for coffee, but seldom for tea. To aged people, whose powers of digestion and whose bodily substance have begun to fail together, it is almost a necessity."

While a talented temperance orator was recently speaking at Cleveland, he was asked, "What shall we do with all the grain that is now required for distilling?" "Feed the drunkard's wife and children with it. They have gone hungry long enough," was the ready reply.

A Place for Prayer.—"Where do you find a place to pray in?" was asked of a pious sailor on board a whaling ship.

"Oh," he said, "I can always find a quiet spot at the masthead."

"Sam, do you find a spot for secret prayer?" asked a minister of a stable-boy.

"O, yes, sir: that old couch is my closet."

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 300 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity; by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or, The Wicked Dead remain eternally under death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letters to a Clergyman; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburg, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for 2 cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our own expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. The Essential Baptism; by the Editor of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

Man's Nature and Destiny; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

The Atonement, by Geo. Storrs, and The Gospel Hope, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price, 5 cents.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

FROM REV. WM. D. BRIDGE.

TOPSFIELD, MASS, July 7, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Many months have been numbered since I wrote you my last letter. I was then carrying on a kindly and close discussion in your opened columns on the subject of the derivation of our English word "Devil." Both of us (Judge Halsted and myself), were investigating each other's premises and logical deductions, and some sharp points were raised on both sides, when, mysteriously as it probably seemed to you, I ceased sending my articles in reply to those of the Judge. The time I ceased sending was about January 1st, '68.

Jan. 7th there commenced a most gracious revival in my church, and special evening meetings were held nearly every night for sixty consecutive nights. Upward of 80 men and women were hopefully converted. The average age of all the 80 or more is over 25 years, and 37 of the number were heads of families. To God be all the glory. Amen and amen.

Of course my time was fully taken up with labors attendant on and consequent on this work of grace, and I was utterly unable to examine with scrutinizing accuracy such a linguistic and theological subject matter as was then under discussion between the Judge and myself.

During the recent months my time has been exhausted in labors connected with some of the temporalities of the church, and up to the present time I have been at a loss for time in which to resume our discussion.

If you think it advisable, and are willing, I am ready to resume the debate which closed so suddenly, so unexpectly—in mediis rebus—and present the arguments on the side taken by myself.

Being treated by yourself with perfect courtesy in all the debate up to the point of its sudden cessation, I deem it but courteous on my part—in view of my breaking off the discussion as I did—to seek permission to reopen the same before I send any article.

With your decision of course I shall fully coincide, as I have no rights in the matter save, perhaps, in this respect, that a very disproportionate space was occupied by the Judge in comparison with that filled by my articles.

I feel satisfied that any Italian scholar would deny the validity of several of his honor's arguments founded on the Italian "articles," and would affirm the justness of my claims. Clearly the Italian grammars and dictionaries were on my side.

Possibly you may judge that your readers have lost their interest in the discussion by reason of the break in the thread of argument. If so, all I would ask would be that the plain circumstances which caused such a sudden breakage should be given to your readers, as a justification of the same, thereby saving me from the imputation of conscious weakness in the argument. Enough on this point.

The HERALD OF LIFE is duly received and read. Many things in it please me, and of course, from my point of view, many meet my disapproval.

I have often wondered why I cannot claim the title of "Adventist," as well as that of "Methodist," since I am probably as firm a believer in Christ's Second Advent as yourself or any of your readers, patrons or friends.

True, I am not a fellow believer with you in some other points of theologic doctrine, and probably I do not differ from you any more strongly than some members of the Advent church, bearing with you the same denominational name. There are several families of the Advent faith, discrepant in views, in economy, in usages, and in only one point actually harmonizing.

Glad am I that the age of vituperation has gone to the "tomb of the Capulets." We differ in faith; we agree, or should agree, in the amenities of Christian feeling and debate.

We use the same terminology, but apply it in diverse ways. For instance, your motto, "Life only in Christ," is used by me, very frequently, in my sermons, exhortations, etc.; but you give it one meaning or explanation, and I another. You affirm one view of the term "Life," while I hold to another. You maintain the special characterization: existence; I maintain the special characterization: blessedness. The latter includes and presupposes the former; but the former includes the latter only by assumption.

Your editorial on "Sectarianism" is of great value till you reach an unqualified and illegitimate conclusion, as follows: "Shall this prayer ever be answered? It never can be while 'real Christians' suffer themselves to be separated and divided by different creeds imposed on them by 'the commandments of men.'" Here in these last four words is the non sequitur of the whole conclusion.

This assumption, that the various denominations are such by the adoption of uninspired man-formed creeds, is to my view unfair. By parallel argumentation we might legitimately ask you and your co-workers of the Advent church to "come out from among them and be separate." We need no more "come-outers." We need holy men speaking the words of truth in soberness; such words of truth as they shall discover in Scripture.

If you discover, from your view-point, a non-resurrection of the wicked dead, and other similar doctrines in the word of God, it is your bounden duty to affirm them, to preach them. And if I, from my view-point, discover the other doctrines held by me, it is my duty to maintain them and preach them. We should fail to be guiltless if we failed thus to do.

Therefore the question reverts: Why your exhortation to "real Christians" to come out from and break down the churches founded on the different creeds?

The Advent church has its own economy; so has the Methodist. The Advent church has its creed; so the Methodist church. Is sectarianism so monstrous a sin for the Methodist, and so venial for the Adventist? I trow not.

I see no more reason why all the various evangelical churches should disrupt their organizations and coalesce in one, than that all the Bridges, Joneses, Browns, Storrses, should resign their family names and enlist all in one great family of Smiths.

John xvii., 21 reads thus: [We omit our Br.'s Greek.—ED.] "In order that all may be one . . . . in order that even the same in us one may be." The oneness is ONENESS in Christ—not necessarily oneness in church forms, usages, or names. And we do not see that oneness in Christ necessitates oneness in church relationship.

But I see I am prolix on this point. My motto is, "Let there be light:" God's grand word to nature in its formative state.

If you have any new theologic light, I say, "Let it shine"—not "make it shine," but "let it shine;" for if it is truly light; it will shine.

If your views are true, then let in their light upon our views and ours shall be cast into the shade by your superior brightness. If ours are true, then yours will shine only as the penny taper under the blaze of the noonday sun. Thanks to God that

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers."

Let us preach less of theories, dogmatic and theologic, and more of practicalities, being Christians at work. Your brother in Christ,

WM. D. BRIDGE.

RESPONSE BY THE EDITOR.

We are glad to hear that Br. Bridge has been so highly favored with a revival in his congregation, and among such a class of people. We rejoice when sinners are truly turned to Christ, whoever and whatever may be the instrument.

As to reopening the discussion on the Italian "articles," it is our opinion the time since its close has been so long, and this volume of the HERALD is so near its close, it will be best to let it rest for the present. If it is to be revived again, we wish the parties, by a private correspondence, to agree upon some plan for the discussion that shall abridge it in our columns.

The "denominational name, ADVENTISTS," we, as an individual, have never accepted. Therefore Br. Bridge should not identify us personally, as of that "denomination." True, we believe most firmly in the second personal advent of our Lord Jesus Christ, and we believe in many other Bible truths at the same time; but we do not accept any name which indicates a new sect or party: we acknowledge but one true church, viz., the church of Christ, embracing every one, wherever found, who has "By one Spirit been baptized into one body," viz., "the body of Christ," 1 Corth. xii., 12, 27. We have no other test of fellowship. The Advent church, as such, is no more the church of Christ than any other sectarian organization; it is only another mistake of well-meaning persons, dividing the body of Christ. We have always regretted to see such organizations, and have never united with any of them since we withdrew from the Methodist E. church in 1840. We have had no part in undertaking to organize a church or churches with a sectarian name for near thirty years past. "The Lord knoweth them who are his," and when he returns from heaven he will organize the true church, to be divided no more by the ambition or pride of party leaders.

Br. Bridge mistakes our position by supposing that we are identified with any organized body with a "denominational name." We are not, nor do we intend to be. Personally, we accept all persons to our fellowship who manifest that they belong to Christ—are of his body; and we judge of this, not by their creeds—written or unwritten, nor by their connection with some organism called a church, but by their Christ-likeness. If they manifest his spirit of love, we count them of his body, and accept them as such without asking whether they have a "denominational name:" that is no part of our inquiry. We "know no man after the flesh," or any human arrangement; only "after the Spirit" do we seek to know any one as a Christian. He may be in what is called a church, with a sectarian name, but that makes him neither better nor worse in our estimation. We wish to know if his heart values Christ more, and above all such human arrangements. If he regards the peculiarities of his human creed above the Word itself, and appeals to the former instead of the latter, he is deficient in an important element of Christian character. We next wish to know whether this attachment to a denominational creed is from the force of unavoidable circumstances, or is his own deliberate choice. If it is the latter, he has yet to learn that God's word is the only outward standard of appeal for a member of the body of Christ.

Before he attains to this knowledge we may receive him as a "babe in Christ," but he has yet to learn that church creeds are of no binding authority whatever. Such creeds either are in harmony with God's word, or they are not. If they are, they are useless. If they are not, they are pernicious, because they lead away from, or prevent the truth from entering into the heart.

Our Br.'s illustration about church names turns in our favor. If the "Bridges, Joneses, Browns," etc., should not "resign their family names, and enlist in one grand family of Smiths," then the family of Smiths should not divide up into numerous families of different names. So we think "the family of CHRIST" has no right to divide into parties and call themselves by other names than his. By doing so, they practically say, we do not like the peculiar name of the Head of our family; and what is too true, they more frequently call themselves by their adopted name than by the name of Christ. This breeds divisions and "carnal" works, often leading to the utter loss of the Spirit which "baptized into one body."

It is certainly best to "preach less of theories" if we have those that cannot bear the light of God's word; yea, not only less of them, but none at all, unless they are Bible truth. True theories are essential to a true faith and true experience, and the practice cannot be what it should be without all these.

TRUTH AND ERROR.

[We find the following sermon in the Advance. We give it entire for the many excellencies it contains; but shall append some notes.]

"GOD AND LIBERTY."

A LAY SERMON BY HON. S. B. GOOKINS.

WHEN Mexico threw off the Spanish yoke, she adopted as her national motto, "God and Liberty." The motto suggests a truth of which it is probable the Mexicans had little conception. The essence of that truth is, that there is no true liberty save in doing the will of God.

This has not been the popular conception. Men generally feel, say what they will, that God is a hard master; a tyrannical sovereign; a despot whose government is a perpetual burden. (1.) The love of liberty is a natural instinct. We are naturally disposed to resist despotism, come whence and how it may. Hence the normal state of the human heart is one of hostility to God, and of opposition to his government. We are, naturally, rebels. (2.)

Many will not admit this. They profess great admiration of the sovereign of the universe. Admiration, that is the word; and it truly expresses an emotion very common among mankind. The glory of the heavens, and the earth arrayed in gorgeous beauty, excite our admiration. The sentiment is commendable and proper. We do, in a vague sense "see through nature up to nature's God." We may go further, and in a general way admire God's providential management of the affairs of the universe. The untutored savage may "see God in clouds and hear him in the winds," and we, too may follow his footsteps along the path of the hurricane and wonder at his power. We may admire the arrangement of the seasons, the alternations of heat and cold, the early and the latter rain, the harvest bringing its treasures and the mines their gold for the service of man. This is all very well. Probably the birds and animals experience similar emotions, according to the measure of their capacity for enjoyment; and if there were no law in the world defining the relations of right and wrong, men and animals might get on very well, and have a good time generally. And this "good time generally" is used in no light or trivial sense. It is a glorious and grand experience which the developed and cultivated intellect may enjoy. The domains of nature and of art are stored with exhaustless treasures which ought to command not only the admiration but the love of every intelligent being toward the Giver of these numberless blessings. (3.)

But we are moral beings. God is simply and infinitely good. All moral qualities like his are good, and all moral qualities unlike or opposed to his are bad. (4.) There is necessarily and inherently a conflict between the two. There is much speculation as to whether this conflict might or might not have been, by some act of sovereign moral power, forestalled and prevented. I have no objection to this speculation. Those who find it a profitable field in which to pursue their investigations may be commended for their labors. But the world is very practical, and the masses of mankind will probably find their profit in taking things as they are, and seeing what can be made out of them. Things as they are show that we have a race of moral beings, or rather of being immortal beings; a world full of sin and crime, of violation of law, and the question is, what does the situation demand?

Nor will it do to rest the charge of rebellion upon the general immorality of the race. True that is bad enough. The daily record of fraud and crime seen in the morning papers, or brought us by the telegraph; the endless list of vices seen everywhere, the gallows, the prison and the prize ring, the gambler's den and the brothel may be sufficient to show, as they surely do show, that the race is anything but virtuous, taken as a whole; but the philosophy of sin demands a deeper research into the motive powers of the human heart.

Do we, or do we not, find in our own hearts, the conscious presence of a disturbing force, evidencing a misadjustment of the powers of the soul? Assuming the will of God to be perfect in purity, holiness and love, do we find within ourselves, not esthetically, but morally, a natural preference for these qualities? Do not men in trade find within themselves a natural tendency toward a preference for self? Do not men in the professions find within themselves a natural impulse to seek their own advantage at the expense of that of an adversary or a competitor? And is not this the very impulse which, unrestrained, ripens into theft and robbery? And do we not feel, therefore, the necessity of restraining these tendencies, knowing that if these impulses continue to grow we shall finally find them mastering us? And do not these very facts of tendency to growth, and necessity of restraint, demonstrate to the candid and conscientious searcher into his own heart, that there is an evil force there that needs, not to be mollified merely, but cast out? And (I can speak to a part only now, and sorry am I that it is so), when this evil force has been cast out, by a reversal of the motive power of the soul, has not this tendency consciously disappeared, and been supplanted by one of a different character, evidently not of, but above ourselves, leading us to an ever-present desire to do men good rather than evil?

Now this evil force, call it by what name you will, is the bondage of sin. (5.) Sin is the only tyrant in the universe. It is ever present. Inexorable as the grave, and no possibility of its demands being satisfied, supply having no law but that of growth. Endeavor as we may to delude ourselves into the feeling that there is enjoyment in the shifts and pretexts to which we resort, there is not a man or woman of intelligence and culture who does not know and feel that it is all sham and pretence. Look at the long procession of weary wanderers through this world, seeking rest and finding none. Every one of them knows and feels that he is a slave.

How is he to regain his freedom? But one way is possible. It is not by abandoning the pursuit. Man was made to be free and happy. God intended that he should be. The question comes back: How shall he regain his lost freedom? The answer is: By a reversal of the motive power of the soul.

Freedom consists in a state of the mind. The essence of slavery is in struggling against the current of affairs, instead of floating with the current. A man who is in jail is no prisoner if he would rather be there than anywhere else. It is the deprivation of liberty against his will that makes him a prisoner.

God's will brings nothing but good, joy, liberty, love. The man who throws himself into the current of that will and moves with it and is guided by it, from choice, can no more feel a sense of servitude or constraint, than the bird on jubilant wing, that has escaped the trammels of its cage. His very mental and moral constitution forbids it. I do not forget Paul's agonized cry, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" But was not Paul then doing the very thing that he would rather have done than any other imaginable thing? The beleaguered garrison may cry out: who shall deliver us from the assailing foe? but with the fullest determination to "fight it out on that line." The man who goes to the stake for a principle is no more a slave than is he who on the battle field rushes into the arms of death. He is under the impulse of a high, imperial and unreversible resolve, which scouts the bodily pain as a trifle light as air, in comparison with the supreme purpose of the soul.

But suppose he chooses not to be under the influence and guidance of God's will. This he may do. There are two moral forces in the universe—one good, the other bad. There is no possibility that the boundary line of these two domains shall cross each other. The essential and inherent qualities of each forbid it. We may in our puppet dance through life, jump from one side to the other; but there the line is, nevertheless, unaltered and unalterable. And there are controlling forces within the soul adequate to regulate its movements and choices; and we may choose to enter which field and serve in which army we will. I will not deny but that there is a certain degree of satisfaction experienced in the temporary triumphs of the left wing; but the question is, where are the substantial victories, those which bring real freedom—emancipation from the dominion and power of the forces of evil?

All are struggling for the same goal. Would that we could say, "all are converging to the same center." We need all the help we can get. What wisdom would there be in the engineer, if he were to throw aside his motor and undertake to draw the car by his power of his own muscle? Yea, more, what wisdom if, upon a steamer, when nearing a rockbound shore, driven by evil winds, if he will not reverse his engine?

This is the great point. The motive power of the soul must be reversed. Instead of attempting to "run the machine" ourselves, we must by our own voluntary choice, (howsoever brought about—I am not discussing that) commit it to the control of a hand, head and heart, infinite in power, wisdom and love. We must go with the current, not merely because it is the only way to the desired haven, but because we would rather do that than anything else. Then, and then only shall we arise to a true conception of the profound significance of the exhortation to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free," and of the depth of the truth involved in the declaration: "My yoke is easy and my burden is light."

NOTES BY ED. HER. OF LIFE.

1. A very large allowance is to be made for this feeling from the false teaching of a corrupt Christianity in regard to the government of God. It is no wonder men think God is a hard Master, etc., when they are taught that he requires of them impossibilities, and denounces such a penalty as hopeless or endless torture for failure, with no possibility of release from such a doom on any terms. Let them know that God requires nothing of his creatures that he has not provided ample means for a compliance, and that a neglect of those means is not followed with a vindictive infliction of torture; but that by their neglect to improve those means they fail to secure the greatest of all blessing, life eternal, which God in his love has proffered them as a free gift, and urged upon them in the most impassioned manner, saying, "Why will ye die?" and by the demonstration of his sincerity in the gift of his Son. Let men see this unmingled with those repulsive views which really represent God as a "tyrannical sovereign," and far less opposition would be found to the government of God than what is now seen under the false teachings of the age of a corrupted Christianity.

2. Here, again, we believe is an error. "The normal state of the human heart is one of hostility to" injustice and oppression; which proves it is not against God, the true God: but it is opposed to such a God as a corrupt theology depicts; and such opposition is evidence, not of being "naturally, rebels;" but the reverse. It is the theological misrepresentations of the character and government that we "naturally rebel" against. Such teaching has filled the world with crime and wrong; for no people are ever better than they suppose their God to be; and if they are taught that the God they are required to obey is revengeful, imposing on them impossible conditions, and following failure with torments which no earthly tyrant could inflict, it is not strange that they should be "naturally rebels" against such a God; nor are they likely ever to divest their minds of an abhorrence of such a government till they are by some means led to a better view of the Divine Being and his administration.

3. That is all true; and let it be remembered it is the "goodness of God that leadeth to repentance." Let that goodness be more perfectly dwelt upon, and its effects will be seen in a greater disposition among men to render God the homage of their hearts. Take the principle we contend for into a family. Where is the most love, respect and obedience seen? Is it to those parents who threaten the most terrible and shocking inflictions of punishment? or, those who correct only in a loving manner, and whose whole life is a manifestation of love and kindness? The latter may have a disobedient and incorrigible child; but the question is, which of the two is most likely to have an obedient and loving family? Can there be any doubt in the matter?

4. That is a grand truth. Let that be carried out in the representation of God's moral government and it will work wonders in regenerating men. But this grand truth has been constantly belied or ignored in the theology of centuries past, nor is it yet free from the corrupting influences of a false system.

5. If our friend had said, it is the bondage to the flesh—our animal nature run mad—we would have said, truth. This allowing our animal propensities to rule, without restraint, is the sin of sins: the flesh then becomes a "tyrant." The remainder of this article is too good to need any notes, only to say, we most heartily approve it.

[We take the following article from the Independent. Our friend HARVEY W. will pardon us for altering the last line of his borrowed poetry at the close of his excellent production.—ED. HER. OF LIFE.]

A PEEP IN THE "DARK ROOM."

DEVELOPING AGENCIES.

BY HARVEY WENDELL.

IN the early days of photographic science the "dark room" of the artist gave rise to many curious speculations. The prevailing impression was that the only necessity for it was to conceal from inquisitive eyes the art by which the "human face divine" was so rapidly and so accurately delineated upon the polished surface of the metallic plate. But the science grew in importance, and men increased in wisdom; and to-day it is pretty generally understood that, for the production of the beautiful specimens of the photographic art, which are so abundant, and which reflect so much credit upon the photographers of this age, we are as much indebted to the darkness as to the light. We can best illustrate by asking the reader to step with us into the dark room of the artist, and witness the successive steps taken in the production of a picture.

We are now in a room from which the light is carefully excluded, except that we find a jet of gas or a lamp burning. This artificial light has no perceptible influence upon the chemical agents employed. We see the artist take a thoroughly clean plate of glass, and, holding it by one corner, he dexterously flows over its surface a syrupy substance, which forms a transparent film upon the glass. This glass, thus prepared, is then plunged into a silver bath, and in a very few moments, by a chemical union of the silver in the bath and the sensitizing agents in the film, we see the plate covered by a salt of silver, and it is declared to be in readiness to receive the image of the subject. No light, however, must now fall upon it, except that which may be reflected from the objects to be photographed. The plate is, therefore, placed in a slide, and this is put into the camera, so that the first light which will reach it shall be that which etches or impresses upon its surface the proper subject. This accomplished, in a few seconds of time, and the artist returns to his dark room with the slide, and tells us he has the picture

Our curiosity is excited, and we remain with him to witness the additional manipulations. He opens the slide, and we are permitted to make an examination of the plate. We observed it as he took it from his bath, covered with a cream-colored film; and as we look upon it now it presents precisely the same appearance. There is no more of a picture there now than when he took it from the bath. We scan it closely, and pronounce the art an imposition—we vote the artist a first-class humbug. He smiles, assuring us that the picture is there, and pledges us instant proof of the fact. He sees the picture no more than we do; but he has been working in harmony with well-ascertained laws of nature, and his faith staggers not, albeit up to this point no trace of light or shadow can be detected upon the surface of the plate. He has faith. We demand a sign.

Observe him now. Taking the plate again, and holding it horizontally with one hand, with the other he quickly and evenly covers it with a solution from a bottle. Wonder of wonders! In an instant the image stands out before us in all the perfection of outline, and very soon, by a subsequent process, in all the fidelity of light and shade. Sceptical no longer we bow in homage at the shrine of art. The artist assured us that the latent image was upon the plate when we doubted and denied; but with us "seeing is believing." The application of the "developer" made us perfectly orthodox; but for that we should still be in the midnight darkness of photographic infidelity.

How beautifully this process illustrates the faith which should characterize our efforts in the divine art of saving souls—our efforts to impress the image of Jesus upon the hearts of those whom it may be our duty to instruct. The application of the developing agent in the dark room presupposes the preparatory work, and the action of light upon the sensitive chemical surface. The preparatory work and the action of the light all look to the developer to crown their agency with success. The developer might say to the light and to the chemical agents employed, just as Jesus says to those who labor for him, "Without me ye can do nothing." It is our business to do all the preparatory work—to perform all that human agency allied to divine power can accomplish—and then, with a sublime and cheerful faith, to leave to God the developing process.

How many anxious fathers and mothers how many faithful Christian pastors, how many sacrificing and self-denying Sabbath-School teachers, are almost ready to sink down discouraged, desponding, because the developing process does not keep pace with their labors—does not meet their expectations. They toil assiduously; they take the depraved, hard heart, and unweariedly bestow upon it the preparatory labor; they coat it all over with the film of Christian sympathy and love; they bring it into contact with the truth, plunge it, to use our figure, into the silver-bath of truth—the glorious truth which relates to eternal life; they pray for the light of God's Spirit to shine clearly and with quickening power upon the heart; they set before it Christ Jesus in all the loveliness and tenderness of his character and offices; they wait, and watch, and pray; and yet they see no result—no image of the heavenly, no well-defined impression of spiritual beauty. And, not unfrequently, they are led to exclaim, Labor lost! and to bow their hearts in the keen agony of disappointed hopes.

Fellow-Christian, "be of good cheer." You are working, if working faithfully, in harmony with well ascertained laws. Be content. "Have faith in God;" he "giveth the increase." "Be not faithless but believing." Having done all your duty, "stand still and see the salvation of the Lord." We may not take you into the dark room of his purposes, and counsels, and providences; but it is his work to develop and impress his own image upon the heart you have so patiently and trustfully trained and cultured, and in his own good time the work shall be accomplished.

Just what developing agency the Lord shall see fit to employ it is not our province to curiously inquire. The heart may yield under the gentle, tender invitations of the gospel. It may melt down like wax under the subduing influences of the Holy Spirit, and thus be readily impressed with the image of Jesus. But there are agencies which aid this development, when the stubborn heart refuses to bow submissively to the easy yoke of Christ.

If you will go back once more to the dark room of the artist, and analyze the developing agent, you will find it to consist wholly of iron and acid. Taste, and you will find it is an acrid, pungent, nauseous compound. And yet this it was which brought out the latent image, and fixed it upon the transparent tablet.

And how often we find that the iron must enter into the soul before the heart yields to the gentle sway of Jesus. "Before I was afflicted I went astray," was the confession upon the lips of Israel's sweet singer. In how many cases does the acid, nauseous, bitter cup of disappointments and losses prove to be but God's developer. And, if the sweet persuasives of gospel invitation shall fail to win the heart, he who "does not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men," will employ just that agency which shall accomplish the work. We will leave off our undue anxiety, and commit the cause of those for whom we labor in trusting faith to him who hath said, "I will bring it to pass."

Even as God cares for individual souls, he cares for nations. He will not be unmindful of the prayers and tears amid which the institutions of our loved country were planted. Our history for the past few years should establish our faith in God. What he could not accomplish for us in the flood-tide of prosperity was brought to us in the time of adversity. And what agency, let us ask, has developed the noblest humanity apparent in the last fifty years of our national life? It was the dread, fiery ordeal of war. A patriotism which existed only in the conceptions of men, and had found expression only in the Fourth of July oratory of this nation, became at once an actual fact, a thing of tremendous life and gigantic power. The world has rarely witnessed a spectacle so sublimely grand as the spirit of patriotism evoked by the caustic, bitter agency of war. Its manifestation furnished proof conclusive of the existence of an intense loyalty, a fervid patriotism, latent in the great liberty-loving American heart, waiting only for the exigency which should develop it in all its moral sublimity and grandeur.

Christian brother! labor patiently, trustfully. It is yours to toil, to suffer, to wait. The sleepless eye of God is upon the seed you have sown, and he will not lose sight of it. He will honor his truth.

"And duly shall appear
In verdure, beauty, strength,
The tender blade, the stalk, the ear,
And the full corn at length.
"Thou canst not toil in vain:
Cold, heat, and moist, and dry,
Shall foster and mature the grain
For garners by and by."

MEANING OF WORDS AND PHRASES.

We use the same terminology, but apply it in diverse ways. For instance, your motto, "Life only in Christ," is used by me, very frequently, in my sermons, exhortations, etc.; but you give it one meaning or explanation, and I another. You affirm one view of the term "Life," while I hold to another. You maintain the special characterization: existence; I maintain the special characterization: blessedness. The latter includes and presupposes the former; but the former includes the latter only by assumption.

THE foregoing is from BR. BRIDGE's letter, found on the first page of this paper. We are glad he uses our invaluable phrase, "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST;" but we regret that he does not see the same "meaning" in it that we do. That living "existence" is the "special characterization" of the term "Life" we have no more doubt than we have that the term "living God" means a live God, and not merely a "blessed" God, or a God having "blessedness." To say, a blessed God, may "presuppose" that He is alive, but it does not alter the fact that the expression "living God" has the meaning of a God alive, or having a living existence.

The term Life, in the Bible, as in all other writings, has the primary meaning of "living existence." And no expounder of that Book has any right to change that sense, unless there is an imperative necessity, and that necessity must be obvious. What is the necessity for changing life to blessedness? Can any rational reason be given "only by assumption" that man is inherently immortal? We do not believe that Br. Bridge will pretend that any other reason exists.

On which side, then, is the "assumption," his or ours? Let him prove by the testimony of inspiration that inherent immortality exists in man, and then he has a good reason for changing the primary meaning of the term Life to blessedness. Till he produces that proof his change of the meaning of the term is "only by assumption."

The terms life and blessed have each their appropriate meaning and original words, in Hebrew and Greek, to express their sense. All words are sometimes used figuratively; but such cases are generally manifest to the reader.

The term life has its "special characterization" in the Bible, and it is that of "living existence." That is its first and primary meaning. Beginning at Genesis, the first time the term occurs, (chap. i., 20) it has this sense, and no other: thus, "Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life." Does that mean "blessedness?" Again, "Every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life." verse 30. Shall we say, wherein is "blessedness?"

Again, chap. ii., 7. "God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Does the term blessedness fit here as a substitute for life and living? Then there was the tree of Life, and God excluded sinful man from it with this assigned reason, "Lest he take of it, and eat, and live forever." Does that mean, lest he should have "blessedness" forever? Is it not clear that a living existence is what is intended in these various places?

Further, in Genesis vi., 17, a flood of waters to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life," etc., and chap. vii., 22, "All flesh died . . . . in whose nostrils was the breath of life," etc.

We might multiply examples to any extent showing the "special characterization" of the term life is that of living existence." How then is our view "only by assumption:" We might fill columns of our paper demonstrating the truth of our position; while Br. Bridge is wholly dependent on the "assumption" that man is possessed of inherent immortality. Without that point is established as a fact, his assumption has no foundation.

We might go to the New Testament and doubly confirm our position from that unmistakable source; but it is needless unless the "assumption" of inherent immortality is proved to be a fact; and that, we are sure, never can be done by Bible testimony.

We "maintain the special characterization" of the term life is living existence;" and when applied to "Life only in Christ," it necessarily "includes and presupposes" blessedness. "Because I live," saith Jesus, "ye shall live also." John xiv., 19. The fact that Christ's disciples shall live ["I will raise him up at the last day"] draws after it "blessedness," inevitably. But in either case we are under no necessity to assume either the life or the blessedness, because each is expressly stated and promised in language peculiar to itself. The righteous put on immortality when made alive from the dead (1 Corth. xv.); "neither can they die any more" (Luke. xx.); "and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" (Rev. vii. ,17.); "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain," etc. Rev. xxi., 4.

These and hundreds of other texts go to show that life and blessedness are each expressed by their own appropriate terms, and both belong to "the gift of God through Jesus Christ," and are neither of them inherent in man; and to possess either we must be "in Christ;" for "God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son: he that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son hath not life." 1 John v., 11, 12.

"If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii., 11.

Life future is only in Christ, and through Him to all His members, who are his body—the church; so that, as "He dieth no more, death hath no more dominion over him," (Rom. vi., 9, "neither can they die any more" who are "the children of the resurrection;" for they "are the children of God, being children of the resurrection," (Luke xx.,) and Christ is "the resurrection and the life." John xi., 25.

Now, if any man can find any living existence—beyond this present life—out of Christ, he may well reject our "meaning of the term life." Till that is made to appear, we still proclaim to all, "NO LIFE OUT OF Christ;" or, "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST;" meaning, as we do, that there is no living existence, after the present life closes, to any who are not, by the favor of God, united to Christ, the only LIFE-GIVER. So has God appointed, and who shall annul it?

BIBLE EXPOSITION.

A RECENT issue of the Prophetic Times, an Advent paper, but orthodox, so called, respecting the nature of man and torment of the wicked, says,

"Millenarians are not so perpetually in trouble about questions of interpretation as their opponents appear to be. They believe that when God speaks to men, in the language of men, He means as He says, and speaks the truth."

Amen; thou hast well said, good neighbor. When God told Adam that if he (the man, the being communicated with) did a certain thing he should "die," Adam was addressed in his own language, and understood what was meant. But notwithstanding the fact that inspiration testifies to Adam's death, do not our brethren hold that only a part, a comparatively insignificant part, of Adam died? When God, speaking "to men, in the language of men," declares "the soul that sinneth it shall die," "He means as He says, and speaks the truth." Do our friends believe it? Do they apply to this passage the same principle of interpretation they justly insist shall be applied to those passages which teach the pre-millenial advent? Paul, the greatest of apostles, substantially repeating a plainly expressed penalty, affirmed "the wages of sin is death." We think our Prophetic Times brethren would hardly be willing to assert through the columns of that paper, that God meant just what he said by the mouth of his faithful servant; that "the wages of sin is death," literally. Would they not, rather, take the ground that the wages of sin is conscious existence in misery? At the risk of being thought presumptuous, we take the liberty to humbly exhort our neighbors of the Times to a consistent application of that eminently wise principle of scripture interpretation they properly urge upon their orthodox friends.

PREACHING AND PREACHERS.

WE may differ very much in our views on these topics from some of our respected brethren. We fully agree with DR. McCULLOH that the Scriptures do not sustain the idea of any particular "persons having a divine commission to preach the gospel," since the days of the apostles. It is setting up this claim that has exalted the self-styled "ministers" above the Bible. But, says one, "The gospel must be preached." We ask—What is the gospel? and where is it? It is in the Bible, and to be found there, or it is not. If it is there, then the Bible is the minister or preacher, and is "divinely commissioned" to make known the gospel; and to pretend that there are men specially called of God in these days to "preach the gospel"—as that phrase is usually understood—is to suppose the Bible gospel is imperfect, and not "a sufficient rule both of our faith and practice." The claim, therefore, set up that some men have a special or supernatural "call to preach the gospel"—i. e., to travel from place to place, or to be "settled" in one place, to tell men what the Bible means—is, we are persuaded, a mistaken notion, and opens the door to divisions, strife, discord, and a corrupting of the word of God.

The apostle Peter, in addressing the "strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bihynia," saith to them all—"Ye are a royal presthood," etc. See 1 Peter i., 1, and ii., 9. Such are all true Christians. No one in particular, since the canon of Scripture was filled up, is any more a divinely-appointed minister than another. All are bound to use their gifts and graces in the best and most efficient manner that their time and circumstances will permit; and each is equally bound to "provide for his own, especially those of his own house," or "he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." See 1 Tim. v., 8.

How then can any man say, God has given him a "special call to preach the gospel"—in these days—while such a work, as commonly understood, may oblige him to leave his wife and children, or dependents, unprovided for, and perhaps to suffering and want? We have no faith in such calls: they are much more likely to be a delusion than a reality; and we know the idea is the occasion of much delusion and fanaticism. The experience and observation of the last thirty years have made this demonstration to our mind. These special-called preachers succeeding one another at different times and places, oftentimes preach a gospel as diverse one from the other as the language of Babel, yet all professing they have a "divine commission to preach the gospel!" Some of them, surely, must be mistaken. All of them, we think, are mistaken in one thing, viz., the nature of their call. They have no such call from God, as they suppose. Hence it is useless, if not impious, for them to blame the church, and denounce its members, for not supporting their families while they are guilty of neglecting to "provide for their own houses:" the apostle Paul saith, such "walk disorderly," and he exhorts, "that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread." See 2 Thess. iii., 6–12.

Piety is first personal, toward God. Second, social, beginning with our own households, toward which every duty enjoined in the gospel is to be strictly regarded and faithfully discharged. Next comes the relation to the community around us, "especially unto them who are of the household of faith." See Gal. vi., 10. Here our obligations are mutual. Each member of Christ's body—the church—is bound to do all that his time and circumstances will permit for the edification or building up of that church and its individual members. In the exercise of the various gifts in the body, it will doubtless be found that some will possess gifts more frequently called into use than others, and the church may desire to make use of that person's gifts more generally or constantly than consists with his obligations to his household. If this is the case, it is the duty of that body to relinquish their desire or make such provision to meet his obligation to his family as shall be satisfactory to him and them. They have no right to use the gifts God has bestowed on any member of their body so as to cause him to violate his first social relation and obligation.

But for an individual to affirm he has a "supernatural call from God to go abroad to preach the gospel," and set up the claim that the church must support him and his family or "be damned"—while he leaves them—seems to us to be lording it over God's heritage in a way that may endanger the person's own eternal life. If persons thus go out, the church are at perfect liberty to withhold support from them if they choose. But if these persons, or others, who pretend to no such special call, are invited to visit places at a distance from their homes, then those who invited them are bound, by all principles of honesty and religion, to pay their expenses and give them an ample compensation for their time, whether they are pleased or displeased with the ministration. Not to do this would be dishonesty and robbery. But it is quite another matter when one goes unasked and uninvited. Then those who hear him must be their own judges whether the gospel requires them to help him to continue his travels.

We maintain the Bible is the testimony of the only divinely-called and commissioned preachers of the gospel. Where that has not been sent, let it be done, and let it preach. If men will "not hear Moses, the prophets," nor Jesus Christ and his apostles, "neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead," nor are we to expect that God will "divinely commission," in these days, a set of men to tell the people what he means by the words of life he has sent unto them. They may offer any help their time and circumstances will permit, to aid in the work of leading the attention of men to the words God has given; but let them beware of claiming for themselves to be teachers by special authority or divine appointment; such place themselves between God's truth and those to whom God has sent that truth.

SHALL THE HERALD OF LIFE LIVE?

THE above question was asked by the Editor a few weeks ago, and no response has been made to it. Our answer is, "Yes." If every other effort fails, the HERALD must succeed.

But the question is asked, Why make such an inquiry at all? Is there any danger of the HERALD OF LIFE dying? Are its labors closed? is there nothing more for it to do? or are there other causes operating against the paper? These are questions that demand our serious consideration. We believe since the meeting held at Springfield, three years ago, the paper and its management have given almost entire satisfaction. We believe it has met the wants of the subscribers in all parts of the country. At our last annual meeting there was general satisfaction expressed in its management. Several of the friends who found considerable fault with the paper at our Springfield meeting, at our last meeting expressed their entire satisfaction in its management. Then why make the inquiry, "Shall the HERALD live?" We answer, since the last issue of the HERALD we have received a copy of a Monthly Magazine, published by Br. Rufus Wendell, called the Bible Repository, claiming to advocate the doctrines of no future life out of Christ. This then explains the question, "Shall the HERALD OF LIFE live?" We, as a people, cannot sustain two such papers; and a division of support will cause both to perish. The question then comes to each of us, Which one of the two shall live? Now, we would say in the outset, that for Br. Rufus Wendell we esteem him a Br. beloved for his work's sake; but, personally, we have nothing to do with him or any other Br. In a matter of this kind we do not regard the person of any man. We are well enough acquainted with the cause to know that it does not demand any such effort; and we are well aware of the fact that we cannot sustain two such papers. And Br. Wendell knows this fact as well as I do. We will not disguise the fact that Br. Wendell has friends and influence; and nearly every dollar received for the support of his paper will be that much drawn from the HERALD OF LIFE. The only surprise to our mind is, that Br. Wendell would do such a thing. In a notice on the cover of the Bible Repository, this statement appears:

"There are in this country, besides the Magazine, six periodicals (four weekly and two monthly) which promulgate the view of immortality for the righteous alone. One of them, the HERALD OF LIFE making a "SPECIALTY" of Life only in Christ.

What does Br. Wendell mean by the word "Specialty?" If he had said, the HERALD makes Life only in Christ its foundation, or prominent topic, it would have been correct. But that the HERALD contains nothing else, or excludes all other subjects, is not the case. We have never had a Bible question excluded from the HERALD. The Advent of Christ, the subject of the devil, baptism, the Lord's supper, and all other kindred subjects, have been fully ventilated. In looking over our files for the last two years, we find the original articles of Br. Wendell's few and far between. He has promised at each of our annual meetings that we should hear from him oftener. But alas, we have looked in vain. Br. Rufus, have your articles on those subjects, not special, been excluded from the paper? And was it necessary that you should start the Repository so they might not be lost to the friends? If so, please inform us, so that at our next meeting we may have the evil remedied. We acknowledge we have seen a letter occasionally from you, and the history of some debate; but the readers want light and information on Bible truths. Have yours all been excluded?

Again. What new truth have you discovered that you must start a new paper in order to publish it to the world? We could see some reason for Br. Curry's pamphlet: he conceived that God had given him a new message to the world. But you lay claim to nothing of the kind; and the columns of the HERALD are, and have been, open to the articles from your pen. It appears from an extract from your letter, dated Springfield, Mass., March 28, 1868, in which you state that in order to make your "influence most widely and permanently effective, as a public laborer in the defence and dissemination of Life from the dead, and immortality for the righteous alone, I fully determined one week ago to commence the publication." It seems, then, that your paper is to be a "specialty;" one is to make your labors permanently effective, as a public laborer in the cause of the same "specialty," the main feature of the HERALD OF LIFE. Does this not explain the whole? "How I might make MY influence most widely and permanently effective."

Now the question for the friends to settle is not, how Br. Wendell can make his influence the most effective, or how any other man can do it; but how we can most advance the cause of truth? Shall we give up our street cars and ride in the old omnibusses? Shall we give up the steam transportation, and take up with stage coaches? Shall we give up our support to our weekly HERALD OF LIFE, and take up with a monthly magazine?

The two cannot live: that is the opinion of every practical person with whom I have spoken. And there is no need of two papers on the same subject. I have come to the conclusion that one of the two must perish. Who, then, will help kill the HERALD OF LIFE?

THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

ON consultation with a portion of the DIRECTORS of the Union it was thought best to have the universary on Thursday, at 2 o'clock, August 27th, instead of Friday the 28th. This will give such as must return home before the following Sabbath, time to do so. It is hoped there will be a full attendance of all interested in promoting the object of the Union, at Springfield, Mass., on the day appointed, if it is possible to be there. Those who cannot come, will please do the next best thing, viz., tell us if you wish the HERALD OF LIFE continued and what you will do to sustain it. Do not delay in responding to this last request, if you value this enterprise.

CORRECTION.—On the first page (outside of this issue) fourth column, 26th line from the top, for "being immortal," read very immoral.

THE COMING OF THE LORD DRAWETH NIGH.

YES, it is indeed true. When we look into the prophetic word, all the great lines of prophecy marking a succession of earthly governments that were to rule this earth prior to the setting up of the everlasting kingdom of God, have each in their successive order arisen, and passed away. Babylon has had its day; Medo-Persia has filled its place in the prophetic delineation; Grecia has accomplished its work in fulfilling the word of God; Rome has sat mistress of the world as foretold by the ancient holy Seer. As foretold by the prophetic word, she has been divided into ten regal governments; the papacy—"that man of sin"—has reigned in blood and blasphemy, and slaughtered the church of God, during twelve hundred and sixty years, the appointed prophetic time of her horrible domination, and to-day we stand in the iron and clay age, marked in the word of God as the last before the ushering in of the endless age of peace and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ. Almost seventy-five years have rolled into the solemn past since the hand of God's judgment was laid upon that blood-thirsty power, and her strength began to waste. And now she sits in darkness and the shadow of death. Soon, like as a millstone thrown into the depths of the sea by the hand of a mighty angel, she will sink to rise no more forever. But ere she shall be overtaken by her final doom, the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God will call the sleeping ones from the charnel house of death, to enter on an endless life. For when Babylon's final overthrow shall come, the prophets and apostles, who now sleep in death's domain, will be there to join in the song of praise that will tell, not only of deliverance from her cruel power, but from all the ills and woes of this present time. O, how joyful the thought to the weary, lonely pilgrim, oppressed with cares, and want, and trials deep and sore, to know that there are sure indications of the dawning of a better day. How ardently does he watch the course of human events, in the light of the prophetic word, to find some certain omen of the coming of that joyful day, that shall end his tears and sorrows and bring him to a land of unending joy. With what longings of heart does he look forward to that glorious morn, of which the holy seers have so sweetly sung, when springing into life, a triumphant church shall shout their victory over death, and wear the crown of life forever. Many of his dearest friends lie silent in the loathsome prison house of death, and his heart for long years has felt the grief of that last parting hour, when pallid lips whispered their last farewell. But when that better day of peace shall dawn, there will be a glorious reunion in the paradise of God. Then shall there be no more dying, for "All who gain that heavenly land will be as angels are." Yea, they shall be children of God in that immortal age, because they are children of the resurrection.

But who shall wear the victor's crown at last? Says our great Captain, and LIFE-GIVER, "They that shall be accounted worthy." And what is it to be accounted worthy? The inspired Paul—he that might glory in his attainments of earthly wisdom, in his pride of birth, yea, in all that makes man noble here; exclaims, "Yea, doubtless I count all things loss for Christ." And did he pay too large a price? Did he exceed the requirements of him who called him to be a saint? Let him answer from whose holy lips naught ever fell but words of truth. "So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, CANNOT BE MY DISCIPLE." Luke xiv., 33. If this is the divine plan, alas! how few will attain unto a future life. And who dare say it is not? Who dares impeach the language of the Son of God. Yes, it is indeed true, that it will cost all that we have to gain an endless life. But there are a few, even in this degenerate age, who can truthfully adopt the language of that beautiful hymn so much in use in our earlier days as a separate religious interest,

> Farewell all I've loved below—
> I must be there.
> Worldly honors, hopes and gain,
> All I resign;
> Welcome sorrow, grief, and pain,
> If Christ be mine.
> Farewell earthly pleasures all,
> Pilgrim I'll roam;
> Hail me not, in vain you call,
> Yonder's my home.

And such, ere long, shall walk with Christ in white. But may we all constantly remember that,

> "None but holy ones can enter
> Through the pure celestial gate."

That the church that Christ will present unto himself in the day of his appearing, will be found "not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but holy and without blemish." Eph. v. 27. Though unworthy, yet through the matchless grace of God we may come to this blest condition, and, thus only, find an endless life.

Always Sowing and Always Reaping.

"Say not ye, There are four months, and then cometh harvest: behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields: for they are white already to harvest, and he that reapeth receiveth wages."—John iv., 35, 36.

This is the language of Jesus to his disciples, and he uses it for the purpose of moving them to the immediate performance of their appropriate duties. Be it, he suggests, that between sowing and reaping these fields of barley or wheat, the husbandman has months for rest; it is not, cannot be so with us. Behold that throng of people eager to listen, and needing instruction; such is the great moral harvest we are to gather; dream not of delay; it is even now white; the field of truth and virtue awaits only the reapers; go ye, then into it, already ripe for the sickle, and receive your appointed wages.

The counsel is good for us. Always for human beings there is a harvest field. It is not merely seed-time with us; it is a season for reaping, too; and there is pay ready for us so soon as our work is done. This is a fact as useful as it is true; by overlooking it we shall suffer loss. Many seem to think that the present life is only fit for preparation; and that for any valuable results they must wait till after death. In this they err. No doubt there is to be a harvest for us hereafter; and it will be abundant or otherwise, according as we prepare the soil well or ill, and scatter the seed plentifully or scantily, now. And he alone is the truly wise man, who bears this in mind, and acts conformably to it. But there is also a harvest to be gathered, at the present season, and every day we live. To say, in the spirit of the disciples of old, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest, thinking that meanwhile we have only to rest or keep on sowing, that there is nothing to be garnered, and no recompense, except in a distant future—to say and do this, would but ill accord with the true state of things.

The fact is, and we cannot be too deeply sensible of it, that the great field of human life is one wherein there are products in all stages of growth; here, germs, buds, and flowers; there, fruits in full maturity; so that while on one spot we must act the part of cultivators, on another we must perform the office of gatherers in of the harvest; while to-day and in this corner we sow the seed of a future crop, to-morrow, and in that corner we put in the sickle and receive wages for our toil. And thus the course of things and events is with us from the beginning to the end. Always and everywhere there is a harvest of one sort or another, answering to a previous sowing. Let me illustrate.

Take the boy at school. Do you say he is planting seeds that are by and by to spring up and yield the fruits of respectability, usefulness and happiness, or the reverse? True. But he is also a reaper as well as a sower; he is gathering the harvest of an earlier culture. From the nursery he came to the school; and he suffers or enjoys in the latter, according as he was dealt with rightly or wrongly in the former. Did he come with wayward passions, an unsubdued will and offensive manners? he must then be subject to a restraint and discipline that will be painful to him; and till he is cured of his evil habits, must suffer from the bad estimation in which he is held by his companions. But if on the contrary he came with good dispositions and manners, then so much the better does he succeed at school.

Look to the youth as he enters society. Do you tell me he is now in a condition to cultivate the traits that are to constitute his future character and determine his success in the world? Very true again. But still he is a gatherer of the fruits of a previous process of husbandry. One harvest is ripe for the sickle while another is green. Every acquirement, habit or disposition of his school days, affects him for evil or for good now, and becomes a source of pleasure or of pain to him. He takes his place according to his merit, as merit is estimated in the social circle in which he moves. If in school he sowed the seeds of selfishness, sullenness, or arrogance, he now reaps a harvest corresponding thereto; if he sowed the seeds of benevolence, cheerfulness humility and modesty, he enjoys the good will and affection of his associates.

Consider the mature man, as you find him in the various relations and pursuits of the world. You regard him, perhaps as now preparing for old age; as sowing that which he is to reap, for his solace or his grief, in the decline of life. And rightly. But reflect, at the same time, that he is even now in a field white for the harvesting. The happiness or misery of manhood is the product of culture bestowed in childhood and youth. Now is the season when all his principles and habits, acquired in earlier years, are put to the trial; and it is soon seen whether they are of the right kind, and what they are worth. He finds himself well or ill off, according to the tastes he formed, the friendships he secured, the knowledge of men and things he acquired, the character he established, long ago. If he was negligent or did wrong in these respects, when young, he is now a sufferer for it; if right, he gathers a corresponding harvest of good.

Advert to one who has passed the meridian of his day and whose evening is nigh. Now, you tell me he must be more diligent than ever in preparing himself for death and eternity; must be especially busy about the husbandry that alone can secure to him a harvest of bliss hereafter. Yes: but what an in-gathering of fruits is now also taking place! What is he, what enjoys or suffers he, except as, in a great degree, the reaper of that which he long enough before sowed? How different is the condition of some old people from that of others! They are all alive, they all breathe, it is true; but here how often the resemblance ends. Life to this class is one thing; to that, quite another. Look at him, who has been worldly minded from his youth up. What a poor harvest he is now reaping. Existence to him is but an every day scene of earthly sensations, only rarely and occasionally relieved by any visitings of higher thoughts, of spiritual joys and hopes.

What again is life to the old selfish man, who has ever considered his own interests the all in all, and the claims of suffering humanity but an offence; whose heart of ice never glowed with one generous sentiment; whose whole soul, morning, noon and night was intent on self-advancement, and nothing else; and whose code of morality was briefly comprehended in this, that he should take who had the power to take, and he should keep who could. What is life, moreover, to him who has grown gray in sensuality; to him who never rose to the dignity of true selfishness, but was merely the thoughtless slave of appetite; whose days were but alternations between one excess and another; allowing the system only so much rest as that it might be enabled to bear the next burden which was laid upon it? Who could covet the wages of such a one while reaping, with the trembling hand and tottering step, the harvest of which he had sown?

Not so, however, with the other class. They, too, are old, but old in virtue as well as in years. Early they scattered the good seed on good ground, and watched and cultivated the uprising and growing blade afterward. Now it is harvest time with them; and how many and precious the fruits! Calmly and serenely they sit in their retirement, and delight to live over again their past lives. No fearful ghosts of former follies and vices obtrude themselves, but blessed spirits, as it were, of ten thousand pure and noble deeds hover around, to cheer and sustain them. Thus it is. A peaceful, respectable, happy old age, is no accidental result, any more than is the crop of corn which the husbandman in autumn gathers into his barn. No; it is the product of past culture; the harvest from the seed sown; as truly so as any effect that flows from its cause.

Are we to stop here, and not look beyond this life? Shall we not rather contemplate the harvest resulting to us in relation to the unseen future, when this life is past? Then we shall reap as we have sown. "He that soweth to his flesh"—now lives only for animal and selfish gratifications—"shall of the flesh reap corruption"—death and utter dissolution will be his harvest; eternal shame shall follow him, and a total failure of life from the dead; he shall "utterly perish in his own corruption."

On the other hand, "he that soweth to the Spirit"—seeks for the Spirit of God to dwell in him, that he may bring forth the fruits of righteousness and true harmony with God—"shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Such will be his harvest: he "receiveth the wages" God has promised to those who cultivate the field he has appointed to them. "An eternal weight of glory." Let us diligently and earnestly sow the seed now, that shall result in so abundant a harvest.

Thus, I have endeavored to illustrate by means of familiar instances, the great truth, that always and everywhere there is for us a harvest, of one sort or another, answering to a previous sowing. What manner of persons, then, ought we, in every period of life, to be? Why should any one, however young, wait, saying to himself, there are yet four months, and so fail to be ready and prepared for what is ever near at hand? You are a child. My little friend, you are suffering good or ill, according to what was sown in your heart in the nursery; but listen to me, when I tell you, that this is not all; by and by you will again suffer good or ill, according to the nature of the seed you are now sowing. You are a youth. Well, you are reaping the sweet or the bitter fruits of that which was put into your mind and wrought into your habits in childhood; but believe me, this is not all; you are every day planting a field which will bring forth plentifully and very soon, another harvest either for your comfort or your ruin. Man in mature life, need I tell you, that your advantages are now greater or smaller for success in the world, very much in proportion as you were faithful or otherwise to your privileges in former years; and will you, can you be heedless of the solemn fact, that by-and-by in a much shorter time than probably you are aware, old age will creep on when you must experience the results, be they better or worse, of your present doings? And ye too, if any such there be, who have already entered the vale of years, full well do you know how the whole past often comes up in your meditations, and how this, together with the entire structure of your habits, built up by slow degrees during the many years of your life, is what chiefly makes you cheerful or sad; but be also aware, I beseech you that this is not your last harvest season, but that a still more abundant one awaits you beyond the grave.

Yes, brethren of whatever age, why, why wait? Why neglect the great preparation? Why cheat yourselves into the belief that the harvest is far distant? Why not, from beginning to end, acknowledge to ourselves the fact, and act upon it, that by a law of our nature we cannot elude, we are all the time both sowing and reaping—ever earning and receiving wages, either of life or of death? Would that we looked habitually upon human existence in this light. Then how differently should we think, and feel, and act. Where could there be room or apology for indolence or for the transgression of any moral law? Everything would preach to us the duty of despatch; to be up and doing; and doing right. The world is around us; our brethren have claims upon us; we have characters to build up: in all relations and in all pursuits it is both seed time and harvest time with us; while we sow one thing we reap another; the future is before us, and the laws of our being and condition will be then as they are now; we are and ever shall be, what, under God, we make ourselves: the thoughts, feelings, principles, habits, which we cherish—these belong to our real self, and in the consciousness of them we must find our happiness, if we find it anywhere. These statements, and such as these, being true, and we knowing them to be so, how can we live on, from day to day, from month to month, from year to year, carelessly and negligently, forgetful of God who has ordered all things so wisely and kindly; indifferent to the claims of our fellow-creatures upon us, in sowing for whom we prepare for an abundant in-coming of blessings to ourselves; heedless of the form and hue which our own character is assuming amid the thousand influences of books, business, society and the world; that character, upon the good or bad qualities of which depends now, and will depend, our life or our death. Let us awake; let us keep all our faculties bright; let us be active; let us perform every duty in its season; the seed we have to sow, let us sow it, and believe and feel that the harvest is not far off; whatever good thing our hand findeth to do, let us do it with all our might, knowing that our wages will be as our work or labor has been; though the reward or harvest to eternal life is of grace, or the love of God.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in Fairfield, Conn., July 6th, Caroline, wife of Br. Barzillai Browne, aged 44 years and 2 months. Sister Browne was well as usual in the morning, and at 6.30 P. M., was a corpse. She leaves a husband and six children to mourn her loss. She believed in the soon coming and kingdom, and life from the dead through Christ. The first Congregational church of Fairfield tendered us their house for the funeral words of comfort by Br. J. L. Bassett.

The Reason.

A bishop who heard that the sun always shone on the cottage of a poor man in a certain valley in his diocese, determined to find out the cause of this wonder.

"Is it true," he asked of the poor man to whom the cottage belonged, "that the sun always shines on your roof?"

"It is true," replied the peasant.

"But what is the reason?" inquired the bishop. And none could answer.

"Do you pray more than others?"

"I live by the labor of my hands, and have but little time for prayer."

The bishop thought again. "Do you fast more than others?"

"My work is hard, and I can fast but little."

"Well," he replied, "but perhaps you give more alms than others?"

"I have but enough for my family, and can scarcely find any poorer than myself to whom I may give."

So the bishop turned and went away, sorely grieved that he could not explain the wonder. But before he had gone far, a thought came into his mind and he returned. "One question more: Do you love our Lord Jesus Christ at all times?"

The poor man cast his eyes to the ground, and answered; "I trust I do."

"Ah" replied the bishop, "now I know why the sun always shines on this house."

Letters and Extracts.

From W. H. H. McAllister.

St. Albans, July 10, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I feel moved to write you again to let the friends know that I am still alive and striving to live a godly life in this world of sin. It often seems that I am living to but little purpose, and that my life is bringing forth but little fruit to life everlasting. Of this I am satisfied, that God brought me to this place for some purpose, and that in due time his plans will be unfolded. It is said that > "God has a plan

and I feel that he has for me. This is a hard place to work in, and but little interest seems to be manifested in things spiritual, but if it is the Lord's will that I shall stay here and "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints," and if the way seems open to "preach the word," I will not hesitate. A short time since I had a strong attack of the Western fever, but it has abated. Upon mature consideration, I have come to the conclusion that Vermont shall be my field of labor. I should feel like Jonah when commanded by the Lord to go to Nineveh, but who ran away to Tarshish, should I desert the post at which the Lord has stationed me. God gave me my place here in answer to earnest prayer, and it seems wrong to leave until he signifies his approval. But it is my duty and privilege to labor more abundantly than I have hitherto, and now that my health and that of my family is much improved, I hope you will see more of my scribbling in the Herald of Life, if it will be agreeable and profitable.

I will go to work in some way more actively than I have, and I will let the Lord direct my labors and steps. I will do what will give the truth the freest course. With regards to all the friends, I remain, your Br. in Christ.

St. Paul, Minn, July 6, 1868.

Br. Storrs: In reading your call for help to publish the Campaign Documents, so forcible and convincing, I feel an earnest desire to have a part in the work; your statement that if each of your subscribers would furnish one dollar, the necessary amount and over would be raised—with the inquiry, Who will do it? I answer, for one, I will. The amount seems meagre when weighed in the balance with so important an enterprise. Gladly would I multiply it by tens. Circumscribed in means, I will do what I can; remembering that the widow's mite was accepted; so will mine be, if the love of Jesus and his truth is the controlling principle. Who can understand better than you, experimentally, the importance of small things? Little did you imagine, probably, when reading Br. Grew's tract on the cars [in 1837] that the result would be in such proportions as you now behold it; and yet this is but the first fruit of that seed, the stupendous growth that will fill the earth with fruit, the great harvest will reveal. Also, when consecrating your time and powers to the work of preparing those Six Sermons, you hardly dreamed what a circulation they were destined to have, and how many minds they would influence; yet we see how large the tree from so small a seed, and how abundant the fruit, verifying the declaration of truth, that those who go forth bearing precious seed, shall come again bringing their sheaves with them; the outgrowth of which we now see but a small part.

Does our Father thus honor our feeble efforts? How humble we should be; our work so small, while the Infinite, in his power and wisdom, swells their results to such proportions that they exceed our comprehension. O the gratitude that should well up in our hearts that we may be partners in so weighty an enterprise; how consecrated every affection and purpose of scattering light in this thick darkness—order in this Babel-like confusion. We surely need no promptings to work only a knowledge that we may; that an invitation is given us. Ready would I be to enter every open door, and work in any place and way my Father appoints.

We find encouragements here for effort that we knew not of a few months ago. The waters are troubled; tracts have come into the hands of some, they know not from whom; opposition is provoked. Mattison on Immortality comes to the rescue. In all this there is hope; thought and investigation are provoked, and some good fruit, I trust, will be the result: the leaven is at work; may it permeate the whole Christian body.

Having reached another anniversary of my birth, I am led to review the past. Sixty-eight years have I enjoyed of probation; the review is not what I would have it. I realize that for many years I have felt myself a consecrated servant; not my own, but bought with a price; yet the magnitude of the price, the great object to be gained, never appeared to the eye of my mind as now, and during the past year. Earth seems almost faded from view, while immortality and glory are nigh at hand, with faith triumphant and love supreme. I would meet the responsibilities of this year; running without weariness and walking without fainting. Thus if our blessed Master should soon come, he would say, she hath done what she could. This is all I ask. May it be mine to hear, for Jesus' sake.

From Geo. L. Hart.

New Britain, Conn., July 5, 1868.

Br. Storrs: Those tracts came to hand, and I am glad to see an advance in the tract entitled the Judgment. A harmony must exist in the Bible, in every idea there advanced, to make it the word of God. "The path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." In it the ransomed walk and learn of him who was "meek and lowly in heart." He spake as never man spake. He will judge his people with his truth. Jesus said, he that is of the truth heareth my voice. Truth will judge the rejectors of it. But of the believer, when and how is he judged? Let us come to Israel, the type, the arrangement of judgment. The law written upon the tables of stone was the "ministration of death." Its moral obligations were no new thing. It made known more forcibly the fact that judgment had come upon all to condemnation through the weakness of the flesh. It pointed them, as a schoolmaster, to the Christ in the ceremonial law of atonement. No mercy upon those tablets of stone, a symbol of unrevoked, eternally established justice, righteousness and truth: by it all must be judged. Israel appears at the door, the appointed tabernacle of judgment. Yonder, in the holy of holies, God is present; the mercy-seat is erected. But death ensues if they enter without judgment. Justice must be vindicated in their behalf: the sinful nation must render up all. This would leave them all dead, and none could enter by his own blood. In that is all the life they possess. But the blood of another, a typical one of judgment, is offered as a pledge the law is satisfied, and favor to the blotting out of sins is granted. How with Israel? The ungodly sinners God heareth not; die they may, but they have no strength to revive from the dead alone. God loved penitent Israel. In due time Christ died for them. He had strength to revive, and becomes Lord of the dead. He enters the heavens, his blood a pledge to God, the just, for all the penitent; an acknowledgment of the forfeiture of the blood-life, or nature. We thus become dead by the body of Christ. Rom. vii. Judgment is executed for each believer in Christ. He bore our sins in his own body on the tree. His own shed blood cleanses from all sin. The appointed judgment executed, his life is a pledge accepted by Jehovah. To have faith in this pledge, sin loses its dominion. Its claims upon the earthy nature we accept, and our decision enters the holy presence to receive favor; the gift of the divine nature comes down, through which we are at one with God, alive from the dead by Christ; we feel the begetting of a life not forfeited by law. Thus those who have obtained this new life element reign in life at last. They, as believers, come not into the final judgment, but pass from death into life: they have in Christ stood in judgment, and in him obtained mercy. "Justice and judgment" have always been "the habitation of his throne." He has executed it sometimes. A final is yet in the future for the earthly kingdoms. Mercy has an open door. Through infinite wisdom God can be just and justify the believer in Jesus. He has, in the name of the Anointed, executed Egypt's first born. The typical blood, by faith, left Israel unharmed. We might mention nations who have been judged, both judicially and executively. Where is Amalek, the first of the nations? Blotted out. Read Jer. xxv. in connection with Isaiah xxiv. He says the Lord shall punish the host of high ones. . . . the kings of the earth upon the earth, gathered as prisoners in the pit . . . shut up in prison; after many days visited. Some tell us this prison is the grave, therefore a resurrection is involved. The prison of one hundred and twenty years to the Antediluvians, as brought to view by Peter, may help us to explain Isaiah's prison. God hath numbered the kingdoms. Babylon the first, seventy years, and God visited it and executed judgment. Read Dan. v. The number finished, and found wanting. Just as Isaiah said, all would appear wanting when they pass the stated time of kingdoms. Destruction in their turn. The last earthly kingdom is about to finish its time. Then the everlasting kingdom. No number attached. Everlasting ages roll on in numberless succession. Saints, made so by the blood of Christ, inherit it. Christ, the Lord of life and glory, will reign upon the earth. Zion's stronghold, Jerusalem's pearly portals, shall shine with the glory of his reign. The shaken foundations of all earthly fabrics must be removed by judgment. But we, receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken, shall not be found wanting. God's kingdom; associated with him, his King, Messiah, and his seed. The wrath of the seventh vial, the completion of wrath, will ere long be executed, in which the second universal destruction will consume all whose names are not found written in the Book of Life, but written in the earth. Such as have fallen, accounted unworthy of that world, the wrath of God abideth on them. The curse of the law holds them because of sin.

They have not appeared at the judgment seat in Christ, consequently they appear in their sins, and death, the wages, becomes eternal. But such as have died in Christ are free from sin; death hath no more dominion over them. They will find all in the resurrection; giving up all the earthly we put on the heavenly. Partaking now of life, hid in Christ our ark, we pass through death's chilling flood by the resurrection into the world to come. The grave could not hold him, for he was Anointed: so the anointed in him cannot be holden of it.

O let thy kingdom come, we pray. Let us pine and weep no more with harp on willows. Bring back our paradise. Ho, exiles, welcome home.

Mrs. Elnora Alderman, Ill., writes: I have been a long time wishing I could send you some money due for my paper. My brother-in-law, Philo Richardson, paid for it last year. I expected it would have been discontinued some time since. You have been very kind to continue it; I should miss it very much. I should feel lost without it. We received the book you sent. I liked it very much, and did not like to part with it, but there was a family going to Kansas and I gave it to them, thinking it might do some good. I think I could distribute some of your works about here if I had them. I often think if we were able I would like to help the good cause. I send $2; it is all I can send now. I wish it was two thousand. I am sixty years old, and you are still older, but I hope God will be pleased to give you health and strength of body and mind for years to come.

Note by the Editor.—It is a comfort to know that many pray for us; also to believe that God answereth their prayers; for we are often astonished at the strength granted us at our time of life, now near seventy-two. To God be praise for all his mercies.

"THREE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS."

One Thousand Dollars Wanted; FOR WHAT?

To put into circulation within the next three months Ten Thousand each of the following works:

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE.

THE JUDGMENT: TIME AND MANNER OF IT.

AND

LIFE FROM THE DEAD: Or, The Righteous only will Live Again.

These three documents are for the campaign before us, which is not to be ended till our King is crowned and has the kingdoms of this world subjected to his reign on David's throne. Two thousand each of the above two first-named documents have been printed, and three thousand of the last, and a great portion of them are already in circulation; but there is a wish to increase it to ten thousand each by the next anniversary of the Life and Advent Union. We believe it can be done. It is true, a few have generally had such work to do; but "many hands make light work." If each of our subscribers could pay, or collect one dollar for this object, the full amount and several hundred dollars over would be had to carry on the work.

Who says, I will do it? You can have all your money back again in the documents, if you wish it.

The three works can be had for 14 cents, including the postage; or, 100 of each for $12, including postage, or for $10 when sent by express or taken at our office.

THOUGHTS ON THE RESURRECTION.

O JESUS dear, I long to hear
The trumpet in the sky,
And then would I without a fear
Make haste, and to thee fly.

And then with thee to live and reign—
To realms of endless bliss—
And love and praise thy holy name,
I want no joy but this.

And when at last, I find that rest
I've sought so long in vain,
I'll join the throng forever blest
In praising His dear name.

What joy there is in store for me,
If I but do thy will.
Lord help, that I may faithful be
And love and praise thee still.

THE GERMAN GRANDMOTHER.

GRANDMAMMA is very old; she is wrinkled and has snow-white hair, but her eyes are bright and mild. She tells the most charming tales, and she wears a silken dress with large flowers, which makes a rustling sound as it grazes against the walls.

Grandmamma knows a great deal; the reason is that she has lived a long time—long before papa and ma, that is certain. Grandmamma has a book of canticles with a silver clasp, and she is often reading in that book. In the middle of that volume there is a rose, flattened and dried, which is not so beautiful as the roses in the grass, and yet grandmamma smiles happily when she looks at it, and her eyes fill with tears. Why does grandmamma gaze in this way on the dried flowers in her book of canticles? You want to know? Every time that one of grandmamma's tears falls on the flower its stem uprises, its colors resume their brightness, it fills the chamber with its perfume, and the walls of the room fall, as if they were floating clouds, and all around grandmamma stretches the green magnificent forest, where the sunbeams make their way between the foliage. At that moment grandmamma is quite young; she is a charming girl with light brown hair and fresh cheeks, brilliant and beautiful—no flower is fairer. By her side a young man is seated, tall and well-made, who offers her a rose, and she smiles. Grandmamma no longer smiles in that way—yes, indeed, her smile is still the same. He is gone. A thousand visions and a thousand thoughts have taken his place. The handsome young man is gone; the rose is laid in the book of canticles; grandmamma falls back in her large arm-chair; she looks at the faded rose in the book. Grandmamma is dead!

She was laid in a black coffin, wrapped in a white linen shroud. How beautiful she was! Her eyes were closed, but every wrinkle had disappeared. She lay at full length, with a smile on her lips, and adorned by her silver and venerable locks. No one was afraid to come and see the corpse, she was still grandmamma, so good and so dearly beloved.

The book of canticles was placed in the coffin, beneath her head; such was her wish. The rose was in the book. And then they buried grandmamma. On her grave, close to the church-wall, they planted a rose-bush, whose roses waved in the wind, and said, "It is pleasant to bathe in the dew and the moonbeams. If we are the fairest flowers, a friendly hand will come and gather us for the prettiest girl. Let us summon all our brightness and all our perfume." And the nightingale heard what the roses said, and he sang in honor of the rose which the young girl placed in her book of canticles, keeping it faithfully until her once fresh cheeks were wrinkled. It is so beautiful to live in the memories of the past! And while the nightingale sang, the church organ intoned the harmonious psalms that lay beneath the head of the dead, and the moon shone in all her splendor.—Hans Andersen.

LITTLE KINDNESSES.

"MOTHER," said a little girl, "I gave a poor beggar child a drink of water and slice of bread, and she said 'thank you' to me so beautifully, and it made me so glad, I shall never forget it." Now children can do a great many things worth a "thank you." Kind offices are everywhere and at all times needed; for there are always sick ones, poor ones, besides dear ones, to make happy by kindness; and it goes further toward making home happy than almost anything else. Kind offices are within everybody's reach, like air and sunshine, and if anybody feels fretful, and wants a medicine to cure it, we would say, do a "thank you's" worth of kind offices every hour you live, and you will be cured. It is a wonderful sweetener of life.

A BLESSED PEOPLE.

BY B. MATTHIAS.

"BLESSED is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1,335 days." That is, they are blessed who see the end of the 1,290 days and enter upon the last section or division of time: a period full to overflowing with all great, grand, and good omens, auspices and facilities for knowing and doing. In which time, "Many are to run to and fro and knowledge be increased." Dan. xii.

I will here transcribe a passage from the pen of M. E. Green found in the Herald of the Bridegroom, of Feb. 12, 1868.

Here are some historic facts connected with the 1,290 years. It has been generally supposed that the persecution of the saints ended in the French Revolution. The facts are otherwise.

After Napoleon's defeat, the throne of France was restored to its former house; the king, a Romanist, who allowed and encouraged the persecution of the Protestants to a great length.

Says Goodrich: From 1814 to 1820, on the restoration of Louis XVIII., a line of distinction was immediately traced, between men of different religions. The spirit of the Old Roman church was again to regulate each person's share of esteem and safety. The difference of religion was now to govern everything else. The Protestants could no longer appear in public without insult and injury. When the mob met them, they seized and danced around them with barbarous joy. They sang verses, the burden of which was, "We will wash our hands in Protestant blood; and make black pudding of Calvin's children." In fact, they seemed to be as sheep for the slaughter. In May, 1815, the Romanists armed themselves, and hundreds of Protestants were slain. Death met them in every shape. This massacre rivalled in cruelty and surpassed in treachery the crimes of the September assassins of Paris, and Jacobinical butcheries of Lyons and Avignon." All of which persecutions are confirmed by other authors.

"This persecution continued with little abatement until 1823. On the death of Pope Pius VII., Leo XII. was chosen his successor Sept. 28, 1823, who granted toleration throughout the Roman kingdom." Says Dr. Cotes, "a chapel was allowed to be built in Rome for Protestants to worship in."

This was the first time for 1,290 years that toleration in the Roman kingdom had been allowed.

This clears up all mystery in reference to what was to mark the end of the 1,290 years.

"Blessed is he that waiteth and entereth upon the 1,335 years." Or, a month and a half added thereto, as it is in the Bishops' Bible. The word cometh to, in Dan. xii., 12, is come, and in every instance is rendered entered upon or into, and never means to come to the last end of anything. Therefore the blessing here referred to, must come at the beginning of the 45 years."

I confidently take this view of this subject. And now what of the blessing? A charmed word. You may appropriate its meaning as you will. It is like a letter of credit, saying to you, "Ask what you will." Blessed. He who inspired this benediction had no intention to restrict you to any limits in the measure of blessings. It does not intimate so much and no more. This pronouncement is from one of infinite benevolence. Hitherto, He had been restricted by a hard bond, for He had solemnly given the power of governing the world to the heathen. The kingdom of heaven in earth is degraded and superseded by the kingdom of men. The "high are abased;" the low are exalted. Legislation, governments, and the judiciary become discretionary barbarities.

Here the Gentile's bloody star arose, and Judah's Sun set. A long night of 2,300 years has succeeded. All this time, except the last 45 years, has formed the church's disaster. All this time she has had forced to her lips a bitter cup, from drinking of which she might not refrain.

She has cried, as it were, in vain to God. He hardened himself against her, because of his compact with the heathen. "He smote her with the stroke of an enemy." What a hard case! The blood of slaughtered millions has cried from under the altar. "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" One of the poor comforts was that more were to be slain. If this refers to the martyr age the number is now complete.

And now the God of love, having kept faith with the Gentiles to the end, He has turned to his people with a glowing heart and open hands—swift to hear, ready to save to the uttermost, all that come to Him by his Son.

There is one specific thing promised at this time: "The books are opened:" the vision speaks. They that run may read. Many run to and fro to illustrate this blessing.

Think of a period midway between two jubilees, in the time of the Jew's nationality. Many families out of house and home, that were a little while before in affluence, honored and happy. Some others sold to pay their debts; all of them afflicted with the whole sum of disabilities incident to poverty and slavery. Thus dragging their weary way through distressing years, and many fall in despair.

The Jubilee approaches! The more hopeful preach it; count the time; every year report progress. The poor accept it as a precious gospel. The slave looks up, and hopes to the end, for the grace of emancipation.

The 49th year is at the door, the jubilee becomes a household word in all devout circles. Disinherited families brighten up: they put off their sackcloth; have beauty for ashes; the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. Happy were the people in such a case.

There was a counterpart to this, no doubt. The jubilee was not welcome to every body. There were large land-holders who had more than the law allowed. They had, and held the patrimony of widows and orphans. The jubilee was the year of release to the bondman, and the year when estates should go back to their former owners. God made all the land entailable in families. "The land shall not be sold forever, for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me." Lev. xxv., 23. There is one exception to the rule. A house in a walled city, out of the original family by default for a full year could not be redeemed: verses 29, 30. "God made the country; but man made the city."

But there were enemies to the jubilee. They were those who were doing well enough without it; and feared they would fare worse with it; were the most influential of their neighbors. The same gave their discountenance to the institution, until they effected its discontinuance: so that few jubilees have been celebrated in the history of the Jews: which resulted in evils a thousand-fold greater than the temporary inconvenience of a jubilee to a few, when it would have brought inexpressible joy to the many.

We may safely suspect that these rebels against God did what they could to prevent conversation upon the subject, and would punish servants who talked of liberty, added to the affliction of those whose land they held, influenced courts and judges, and also legislatures. They hated even trumpets, as some now hate free schools.

The rulers manifested this feeling when our blessed Lord "proclaimed liberty to the captives" in his day.

And now, at this late day, the same generation hate as cordially the gospel of the jubilee. Nevertheless it is blessed to enter upon these days. Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1,335 days.

This prophetic announcement is that of good will to all; is given under the best auspices. Every thing in politics and law, of the arts and sciences, and refinement and progress. Genius untrammelled, and a fair field for everybody. This blessing is two-fold:

1. Of deliverances from the innumerable evils that marked all former times.

It would be a great blessing to be on a bleak desolate strand, compared to the endurance of a ship-wreck. To be a free man with an empty pocket, if with good hands to serve a turn, rather than to be an unwilling slave, under a cruel master. But altogether better to be amply cared for after the peril and loss attendant upon ship-wreck, or to enter upon one's own farm after a sad term of cruel servitude.

For 6,000 years, with almost no exception, the world has peen ruled by tyrants, who are most fitly compared to wild beasts, preying upon their subjects. Instance, for example, the barbarous discretion of Nebuchadnezzar, "Whom he would he slew, and whom he would he kept alive; and whom he would he set up; and whom he would he put down. Dan. v., 19. A Persian king gave orders to his army to slay and kill and cause to perish every Jew throughout the whole of his hundred and twenty-seven provinces. It is said, to this beast, "Arise, and devour much flesh."

Passing over many years of blood and tyranny, we come to Rome, that "Great and terrible beast, with great iron teeth, and brass nails; it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it." Then comes on the stage the blasphemous popes and papacy.

Language must ever fail to exhibit the infinite wickedness of this power.

A creature passing all meanness and cruelty. Sordid and hypocritical. A creature that refined every branch of its villainy. Its predecessors did awfully. This exceeds all in frauds, deceit, persecutions, and millions of murders.

The kingdom of the Lord in the hands of the sons of David ought to be an exception to the rule of tyrannies; but it is not. It slew the prophets, and stoned them that were sent unto them. Said Stephen, "Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? And they have slain them which showed before the coming of the Just One, of whom ye have now been the betrayers, and murderers.

A WORD ABOUT SUICIDE.

BR. STORRS: We are often told by the advocates of the endless torment theory that our views favor self-destruction. Now nothing can be clearer than that it comes from their own darling heathenish dogma, and that first originated with the old serpent the devil, when he preached his first sermon to Eve—"Ye shall not surely die." Could there be any act to show more sincere belief in this "doctrine of devils" than self-murder? Jesus said to the wicked Jews, "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do; he was a murderer from the beginning—he is a liar, and the father of it." ("Ye shall not surely die.") This is the lie by which he destroys our race. He is not only a liar but a murderer. "Ye do the deeds of your father." Judas went and hanged himself. Now here is a clear case of what influenced to self-murder. "Supper being ended, the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him." Jesus answered them, Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil? He spake of Judas." The apostles understood Christ to teach that all kinds of murder are the works of darkness. 1 John iii., 15, "Ye know that NO murderer hath eternal life abiding in him."

2 Peter ii., 12, "These, as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed . . . shall utterly perish in their own corruption."

Jude 10, "What they know naturally as brute beasts." 19th. "These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit." The idea seems to be, as Solomon tells us, Ecclesiastes iii., 19, that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast," and if left to their own downward course they perish like a beast. They will at last utterly perish like the beasts. Do not some sins lead more to self-destruction than others, although "the wages of sin is death?" The command, Thou shalt not commit adultery, was given for some greater reason than at first appears.

James ii., 11, "He that said, Do not commit adultery, said, also, do not kill." Solomon speaks often of those who commit that sin. "None that go unto her return again, neither take hold of the paths of life." "For her house inclineth unto death, and her paths unto the dead." "Whoso committeth adultery—destroyeth his own soul." "Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death." And how many can I call to mind that have followed this course that have ended their own existence. They were of the earth earthy. They follow their selfish passions like beasts, and at last utterly perish in their own corruption. Will God raise up beasts in a resurrection, that perish in their own corruption? Why should he, or why should he raise up wicked men who are "like beasts," who have not God's Spirit? There is nothing to prove it in all God's word; and although King James's version of the Scriptures favors this old heathen notion as much as is possible, yet it cannot be made to prove that wicked men are anything more than animal and perishing. And could all men be made to understand and believe that self-destruction was the end of all future life, murders would cease. And should men once give up this old lie, manufactured by the old serpent, and propagated by old Plato and other old heathen philosophers in fables, Christianity might cover our earth. Spiritualism, another of the offspring of that old lie of the serpent, "Ye shall not surely die," is undoubtedly a sure agent of adultery and self-destruction, as the statistics of the last few years abundantly prove. Those who disregard that command of God, so often given, often perish like Saul, a suicide, who went to inquire of the dead. Such commands as these cannot be wrested with impunity. "Regard not them that have familiar spirits, neither seek after wizards, to be defiled by them."

"The soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits—I will cut off from among his people." "A man, also, or a woman that hath a familiar spirit, or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death. They shall stone them with stones; their blood shall be upon them."

Now, we hear it said almost invariably that the suicide was "insane." We read "The curse causeless shall not come." There is a reason, there is a cause for the act. There was a cause why Nebuchadnezzar's reason was taken away and he driven from men with beasts of the field, and although so proud and great in his own eyes, proving the words of the wisest of men, a man, though the mightiest ruler that ever lived, proud and haughty, "hath no pre-eminence above a beast."

And it is beyond the shadow of a doubt, the cause of the curse that is following Christian labor to make men believe that at death they will go into the society they love so well here, that they shall live with the greatest portion of mankind and commit crimes unrestrained forever. What should deter them from at once hastening to their best friends who are there and who will soon be there.

Now we are not left in doubt what theory or views favor self-destruction; for the prophet Ezekiel has told us, "With lies ye have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad, and strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by PROMISING him LIFE.

Yours for Bible truth.

WM. R. WARNER.

BOSTON, MASS., July 13, 1868.

AN ŒCUMENICAL COUNCIL.

THE Pope, as had long been expected, has summoned all the bishops of the Church of Rome to attend a general or Œcumenical Council, which is to begin in Rome on the 8th of December, 1869. A General Council is a rare occurrence in the history of the Church of Rome. Even by counting in the councils of the first centuries, which had very little in common with those of the middle ages, the total number of them all does not reach twenty. The last one, that of Trent, which was called for the purpose of arresting and suppressing the great Reformation of the sixteenth century, was held about three hundred years ago. Since that time the bishops of the church have never been assembled in a general meeting until the present Pope, in 1854, convoked them from all countries of the world to be present at the proclamation of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary as a doctrine of the Church. Since then, in 1867, a second meeting of the kind has been held in Rome, but neither of these had the character of a General Council. They lasted only for a few days, and their only action consisted in an address to the Pope expressing an unqualified approval of some recent Papal measures.

A General Council is expected to be in session at least for several months. In the opinion of the Church of Rome, the General Councils are infallible in all decisions concerning matters of faith. In the earlier Church the authority of the councils was by far superior to that of the Bishop of Rome or of any other bishop. The first eight councils, down to that of Constantinople, in 869, were called by the emperors, not by the bishops of Rome, and the emperors either presided over them in person or by commissioners, and the final ratification of the decisions was also left to the emperor. If delegates from the bishops of Rome were present, they had no influence whatever. One of the councils even condemned a bishop of Rome as a heretic. But since the separation of the Greek from the Latin Church, the Popes have gradually succeeded in magnifying their own authority at the expense of that of the General Councils. Though their personal infallibility has not yet been declared to be an article of faith, the Popes have claimed and generally enforced the same degree of submission to all their decrees as though they were clothed with the infallibility of the councils. Nearly all the Popes since the middle ages have claimed to be infallible, and the number of bishops and priests who have dared to dispute the claim has become smaller and smaller. So prevailing appears, therefore, at present, the acceptance of the dogma of Papal infallibility that many members of the Roman Catholic Church believe that the approaching Council will declare it to be an article of faith. This would complete the sub-ordination of the General Councils to the Pope. In the ancient Church the assembled bishops claimed to be supreme legislators for the Church. Subsequently, in the middle ages, though they admitted the necessity of co-operation with the Bishop of Rome, yet they still mustered courage to depose the Pope when the peace of the Church was disturbed by the conflicts between popes and anti-popes. If the Pope is possessed of the fulness of power which formerly was ascribed to the councils only, the former legislative faculty of the latter ceases, and they are degraded to the rank of a Papal council.

But be this as it may, if the General Council of 1869 shall really meet at the appointed time, it will not fail to be of unusual interest. However inferior in real importance it may be to its predecessors, it will, to some extent, have the prestige which surrounds, in the annals of church history, many of the former councils. Roman Catholics and the Romanizing parties in the Anglican and some other churches will sound its praise and magnify its significance. A sensational press will send its "own correspondents" from all parts of the globe in order to gather some fresh material for public excitement. The Protestant churches will chiefly be interested to notice the position which the Council will occupy with regard to the remainder of the Christian world. However great the corruption may be which has for centuries pervaded the whole of the Church of Rome, there yet remain some fundamental doctrines of Christianity which are held by the Church of Rome no less than by Protestants. This element of common Christianity has been greatly weakened by Papal innovations and corruptions, but it is not yet extinct. To watch its working in the deliberations of a universal council of the Roman Church will be to Christians of every name a subject of profound interest.—The Methodist.

SECTARIANISM.

THERE are as many church-registers as there church-houses. But there is only one Lamb's Book of Life for all the ransomed sinners of the world. That is the place for your name. It is not Methodism nor Presbyterianism nor Lutherism, nor any other ism of men; but it is the life and power of the Son of God we preach. The different denominations are but symmetrical and convenient apartments in the one great sanctuary of the Lord. These distinct organizations are harmonious counterparts. Yet men separate themselves into sects, and magnify their consistent differences into conflicting doctrines. They build theological walls around themselves—the closer, the safer, as they vainly imagine; and they begin, in their stifled atmosphere and necessary shade, to doubt the orthodoxy of their neighbors. They put colored glass in intervening windows, draw down the blinds, bolt the doors, and nestle together as though all outside Christendom were turning infidel, and as if they, secluded company of all the earth, held fast the faith once delivered to the saints. Such a faith, so monkishly bound, needs a new deliverance!

Now, when you find yourself up in arms in defence of your creed, pause a moment, and consider whether, in all your life, you have ever been so brave in defending the Bible. You become exdited when you hear your Luther, or your Calvin, or your Wesley, or your Campbell criticised, but you will stand silent and unmoved when the name of your Jesus is blasphemed! Unless you can recognize prosperity in other churches as heartily as in your own, and rejoice at the conversion of sinners under anybody's preaching and under any church's roof, you may write "sectarian" as a fit suffix to your name. You have been tempted through self and sect to enter a refuge of lies. 'Ist and and 'ism are warp and woof of the enemy's tent-covers, and you have been deceived. You are attracted by the sound of your church name more than by all the cries of Calvary! Verily, you have your warning, and must bear the awful consequences of trimming your Christianity to a discipline, or confession, or catechism, and of wounding your Lord in the house of his friends.—The Gospel in the Trees, by A. Clark.

DR. WAYLAND, lecturing on the weight of evidence furnished by human testimony, was illustrating its authority and sufficiency even for the establishment of miracles. A member of the class, not entirely satisfied of the correctness of the teaching, suggested a practical application of the doctrine. "What would you say, Dr. Wayland, if I stated that, as I was coming up College Street, I saw the lamp at the corner dance?" "I should ask you where you had been, my son," was the quiet reply, in the instructor's gravest manner.

CHRISTIANITY has given to truth a dignity, independent of time and numbers. It has required that truth should be believed and respected for itself.—Vinet.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER; OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY; by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTERS TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburg, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for 2 cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our own expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12mo. Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

"MANLEY ON INHERENT IMMORTALITY."

R. CADWELL, CORTLAND, N. Y., Dear Sir: The above is the caption of an article in the HERALD OF LIFE, published in New York City. It is said to be called out by yourself, from having read a book of mine (the Biblical Review, Vol. 1, Creation and the Patriarchs,) wherein I make allusion to man's creation in the image of God as evidence of our immortality.

I reply to the article solely out of respect to yourself, and on the same account I address my remarks to you rather than to the editor of the aforesaid sheet, whose treatment of me, in this article, renders him unworthy of my notice.

As I cannot spend the time to transcribe the article including my statement of the argument and the editor's criticism, I would respectfully ask you to read each sentence by itself, and compare it with my reply; and with this view I will preserve the same numbering.

1. The question is not under what forms God is able to manifest himself or has manifested himself in past ages. Besides, if the image of God is the same as man's physical form, why does the editor confess afterward in this same article, that he does not know what God's image is? See under paragraph 7. It is very evident that when Paul called God our Father, he had reference to a spiritual relationship, for he contrasts him with the "fathers of our flesh," and calls him "Father of spirits." This proves clearly that the image in which man was made is a spiritual image. In form we are made in the image of our earthly parents, in spirit we are made in the image of God. This is as clear as the light of day. What kind of relation Paul has in view, whether a relation created by conversion, or a relation existing from the days of Adam, will appear before we get through.

2. If man had no spiritual nature at the beginning, then why was he held responsible? Was it man's body that was responsible, or his soul? And if man had a soul at first that soul had its own proper nature, the same that it had afterward. Man's character is changed by his conversion, but his nature remains the same. If man is not immortal before he is "born again," he never is. This is evident from the fact that man once converted, can fall back to an unconverted state; but to affirm that man, once immortal, can afterward become mortal, is a contradiction in terms. We fail to appreciate the argument against man's immortality from the passages quoted. Did no one become immortal till the second Adam came into the world?

3. That man is like God, is called an "impious assumption," and the old serpent is brought in to help the editor to make out his argument. In some respects the serpent told the truth; and when he did so, we do not propose to contradict him, merely because he is a serpent. He said that our first parents should be as gods, and it is afterward confessed by the Almighty that they had become as gods. (Gen. iii., 22.) But this has no reference to man's original nature, but simply to his knowledge of good and evil. The editor reminds us that the language of the serpent is, "ye shall be as God;" not, ye are or have been. Very true, but does he say, "ye shall be as gods, when ye become converted?" No; but "ye shall be as gods when ye partake of the forbidden fruit." The testimony of the serpent is quite as much in our favor as his—entirely so when he tells the truth.

Again, the editor argues, that man cannot be like God, unless he is "omnipotent, omniscient, and self-existent," as well as imperishable and immortal. Did our first parents become omnipotent, omniscient, and self-existent, when they became as gods, knowing good and evil? The Lord says, they have become like one of us, and if the editor's argument is a good one, they must have become omnipotent, etc.

Again, does Jesus require us to become omnipotent, when he commands us to "be perfect, even as our heavenly Father is perfect?" And when Paul calls God the Father of spirits, does his language imply that the children of God are omnipotent, omniscient, etc.? If men can be the children of God, and not be omnipotent, they can be like God, and not be omnipotent. The child in its essential nature is like the parent; but he is not necessarily of the same size, or of the same intelligence. So a man can be made in the image of God, and possess his essential attributes, without being omnipotent or self-existent.

4. It is assumed that Paul in Hebrews xii., is speaking of Christians when he calls God the Father of spirits. This assumption is false, we will not say "impious." There is nothing to show that the reference is exclusively to Christians. True, Paul does not say, "our Father," but he might as well have said so, for he uses "we" and "our" in the same connection; and the Saviour instructs his followers to call on God under the title of "Our Father which art in heaven."

Paul argues that we are the children of God because God chastises us; and as he expressly affirms that "all are partakers" of his chastisements, the argument, to be good for anything must prove that God is the Father of all men. Besides, the very expression "Father of spirits," proves the same thing. He is not the Father of the good, nor of believers, nor of Christians, but the "Father of spirits," and all spirits are his children.

5. This is passed in silence; and 6 is said to "border on blasphemy," and there it is left. It is easy to make assertions. We say that, to deny what is here said borders on blasphemy, for it contradicts the Bible from first to last. If our wisdom, justice, etc., are not the same as these attributes in God, there should have been some definition of these terms as applied to God when used in the scriptures. There are no such definitions, for the reason that we have a standard within ourselves by which to judge of their meaning.

7. We have sufficiently noticed what the editor says here. That man can be like God and yet not infinite has been already shown. The editor says we must wait for immortality till the resurrection, and yet he seems to teach that we put on immortality at the time of our conversion. Which is true?

Some general observations on the whole subject will close what we have to say at present. The editor of the HERALD OF LIFE seems to think that "passing from death unto life" is to leave a state of mortality for one of immortality. How can this be, when men are said to be "dead in sins," while they are still living in the world? Being dead in sin is not annihilation, and consequently passing from death unto life, is not becoming immortal. "Everlasting life," or "eternal life," so often mentioned in the New Testament, is not immortal life, nor the principal of immortality implanted in the soul by conversion, but it is the moral and spiritual life of faith. It comes with faith, and is liable to be lost with faith; but to speak of man's being immortal to-day and mortal to-morrow is absurd.

Again, if men become immortal by conversion what becomes of infants? Are we to believe that the child, who passes out of the world before he has an opportunity of being converted, is doomed to utter annihilation? To say nothing of the revolting character of such a doctrine, it is manifestly partial and unjust.

And finally, that mere belief, a conviction of the mind by the force of wisdom, should change the nature of the soul, is an absurdity that has few equals. We cannot believe any such doctrine. We confess the change by conversion is great, but that it relates to the essence of the spirits, is too preposterous to be believed for a moment. With the best of wishes, I am your friend,

W. E. MANLEY.

NOTE.—Mr. Cadwell: I can have nothing to do with the Editor of the HERALD, as I consider his critisism abusive, evincing more of blackguardism than of true Christian courtesy; but you can do with what I have written as you please, provided the whole subject goes together so that I may have a fair chance to be understood. I understand you to be an earnest, honest inquirer, and for that reason I have written the foregoing. I cannot subscribe to the doctrine that man becomes essentially different after his conversion from what he is before; his feelings are changed, his character is changed; but his essential attributes never change. The editor says, with my views man should not die at all. I believe he does not die at all. The soul, (the true man) never dies. It is the body that dies, not the soul. The spirit leaves the body; it returns to God, but no intimation is given that it dies.

Thanking you for the interest you have manifested in this matter, I would again subscribe myself your friend and brother.

W. E. MANLEY.

REPLY BY R. CADWELL TO MANLEY.

CORTLAND, N. Y., July 15, 1868.

W. E. MANLEY, Dear Sir: I have received your reply to the editor's criticism in HERALD OF LIFE of June 10th, on your article—Man's Immortality, which being made in the "image of God" is adduced as proof.

1. You say, "The question is not under what forms God has manifested himself," etc. The question of man's physical form was raised by you, my Br., and denied, and is still denied, and you seem disposed to waive it because the editor "Confesses he does not know what that image is," (but thinks it more likely to be man's capacity for knowledge above all other creatures). You do this, not perhaps to avoid the thing denied, but to make it appear it consists in something the editor did not name, viz., in man's spirit, or his "spiritual nature." For you say, "In spirit we are made in the image of God," and man had this from the "beginning." Sec 2.

We read, "So God created man in his image." But where is the text that says man's spirit was made in the image of God? or that the first man, Adam, had a spiritual nature? It appears to me, that Christ's testimony, in John iii., 6, and Paul's, 1 Corth. xv., 44–54, should silence your claim for immortality till the natural soul puts on the spiritual by a resurrection of the dead, and the change of the living, when Christ descends from heaven. I think it is unreasonable to follow my Br's reasoning against this evidence in the absence of of a solitary text that man, or any thing belonging to him was made immortal.

2. But Br. Manley thinks there is something in the apostle's words in Heb. xii., 9 that proves not that these "sons," born of earthly parents, are immortal, but their spirits are, because he calls "God" (not) our "Father," but Father of spirits, in contrast with fathers of our flesh.

Here it may be understood (for like begets like), that we are made in the image of our earthly parents in physical form, yet it does not appear that in spirit we are made in the image of God; for as I have said before, the Bible knows nothing about the creation, or the infusion of a soul or spirit distinct from the we born of earthly parents, except as the breath or spirit of lives; and hence we read, "In whose hand is the soul of every living thing, and the breath of all *man*kind;" and that he is the "Father of the spirits of all flesh."

I think this is the true contrast in the text. The moral condition and relation being pointed out before by those he receives and addresses as his sons.

My friend Manley is mistaken about the editor's making man's immortality to commence at conversion, on which much is said in reply which will not, on this account, be noticed.

The editor said, "We receive the spirit of adoption, and are made partakers of the divine nature by grace," and not by original creation. But the spirit of adoption, by which we have the spirit, or disposition of sons, and say Father, is not the sonship itself. Rom. viii., 23; for this is received in the resurrection. And because this Spirit dwells in us, it shall quicken our mortal bodies. Rom. viii., 11. As says the Saviour, "That which is born of the Spirit is spiritual," not natural or animal. But "that which is born of the flesh is flesh"—animal. See 1 Corth xv., 44–50.

3. Br. Manley found one text, Gen iii., 22, in which the serpent and God agree that man had come to know good and evil. But where is the text that proves man's immortality? "Ye shall not surely die." Is this the text? which is in opposition to God, who said, "Ye shall surely die?" On the serpent's theory, God took unnecessary care of the tree of life to prevent living forever.

4. We have said, In our opinion, the expression, "Father of spirits," Heb. xii., 9, is not indicative of a moral relation, yet I do believe Paul was speaking exclusively to Christians, those who have received the spirit of adoption, and who are in a peculiar sense "the children of God by faith," and to whom God is their God and Father, in a sense he is not of "all men." 2 Corth. vi., 18. Yet it was equally proper for these to acknowlege, in this connection, him as the Father of spirits—their physical vitality—the Author of the breath of lives, since "in him we live and move and have our being," or exist. See Eph. i., 4, 5. The 5th verse proves the natural offspring of Adam are not the adopted children according to God's predestinated purpose by creation or generation, for such are natural children, and are not subject to the law of God.

But suppose the moral distinction disputed in this chapter and text, be dropped. On it the editor establishes, as one text, that eternal life is the gift of God, by a resurrection to those only who have the Spirit of Christ. My friend Manley uses the "all men"—"all spirits," and "his children" as synonymous. This is quite singular; and he says Paul had in view by the phrase "Father of spirits" a relation existing from the days of Adam. This, he says, is good evidence to prove "our immortality." I will ask him right here if these "men" and "children" are the same as "man" of whom David speaks, "What man liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" My friend may say "soul here means himself." Granted. Is there anything not embraced in "himself?" Is this man the same as in Job xiv.? Does he lie down in death; and when his breath goeth forth, do his thoughts perish in that very day? Unless the man created in the image of God differed entirely from those I have introduced, and referred to in Heb. xii., they are dead and perished except the dead are raised. Where then is the evidence of "our immortality from the days of Adam?"

On the 5th, 6th, and 7th paragraphs I wish to be released from a formal examination. I do not feel a heart or power to do so, neither do I feel to pass them in silence. I hope I may express in part my opinion and feelings, and test the truthfulness of one or more of the expressions; and I am sure I have in my heart kindness, and mercy in my soul to him with whom I differ. It is the doctrine I have to deal with; and it was so with the editor. It may be just in me to say I have taken an interest in reading much that Br. Manley has written. He has manifested candor and regard for the truth of the Scriptures, and a Christian spirit in his writings, and I think his treatise on sheol, hades, ruah, and nephesh, should and does overthrow the system here opposed; for he acknowledges no support from the use of these words in the Bible—the theological idea of the soul.

In regard to the doctrine stated in these paragraphs, I confess my view of them is about what the Editor has expressed. I confess, also, I am not enough skilled in language to mix up so many words and sentences, the meaning of scarcely one of them being alike, to teach one thing, and yet it turns out there is an infinite difference. But this is got over very easy. My Br. knows that any doctrine, however nicely put together, that contradicts the Bible, is false.

We will now test, in part, one sentence sufficient to show this. Br. Manley says, "The spirit of man and the spirit of God are alike—the one emanated from the other, as the child from the parent, and both have the same attributes." Now this is well dressed—looks pretty. God said to the woman, "I will greatly multiply thy conception, and thou shalt bring forth children." Job says, chap. xiv., "Man that is born of woman is of few days." Here man as a child, and children are said to born of a parent, and Br. Manley says the spirit of man emanates from God, as the child from the parent. Well, the child emanates by being begotten and brought forth. Is this the way God's spirit is multiplied? "Like begets like." Our author says, Gen. i., 2; vi., 3; xli., 38, "Spirit of God means God himself." Vol. 1., p. 61. We might infer, without this reference, that God multiplied himself, or that he begets and brings forth other gods, or children like himself, having all his "attributes," and become joined to these children, and Job's man, born of woman; and the question comes up, When this is done, are they any more than men-children born? or do the gods exist in them as distinct?

Our author says, "All spirits are his [God's] children." Are these the same as those of woman born? If they are, what is gained? If they are not, where does the Bible give any account of them? But to increase the difficulty, Br. Manley says, "It is certain the Bible speaks of the spirit of beasts, as well as of man." Vol. i. p. 61.

Yes, and it is true that God calls this spirit His. Thus we read, "If he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again to dust." Here we have all flesh and man, which includes man and every living thing. Every man, then, and every beast, has this spirit—"all spirits are his children," says our friend Manley. This text with his views makes confusion terribly confounded.

I cannot keep myself back, for the moment, to contemplate this wonderful multiplicity of gods and their attributes. But I can go no farther, the spirit of dumbness oppresses me; and awfulness steals over me. God is called Father, where paternal relation is not considered. He is the Father of the spirits of all flesh, as the Creator, or cause of the principle of life, which is sustained by breathing the air; and supports it in all who live by breathing.

One more question and I close. Was the man Job speaks of made in the "image of God?" Evidently he was; yet he dies—yea, he expires, and "where is he?" I have asked these questions, well assured that Job's doctrine and Paul's theory of a living soul, 1 Corth., xv. 44–51 do not agree with my friend Manley's. Which is true?

THE BLESSED PEOPLE.

THE REFORMATION.

THIS was a splendid day dawn to the watching ones after a night of terror; yet there were frightful shadows of former days lurking here and there in the gray morning. The plethoric old sinner, who had kept the field a thousand years, is staggered by the blow; but not to his fall. Yet he has a little time to "practise and prosper." But the "judgment sat, and they took away his dominion."

This last of evil powers deserves a little further notice before it is dropped.

The tolerance it receives, notwithstanding its flagrant transgressions against the whole of Europe and the world, is a political mystery. There is not a portion of the earth, accessible to it, it has not cursed with its polluted foot prints. There is not a government, house, dynasty, or republic whose hospitality it has not abused. Behold among its exploits what a corrupt religion it has invented (or adopted from the heathen); and, to cap the climax of its bad success, has fastened it upon the world, Protestants and all. In America there are 62,000 Protestant pastors who preach the Roman Catholic gospel substantially, excepting the best thing in Romanism—which is purgatory. To this the Protestants, (that is, the evangelical portion of them) have done violence; have demolished that half-way station, and mercilessly forced upon the unfortunate delinquents "through tickets" to the utmost depths of unsufferable eternal wo!

Perhaps the mystery of the continuance of Romanism above ground is, its transcendent wickedness. Everybody who has engaged in warfare against popery has been obliged to succumb, or quit with a "drawn battle." Its wickedness is so ponderous that none can support the load with sufficient strength to make a convincing exhibition of it. The truth far surpasses other exhibitions of infamy and crime; and is so out of the range of comparison with any precedent, that the most heated opposer of it comes to doubt his own words; and auditories take the same impression. The result is, that more sympathy is created than disgust for the fetid thing. Had its sins been common, been believable and possible of comparison, or parallel, it would have been execrated by all mankind, and torn piecemeal long ago, by the respectable powers surrounding.

"Cursed system—bitter root of every crime,
Of sin the ugliest, foulest incarnation;
The darkest blood-spot on the face of time,
Sure source of ruin unto many a nation,
The bane of peace—the hinderer of salvation,
The severer of evrey tender tie!
Fountain of broken hearts—true imitation
Of Satan's regal power and dignity."

However, its term of power, by the slowest calculations of prophetic times, is at an end; "and yet forbid to die," by that exquisite politician Louis Napoleon! But he is on his way to doom; and like his predecessor will find the cost of interposing his impotent policy against the will of Omnipotence.

THE DELIVERANCE.

Take the case of the Jews, who from the dispersion, down to the time of the end, had no rest for the soles of their feet: were hated, proscribed, robbed and killed by law or faction.

Here is a brief account of their sufferings, from "Fleetwood's History of the Jews," as we find it in "The Book of Daniel Opened."

"To give a narrative of the Jews we must follow them, despised, persecuted, and forsaken, as they were, into almost every part of the world, and collect from the history of the nations, the broken and scattered details of their eventful history.

"During the five years which Adrian spent in avenging the Romans, we are informed that 580,000 Jews were butchered. Now, indeed, nearly exterminated. For many centuries the Jews beheld the church of Rome, their worst and most cruel tormentors. The Greek general Belisarius, put to death every Jew, male and female, that he could find. During the reign of Justinian, many Jews were murdered and their property confiscated.

"It is truly sickening to think of the misery the Jews suffered from the crusaders. Men were seen murdering their own children, to keep them from falling into the hands of their enemies. Women would bind their children fast to their own bodies, and plunge into a watery grave to escape a more dreaded end. This dreadful carnage spread through all the cities of the Main and Danube. The blood of the Jews marked the foot-steps of the Crusaders wherever they went.

"On the 14th of Feb. 1198, the Jews were in their synagogues at Paris. Suddenly they were surrounded by the troops. Their property was confiscated; they, their wives and children, destitute of all things, and of the means of travel, were all banished from the kingdom. In the 12th century, persecution raged in England. When Richard went on a crusade, the people rose and murdered multitudes of Jews. The intention was to murder every one in the kingdom. About fifteen hundred of them retired to York, and tried to defend themselves, but were overpowered. They first offered to ransom their lives with money, but there was no mercy in the relentless mob. As a choice of evils, they first killed their wives and children; then burned the building in which they were, and perished in the flames.

"About 1492, the Spanish inquisition was committing the most dreadful outrages upon the Jews; the recital of which would chill one's blood. Their number at that time in Spain was from 300,000 to 600,000. An edict appeared in this year commanding all unbaptized Jews to quit the realm in four months. They now scattered in various directions. Many perished upon the ocean; multitudes perished by famine. They first encamped on the sandy plains; for they could not obtain admission into Fez. Here they lived for a while upon roots. "Happy," says a Jewish writer, "would they have been if grass had been plenty." In this dreadful state of suffering some killed their children to put them out of pain; and others sold them into captivity for bread. One party of the Jews who were thus driven out of Spain were barbarously landed on the African shore naked and destitute. Many of whom were devoured by wild beasts. Naples, Venice, and Portugal, perpetrated terrible barbarities upon that hapless people.

"From 1663 to 1666 the murder of the Jews became general. Some made their escape to Turkey. Up to the commencement of the eighteenth century the earth scarcely afforded them a refuge. For 17 centuries every man's hand seemed to be against them."

How suggestive the texts, "How shall I give thee up?" "Woe also to them when I depart from them." Hos. xi., 8, 9, 12. Without God; no consolations of religion, yet a religion purer in doctrine than their persecutors could furnish; yet no comfort of hope; no power of repentance; no contrition of heart; no temple, no oracle, or prophet or priest, or sacrifice. Alas! what "desolation!"

"Tost with tempest and not comforted." Dying out, because of the withdrawal of God's favor; but having the hard presence of strong, bitter enemies; "helping forward their affliction."

The poor dear Christians suffered side by side with them, though a longer period. Having the same enemy, subject to the same treatment, but having a better consolation, "They looked for a better resurrection." Heb. xi.

Who can contemplate those ages of dismal darkness and wanton cruelty, without sorrow of heart, accompanied with wonder that God could so long endure the sight of rivers of blood and wails of woe from every spot of habitable earth; even in every year of its being, down to "the time of the end."

THE PRESENCE OF GOD AND CHRIST.

GREAT were the privileges of personal intercourse with the Deity, and marvellous were the tokens of His personal presence enjoyed under the older dispensations. Enoch and Noah walked with God, holding converse with him doubtless daily. With Abraham God talked, as friend with friend, so that his title of friend of God, has come down through Arabic tradition, as well as in the line of Old Testament Scripture. God talked with Moses face to face; showed him the terrors and the glories of His presence on the Mount, held long discussions with him and heard and seemed to yield to his remonstrances.

"When Israel, of the Lord beloved,
Out of the land of bondage came,
Her fathers' God before her moved,
An awful guide in smoke and flame.
By day, along the astonished lands
The cloudy pillar glided slow;
By night, Arabia's crimsoned sands
Returned the fiery column's glow."

Dean Stanley calls this sense of the overwhelming greatness and nearness of God "the primary stratification of the religion" of the Jews.

That which constituted the crowning point of these visible, personal manifestations of Deity was also their end. The grandest of all such privileges and the antitype of them all was the sight of THE WORD MADE FLESH. Blessed their eyes who saw His glory, the glory as of the Only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth! Yet a greater blessedness, under the Gospel, was to follow this highest of blessings, in which the Old Covenant shared with the New and became one with it. It was expedient that Christ should go away that a better dispensation—that of His Spirit—should come in, no more to the outward sense and in a comparatively limited sphere and upon great and critical occasions only, but as a personal, yet infinite Spirit. The Son God is present with the spirits of all his people. Free as the wind that bloweth where it listeth, close to the heart as thought is to the mind, Christ lives in his people by His Spirit. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." If the reader would compare the Old and New Dispensations as to the different modes in which God vouchsafes his presence in each, he may read the thirty-third chapter of Exodus, in connection with the first part of the eighth chapter of Romans, and he will see how limited, how much in the sphere of the senses, is the glory of the one; and how profound, how spiritual, how identified with the work of Redemption and bound up with the Future Life is the other.

The personal, intimate presence of the living Redeemer, with his people, is a blessed fact, as much a fact and a far more blessed fact than the visible, audible manifestations of God under the old Covenant or than the presence of the Word made flesh among the men of His own generation. That presence is a fundamental fact in a genuine, living Christian experience. Christ is with us by His Spirit, not a mere power, influence, or transcendent mystery, but, as we believe, a fact for the consciousness of the believer, a something which he may more or less distinctly and analytically know to be besides and above himself; Spirit speaking without the aid of the mechanism of eye or ear or nerve, directly to spirit; witnessing—that is the inspired term—giving independent testimony with our spirits, to the great experimental, consoling truths of Christianity.

We urge upon every child of God the duty and the privilege of this spiritual form of experience under the New Covenant. Know the joy, the strength, and the purifying power of an inward sense of a personal, present Redeemer. Seek to make it part of your every-day life. With it, as a far better guide and support than the visible Shekinah, make your pilgrim-journey through the temptations and trials, and under the burdens of life. Attempt not to live right only by the power of abstract, or impersonal convictions, but connect with the highest sense of duty, of love, of gratitude, a personal Saviour, the present exercise of whose grace saves you, whose present approval you are to gain, who is a living, almighty Friend close at your side to rescue you from your enemies, and whom your sins grieve into withdrawal, to your deep discomfort and injury. Venture nowhere, unless you have reasonable ground to believe He will go with you. Make the prayer of Moses one of your daily, hourly supplications: "If thy presence go not with us, carry us not up hence."—Selected.

"THREE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS."

One Thousand Dollars Wanted.

FOR WHAT?

To put into circulation within the next three months Ten Thousand each of the following works:

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE.

THE JUDGMENT:

TIME AND MANNER OF IT.

AND

LIFE FROM THE DEAD:

Or, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN.

These three documents are for the campaign before us, which is not to be ended till our King is crowned and has the kingdoms of this world subjected to his reign on David's throne. Three thousand each of the above two first-named documents have been printed, and four thousand of the last, and a great portion of them are already in circulation; but there is a wish to increase it to ten thousand each by the next anniversary of the LIFE AND ADVENT UNION. We believe it can be done. It is true, a few have generally had such work to do; but "many hands make light work." If each of our subscribers could pay, or collect one dollar for this object, the full amount and several hundred dollars over would be had to carry on the work.

Who says, I WILL DO IT? You can have all your money back again in the documents, if you wish it.

The three works can be had for 14 cents, including the postage; or, 100 of each for $12, including postage, or for $10 when sent by express or taken at our office.

THE "GENEROUS OFFER" REVIVED.

IT will be remembered that the Hon. O. S. HALSTED, last winter made the offer to send his work, "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE," to any subscriber of the HERALD OF LIFE for $2, and himself prepay the postage. The retail price of the work is $3. By accepting the judge's offer, you, in fact, get this invaluable work for a little more than half price; as the author gets but $1.68 after paying postage. The book is one to study; and with it your Bible will be more perfectly understood. The offer is a most generous one, and we hope many more will avail themselves of it. It is not restricted to your taking one copy at this rate: You can have any number you choose to send the money for. Send $2 for each copy; writing your own name and Post Office address plain, and the work will come to you free of any other expense.

Direct your communication to Hon. O. S HALSTED, 417 Broad St., NEWARK, N. J.

HOW TO GO TO SLEEP.

THE following is given in "Blinn's Anatomy of Sleep; or, the Art of Procuring Sound and Refreshing Slumber at Will," published in London in 1842. The principle feature of Blinn's system is for the patient to fix his attention on his own breathing: "He must depict to himself that he sees the breath passing from his nostrils in a continuous stream, and the very instant that he brings his mind to conceive this apart from all other ideas, consciousness and memory depart; imagination slumbers; fancy becomes dormant, thought subdued; the sentient faculties lose their susceptibility; the vital, or ganglionic system assumes sovereignty, and he no longer wakes, but sleeps." A newspaper writer says he has practised the above for years whenever nature needed any assistance, and can endorse the prescription. It will put any one to sleep who has not an evil conscience, a jumping tooth, or a bank-note past due.

AN Irish clergyman once broke off the thread of his discourse, and thus addressed his congregation:

"My dear brethren, let me tell you that I am now just half way through my sermon, but as I perceive your impatience, I will say that the remaining half is not more than a quarter as long as that you have heard."

ENEMIES are as necessary to the proper developments of the full grown man as friends. When lived that man that amounted to anything but could count his enemies by the scores?

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JULY 29, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

MANLEY'S LETTER TO R. CADWELL.

OUR criticism on an extract from a work of Mr. Manley's, sent us by Br. Cadwell, which will be found in the HERALD OF LIFE June 10, seems to have disturbed the mind of the author; so much so that he thinks the editor "unworthy my notice." Yet he gives Br. Cadwell full leave to have his response used as he pleases, as the sequel shows.

So far as any "abuse" of Mr. Manley, personally, is concerned, none was given, and none was intended For aught we know he may be a most Christian gentleman. The fact is, of him personally we know nothing, not recollecting that we ever heard his name, or knew such a man lived on earth, till Br. Cadwell sent us the extract on which our criticism was made. It was the sentiments contained in that extract we had to do with; and the truthfulness of our criticism seems to have been the annoying element. We regret to wound the feelings of any man; but if truth does it we cannot help it. If we did evil, is it manly—to say nothing of the Christian element—to misrepresent our position under a pretence of having been "abused?" We did not knowingly misrepresent his position; it needs no such treatment; it was shocking enough without misrepresentation; nor has he in the least improved it by his letter to R. Cadwell, which we lay before our readers this week, and Br. Cadwell's reply, so calmly written and with such crushing power. We should not wonder if the author of a multiplicity of Gods should lose sight of our imaginary "abuse" under the overwhelming weight of Br. C.'s concluding remarks.

But we shall notice a few points in Mr. Manley's letter not responded to by R. Cadwell. It is asked, "If man had no spiritual nature at the beginning, why was he held responsible? Was it man's body that was responsible or his soul?"

It was the man, as an intellectual animal, that was responsible: "THOU," the man, formed of the dust of the ground, and not some mysterious internal entity, that was responsible. It was a being that could eat fruit, and his responsibility was to refrain from eating of a certain tree. The act of disobedience was the act of a real, tangible being; and not of an indwelling God, who is supposed, by Mr. Manley's theory, to be the responsible being. Says M., "If man is not immortal before he is 'born again' he never is." Christ was "the first born from the dead;" and no man ever will be immortal till he is born from the dead: and that is being "born again;" before that, the believer is only begotten by "the incorruptible seed," and by the Spirit of God; so that if he comes to the birth, and is brought forth, then it is that "this mortal shall put on immortality." So Paul teaches. "Conversion," as it is called, makes no man immortal. We never held or promulgated any such idea; so that M. has expended words on that point, "beating the air;" and his imaginary "absurdity" disappears. No man who ever died has yet become immortal, and will not till his resurrection. Let this affirmation be disproved if M. can do it.

A remarkable item in our friend's letter is, that he undertakes to show that the serpent did not tell a whole lie. The old fellow, if he is what orthodoxy says—a personal spirit-devil—must feel some joy that he has one vindicator against the Saviour's awful testimony—"there is no truth in him." M. vindicates the serpent from that charge; for according to M. he did tell Eve some truth! Yes, indeed, and the Almighty is brought forward by M. to confirm his statement that the serpent told some truth. But before we accept M.'s conclusion we shall look carefully at the evidence. Did the Almighty say the serpent spoke any truth? Did his repeating the serpent's words make an endorsement of them? We think not. The expression, "the man has become as one of us, to know good and evil," seems to be what is called irony. "An ironical expression is often accompanied with a manner of utterance which indicates that the speaker intends to be understood in a sense directly contrary to that which the words convey."—Webster.

That seems to be exactly the case here. As if JEHOVAH had said, "the man has believed the serpent's lie that he should be as God, knowing good and evil, and that he should not surely die; but to prevent that lie from becoming a truth, he shall go forth from the tree of life, lest he take and eat thereof and live forever."

Such, we are persuaded, is the true sense of the text. God does not punish men for believing the truth; it is for believing lies. Will M. pretend that JEHOVAH knew good and evil in the sense in which Adam knew it? We think not. Adam's knowledge was that of experience, and embraced both physical and moral evil, or the evil of sin. Man's knowledge was not like God's in this matter.

But for the sake of the argument, suppose man by sin "had become as gods," as M. says, then what follows? Does it not follow that he had not all "the attributes of God" till he sinned, and that sin was necessary to make the man perfectly God-like? If so, what becomes of M.'s assumption that "We are like God—we have the same original attributes," etc.? Of course, he means we have them by creation.

But M. says on the phrase he uses, "they had become as gods," "this has no reference to man's original nature," etc. That may be true, yet he lacked till then an important item in being "like God," and so had not "the same original attributes," in full.

We have not the slightest objection to M.'s having "the testimony of the serpent" all in "our [his] favor." And that testimony is the only foundation of the doctrine of inherent immortality found in the Bible. God said man should die if he disobeyed, and the serpent said he should not; and M. says "the true man never dies." See his closing remarks. Thus the serpent is vindicated so far as M. is able to perform that service for him. We hope he will not accuse us again of being "abusive." If he can excuse the serpent, he might at least bear with us a little in "our folly," and "suffer fools gladly, seeing ye, yourself are wise" as a serpent. See 2 Cor. xi., 19. Mr. Manley says:

> The editor argues, that man cannot be like God, unless he is "omnipotent, omniscient, and self-existent," as well as imperishable and immortal.

M. had said, "We are like God—we have the same original attributes," etc. We replied, "Mr. Manley must take the consequence of his assumptions that 'men are like God, have the same original attributes,' etc., omnipotent, omniscient, self-existent, etc., as well as 'imperishable,' and immortal." Is M. horrified at his own assumptions? Must he raise dust to cover the deformity of his serpentine theory? Does not every reader see that when M. said "we have the same original attributes" as God; and added, "they are as imperishable in us as they are in him," that such a statement embraced all the attributes of God without exception? We have no fear for the answer; and his attempt to throw the odium of such blasphemy back on the editor of the HERALD OF LIFE will not profit him in the minds of thinking men. M. asks,

> Did our first parents become omnipotent, omniscient, and self-existent, when they became as gods, knowing good and evil? The Lord says they have become like one of us, and if the editor's argument is a good one, they must have become omnipotent, etc.

Did the Lord say, they have become possessed of "the same original attributes" of one of us? If he had, it would follow inevitably they had become omnipotent, etc. The Lord told in what they had become "like one of us," supposing it not an irony; but M. told us, man had "the same original attributes" of God. That embraces omnipotence, omniscience, etc. Our "argument" is "good;" but M.'s inference is false; for the Lord said nothing of man's having become possessed of His "attributes," while M. did expressly state that of man's creation.

We are not disposed to take any further notice of M.'s remarks, believing Br. Cadwell has sufficiently shown the falsity of his positions; and the "absurdity" of his assumptions are too palpable to need to be pointed out to our readers.

ZION'S HERALD.

THE above is the name of a Methodist paper established in Boston, Massachusetts, some forty years since, perhaps near fifty. It was the first of the class in the United States. We have made a number of efforts to get an exchange with it, first for the Bible Examiner, and repeatedly for the HERALD OF LIFE. It seems determined, however, not to grant us that favor. Of course it has a right to decline.

Last spring we sent to that paper ours, containing a correction of Prof. Mattison's misstatements concerning us and our views, and accompanied it with a copy of our pamphlet "LIFE FROM THE DEAD." It seems that pamphlet was noticed by Zion's Herald, but we were not favored to get a sight of it. Some of its remarks have finally reached us in an indirect way, and it comes out in the following mild and charitable assumptions:

> Life from the Dead, by George Storrs, is an attempt to prove that immortality is confined to believers. (1.) Texts are cited and arguments argued, yet no sinner is convicted nor saint sanctified by this view. (2.) It held no place in the teachings of Christ (3.) He sought to impress on his hearers their future conscious being, holy or sinful, happy or miserable. (4.) . . . . Every man believes he is himself immortal, whatever he may think about the eternal insensibility or annihilation of his neighbors. (5.) If Mr. Storrs should become an avowed unbeliever and and an open sinner he would be as certain of his immortality as he is to-day. (6.) The devils in Gadara were not lifeless nor unconscious; why should their human associates be? (7.) Better preach the gospel-eternal happiness to those that are saved, eternal misery to those who are damned. (8.)

NOTES BY THE EDITOR HERALD OF LIFE.

(1.) This shows how little Zion's Herald knows what it is talking about. The object of our pamphlet is to show, and prove, that "The Righteous only will live again from the Dead." But that paper is about as accurate as our opponents generally are. Accuracy seems to be of no consequence to them.

(2.) An unpardonable misstatement, and a claim of omniscience which a Christian man ought to blush to make. We have the testimony of not a few which goes to prove the statement untrue. Please remember "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." You give too much reason for others to think you have learned your morality in the Mattison school rather than from the Bible.

(3.) "Immortality to believers" only, not only "held a place in the teachings of Christ," but the contrary is never once mentioned by Christ or his apostles: and Paul, who learned his gospel by the direct "revelation of Christ," plainly tells us it is the saints only that "put on immortality," and that "at the last trump." Let Zion's Herald show where the Bible gives any such testimony as that immortality is possessed now, or ever will be bestowed on any man except he is in Christ. Can it be done? We know it cannot be, nor will any amount of railing against our view avail to prove it unscriptural or untrue.

(4.) Another human assumption. Christ taught no such doctrine. On the contrary, he taught that men were dying, perishing, and that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life:" and of such, saith Jesus, "I will raise him up at the last day;" clearly showing that the righteous alone are to live again from the dead; all others "utterly perish in their own corruption," as saith Peter. And Paul tells us when immortality is put on by believers, viz., "at the last trump."

(5.) Another mere assumption. But if it were true it would only prove that "all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth," as they had done just before the flood. They do not believe the testimony of JEHOVAH when he said, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh:" no, that is too humiliating to proud mortals; they would be as God; "believe themselves immortal." The Serpent's testimony is more in harmony with their views than the authority of God.

(6). Still another assumption. But maybe that would be true in one sense. Sinners like to think they are immortal, and the whole race of Spiritualists, including H. Mattison and Zion's Herald, are some evidence that we might be like them if we "should become an avowed unbeliever," as they all are as to immortality being of grace, bestowed only on the righteous, or on those "who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for honor, and glory, and immortality, eternal life." Rom. ii., 7. Yes, it is a fearful thing to become "avowed unbelievers" in "life and immortality," as only to be found in Christ alone for a perishing world. That unbelief brought on the great apostasy, commonly called papacy. It gave the church the character of a "HARLOT." It led to the worship of dead saints, pretending that they were alive—immortal. They were "just as certain of their immortality" as they were that "God is immortal." We hope and pray that God may preserve us from ever again drinking of the Harlot's "wine cup" of inherent immortality, lest we might become "as certain of immortality" as the Harlot and her "daughters" are "to-day." Alas for him who thus casts off faith in Christ for "life and immortality."

(7.) An appeal to "devils" is characteristic of our opponents. In fact, their only positive text favoring their theory is from what they call "the devil," viz., "the serpent." He said, "Ye shall not surely die;" and his language has been echoed by every advocate of inherent immortality from that day to this. Because their living devils are conscious, therefore dead sinners are! Marvellous logic! "The dead know not anything," saith Solomon; but a greater than Solomon is found in Zion's Herald. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish," saith David; but he was an ignoramus! If he had lived in the nineteenth century our D. D.s would have taught him better! Well, gentlemen, if you choose to appeal to "devils" we shall not keep you company. If you choose to be "their human associates" we cannot envy you; but, "All the wicked will God destroy," not excepting your devils. So saith the word of God.

(8.) Yes, "preach the gospel:" the good news—the glad tidings. The gospel is the good news of "life and immortality" for those who are dying—going out of life, without hope of a future life. To such the proclamation is to be made that "God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son: he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John v., 11, 12. And John tells us, "this is the record" which "he that believeth not hath made God a liar." Who is most likely to be the "human associates" of "devils," those who believe this "record that God gave of his Son," or those who believe it not? Let Zion's Herald beware lest it fall into the pit it has digged for others. We trust through divine grace we shall never exchange the "record of God" for human inventions, or a gospel unknown to Bible saints, either in the Old or New Testaments.

As Zion's Herald does not chose to exchange with the HERALD OF LIFE we shall not probably know how they receive our brief response to their notice of LIFE FROM THE DEAD.

"ADVENTISM" ONCE MORE.

WE have several times spoken of this work as appearing defective in the first "PART." That relates to the "Theology of Adventism." July 1st, we spoke of our satisfaction that Eld. HIMES had so "nobly defended," in the Voice of the West, the position of "the primitive Christians and the first Reformers" on the state of the dead and the end of the wicked; but we regretted that he failed to notice the statement of the Advent Herald, Boston, Mass., that he had "looked in vain" in the work called "Adventism,"

> "For the doctrine of two resurrections a thousand years apart," while it "maintains that 'there must be a resurrection before there can be a judgment' (p. 42), that 'the dead ones must come out of death's dark prison before being judged,' (p. 43) and 'that the judgment is connected with Christ's appearing,' (2 Tim. v., 1)," etc.

We said on this extract, here is a point where the author of Adventism has left us all in the dark, nor can we see but what his theory draws after it, inevitably, the heresy of a universal mortal resurrection. We asked if there is no judgment of decision before the resurrection, how is it that the righteous "dead are raised incorruptible?" as Paul affirms they are; and the wicked dead (if raised at all) are raised mortal? as they must be, if they are to die again. How can these things be, if there has not been a judicial judgment before the resurrection? We asked, what position does the author of Adventism occupy here? Will Br. HIMES tell us plainly?

We desired to see an open declaration on this matter, and asked a frank declaration on the following questions:

1. Is the resurrection of the whole Adamic family to take place at one and the same time?
2. If so, are they all raised mortal?
3. If all are not raised mortal, how are we to account for it without admitting a judicial judgment before the resurrection? or,
4. Why is one class raised mortal and the other immortal?

The questions have to do only with the statements in "Part I" of Adventism; and we did hope Br. HIMES would give a frank answer to them, that we and all others might understand the exact position of the work called "Adventism," which he and others are so diligently scattering. We said, "we earnestly desire to harmonize with him and all others so far as our convictions of truth will allow."

We have now waited four weeks for a response to our questions, which we put in good faith, and with no desire to do ought that would needlessly obstruct the honest labors of another, though he might differ from us. As yet our questions have received no notice; or if they have, we have failed to see it. Instead of that, the Voice of the West comes to us from week to week with special commendations of "Part I," in particular; the part to which our questions refer. Are we to understand this as a refusal to respond to our inquiries? We hope better things of him who so nobly and conclusively responded to the Advent Herald on the other matters.

If we are not to have a response, then we are left to draw our own conclusions from "Adventism, Part I," as to the position of those who circulate that work. We regret to say it appears they hold to an universal mortal resurrection of all dead ones, saints and sinners. We shall be glad to be relieved from this impression; but we can come to no other conclusion from "Adventism." Shall we rest under this impression? "Silence gives consent." Against such doctrine we are compelled to enter our protest, and warn all our readers against the doctrine that saints are raised from the dead mortal, when Paul saith explicitly "the dead are raised incorruptible," 1 Cor. xv., and Jesus saith, "they are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Luke xx.

If the doctrine of the mortal resurrection of the saints is not a real heresy, we shall look in vain to find a heresy in Christendom. No more palpable denial of the general tenor of the Scriptures and the positive testimony of Christ and his apostles can be found than the doctrine of the mortal resurrection of the saints "at the last day."

We forbear further remarks, still having a desire, if such is the teaching of Adventism, that the author and its publishers may see fit to expunge such a doctrine from the work, and remove all ground of even a suspicion that they intend to teach such a doctrine. We wait to see what is the reply.

"SIN AN INFINITE EVIL."

IT is one of the pleas for eternal torments that "Sin is an infinite evil, because committed against an infinite God." A more baseless assumption need not be looked after, as we showed in our "SIX SERMONS" twenty-six years ago; but we were gratified to see that the venerable ALBERT BARNES, of Philadelphia, in a series of letters in response to GARRET SMITH, speaks on that subject as follows:

I have myself never maintained or affirmed that sin is an infinite evil, and, therefore, deserves an infinite punishment; and I have never seen any force in the argument when it has been presented. I do not find that sin is ever spoken of in the Bible as an "infinite" evil, or that the doctrine of future punishment is ever represented in the Bible as founded on that idea. That it has been so represented by a certain class of theologians I do not deny; but you could not hold me to that view, as you seem to do, from anything that I have ever said or written. I confess to you that the phrase "sin is an infinite evil," conveys no idea whatever to my mind. Any argument, therefore, based on that idea, in favor of the eternal punishment of the wicked, makes not the slightest impression on me.—Am. Presbyterian, July 23.

A WORD TO OUR BRETHREN.

I WAS not of those who deemed it necessary to make any allusion to the Bible Repository in the columns of our paper, but as some others have judged differently, and one sentence in an editorial of that magazine being calculated to mislead, I deem it proper to define the position of the Officers of the Life and Advent Union in relation to that enterprise, if by the expression "other leading brethren," they, or so many of them as are in New York City, are meant. The sentence alluded to runs thus,

> "Early in May, we visited New York, and, in conferences with Br. Storrs and other leading brethren, explained somewhat fully the reasons which, in our judgment, demanded that we should go forward with our undertaking, and in this way endeavor to serve the cause of truth."

Of course, no one will, for a moment, entertain the thought that the editor of the B. R. would have so written had it occurred to him that any reader of the HERALD OF LIFE would infer from it that "Br. Storrs and other leading brethren" did not disfavor the project; but when I read the article the inference seemed to me a natural one; and I have subsequently learned that it has been drawn by some who knew nothing of the circumstances. The avowed object of R. W.'s visit to New York it is not now necessary to mention, but those with whom he conferred were unreserved in the expression of their disapprobation of his proposed course respecting the publication of a monthly magazine. We were unable, too, to obtain a satisfactory explanation as to how he expected to more effectually "serve the cause of truth" through the medium of a monthly periodical than through a weekly paper, to the columns of which he had almost unrestricted access. The editor of the Bible Repository will at once see that while no reason is assigned for his allusion to conferences with New York brethren, the fact of their disfavor is with-held; the idea most likely to suggest itself to the mind of the reader is that those with whom he conferred encouraged the undertaking. This they could not do, and their desire that no friends of our paper should receive wrong impressions in the matter is my only motive for this explanation. L. C. T.

THE LIFE AND ADVENT MISSION TENT.

BRN. S. W. BISHOP and E. WOLCOTT are prospering gloriously in their work with this tent; but the burden, pecuniarily, of that work has hitherto been borne almost entirely by Br. Wolcott alone. This ought not to be. Let all, who can, lend a helping hand. Mighty results are likely to result from this labor, if these brethren are sustained. They must be. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but the truth of God, and mighty, through Him, in overthrowing the strongholds of superstition and false doctrine, and giving the people to see light in God's light; and thus to disarm them of their infidelity and lead them to Christ, the LIFE-GIVER. Here is an opportunity to help a noble cause and noble, self-denying brethren in their work for God and truth. Let them be helped on after a godly manner.

THE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

IN ordering these works, you need not suppose you must take an equal number of each. State which you want; that is, what proporton of each; and if you do not wish any of some of them, say so; and we will send you the amount of your money in either one of them, if that is your wish. Let the work go on: it is doing wonders already.

One person, to whom a friend requested us to send a set, sent us back his own name and that of another as subscribers for the HERALD OF LIFE, with the advance pay for a year. Keep the "Documents" a-flying, and we shall reap a rich harvest for the truth from their circulation. Never could so much be accomplished, with so little expense, in spreading the Life views. We are now sending out the fourth thousand of "LIFE FROM THE DEAD: or, The righteous only will Live again."

LIFE AND ADVENT TENT MEETING.

THE tent was pitched at Morristown, N. J., early last week, and will hold over till Wednesday of this week, when it well be taken to Rahway. Morristown is a large and thriving place, containing much aristocratic feeling; you can hardly imagine the contempt with which they looked upon us, and upon our work. They had not the least doubt but that the tent would be mobbed. It was given out that we were Mormons; others thought that we were Catholics in disguise, and inquired if we believed in Limbo; we told them that we believed that Limbo was a humbug; and thus, by the help of God, we overcame very much prejudice. The attendance was small through the week, but on the Lord's day the people turned out en masse. In the morning there were from two three hundred; in the afternoon there must have been in and around the tent, at least, a thousand people, and in the evening there were more. No disturbance occurred, but excellent order prevailed, and the best of attention.

We spoke in the morning on the Saint's Inheritance, contrasting the popular view with the Bible hope. We proved that the saints were not to go to glory one by one, but that we shall all arise in the morning; that the only way to obtain an inheritance with the Lord is, by a resurrection from the dead, if dead; or a change from mortality to immortality, if living; and together cauhgt away to meet the Lord and so ever be with Him.

Br. Wolcott spoke in the afternoon on the subject of Hell. He proved that all men go to hell, and that only those in Christ ever get out of it. He referred to Job, who, in his affliction, prayed God to hide him in (Sheol), hell, and not forget to call him out of it again. David said that God would redeem his soul from hell for he would take him out of it; that Christ's soul had a resurrection from hell, and that he brought the keys up with him; that the gates of hell, or the grave, shall not prevail against his church, for the very good reason that Christ would unlock it and let his friends out, but that he would shut it in the face of the wicked.

At the close of the discourse, a gentleman arose who proved to be, not only a Methodist minister, but a justice of the peace. We noticed a movement on the part of the audience, but did not know whom we had to deal with. We were told afterward that it was whispered through the congregation that "now they'll catch it, Esq. Bird is up, he will give it to them." The Esq. wanted to know how about the rich man in hell. It was acknowledged in the end, by all, that the Bird was pretty well picked. He did us a world of good. When the clergy oppose us, the people can see how weak they are.

In the evening Br. Bishop gave us one of his masterly arguments on the judgment; it was a telling discourse; he held that vast audience spell-bound; he urged immediate preparation for the coming kingdom. Altogether, it has been one of the best tent meetings we have ever held. The brethren have been strengthened mightily; they feel that victory has rested on the Lord's side; they did not fail to give him the glory that a very great load of prejudice has been removed; that the stronghold was taken in the name of God. "We are well able to go up and possess the land." "Who is on the Lord's side."

W. H. HANFORD.

NEW YORK, July 27, 1868.

"CHEEK."—This slang term is not to be found in the dictionary, but an illustration may give a better idea of it than a definition: A soldier, being on picket reserve, went to a farm house, as he said, to borrow a frying-pan, but for what his comrades could not imagine, as they had nothing to fry. Preferring his request to the good dame who answered his knock at the door, the pan was duly transferred to him. He took it, looked in it, turned it over and looked at the bottom, and then turned it over again and looked into it very hard, as if not certain it was clean. "Well, sir," said the lady, "can I do anything more for you?" "Could—could—could you lend me a piece of meat to fry in it, ma'am?" and he laughed in spite of himself. He got it.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM REV. AMBROSE RONTHALER.

BETHLEHEM, PA., July 20, 1868.

MY VERY DEAR BR. STORRS: Often have I thought of you: and especially during the last few weeks. In my Alice's album is the likeness of my dear Storrs. That album now belongs to her parents. She is on no more with us. She fell asleep in Jesus the 22d of June. The last sermon she heard was on the words: "I know that my Redeemer liveth." I preached. This was on the evening of the 7th of June. On the following day she began to sicken: grew worse from day to day; and at last we called in medical aid. All that a kind, faithful and experienced physician could do, was done. But the Great Physician cured and healed her completely. He bid her fall asleep at a quarter after 12, noon, on Monday, the 2d ult. Her short pilgrimage lasted 19 years, 1 m. and 22 days.

Br. Storrs, there was weeping and there was joy; yes, there was thanksgiving in that chamber of death.

Alice was a Christian. She was a searcher after truth. One of her sweet characteristics was this, she sought not her own. She will live again. Yes, we know that she will rise again; and then, Hallelujah! there will be no more sickness; no more typhoid; no more death.

The clergyman officiating at her funeral, knowing the sentiments, or rather the faith of the family, spoke most beautifully on the words of Jesus, "I am the Resurrection and the Life."

It was Alice's intention to answer, being the midsummer vacation, a number of letters: among the rest, your daughter Hattie's. That kind letter therefore remains unanswered.

I hope that your dear family is well. Don't exert yourself too much during this very hot weather. Often have I thought of writing something for the HERALD OF LIFE: partly, in order to ease your work a little, and partly, to impart some truth; or, rather, by a few remarks to draw out truth from others. Among the rest I have been thinking a great deal during the last few months on the parable of the Sower and the Seed. How much is contained in the words of our Saviour, "Know ye not this parable? And how then will ye know all parables?" This parable of the kingdom is the foundation of all the rest. In comparing the parallel places in Matthew, Mark and Luke, we find not only that the seed is sown, but the individual himself. I spoke with several on this subject. But they maintained that it was merely the seed. At last, I found the following in Large's Commentary. Meyer, a celebrated commentator, says, on Matthew xiii., 19, "This is he which received seed by the wayside: or, rather, this is he who was sown by the wayside." A change in the figure quite common among the Orientals. It should have been: This is he in whose case the seed was sown by the wayside." Large then continues—"But there is a deeper meaning in this change. The loss of the seed becomes in reality the loss of one's own life, just as the seed sown on good soil, so to speak, becomes identified with our personality. The change in the figure obviates the possible mistake, as if Satan could catch away and keep the word of God itself."

In Matthew xiii., 20, 22, and 23—This is he which received seed, in the Greek reads, [We omit the Greek letters.—ED.] he that is sown. In Mark iv. we read, in the English translation, "And these are they likewise which are sown on stony ground—"And these are they which are sown among thorns"—"And these are they which are sown on good ground." Luke says—"They on the rock"—"that which fell among thorns are they"—"But that on good ground are they." Br. Storrs, Does not this parable teach us the non-resurrection of the wicked, and the resurrection of those who believe? You may, perhaps, long before this, have held the same view. Possibly, however, you may not agree with me. Not now, for it would be cruel to ask you to give your views in this hot season, but at some future time, write, if you please, a few words on the subject in the HERALD OF LIFE. My dear wife, Albert and Emma, send much love to you and to your dear family. Do not forget us—you know when and where I mean. Your brother who loves you.

AMBR. RONTHALER.

P. S. Inclosed you will find ten dollars. D. V., in a few weeks I shall send more. We cannot do without the HERALD OF LIFE. Farewell. A. R.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—Deeply do we and our family sympathize with our dear brother and his family in this hour of their sorrow and joy. We know by experience both the sorrow and the joy. Death is no friend; it is "the last enemy;" it rends our hearts while it tears away our loved ones, but O, to have the presence of the "blessed Jesus" then and there, to assure them and us of "eternal life" when this "enemy" shall "be destroyed;" what a holy, heavenly triumph is that! Who call tell the unutterable consolation to "weeping" friends at such a death scene! Our family has experienced it in the death-scene of our only son, and now realize the consolation of which our dear Br. Ronthaler and family are made the partakers. Yes, brother, we weep with you in your sorrow, and rejoice with you in the great consolation. True, we have none of us seen each others faces in the flesh: but we are "present in spirit" with each other, and magnify our covenant GOD, LIFE-GIVER and Redeemer together. My wife and only surviving child—"Hattie," to whom you refer, join in our sympathies with you and yours: and may we all meet in the day of the Lord Jesus' glorious entrance into his kingdom, and reign on the throne of his father David, now nigh at hand. Then may we all join in that triumphant song, "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

We thank Br. Ronthaler for his contribution on the parable of the "Sower and the Seed." We had not looked at the subject in that light before. It is, however, an interesting view, and may be the true one. Please continue your contributions to our columns: all our subscribers will be highly pleased to see a regular correspondence from you. And if your time will allow, we would be much pleased to have you translate some of our tracts into German, or write something original for our numerous German population on the Life theme. We think funds can be raised to print such a production. If you translate you can select such as you judge would be best adapted to the German mind. Shall we not hear from you in this direction?

FROM WM. H. DOUGHTY.

LYNN, MASS, JULY 19, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Inclosed is one dollar. Send me the amount in the "Three Campaign Documents" to put into the hands of those who are more interested in the truth than they are in the traditions of the elders. Now is the time to scatter the truth among those who have ears to hear.

The Life theme is gaining in this place. There are several who have embraced it within a few months, and are rejoicing in it. Others are partially or almost persuaded to believe this glorious and God-honoring truth. One among the few that have come out is a member of the M. E. church, who could no longer be held by the cords of immortal soulism, and can now see the propriety of the atonement, but with his former views made the atonement of none effect; for if the righteous go to heaven at death, there was no necessity of Christ's dying. But, on the other hand, if death has been entailed on Adam and his posterity on account of their sins, it follows that there must be one who knew no sin in order to meet the demand of the law, which was the life of the transgressor. If such a scheme had not been devised, Adam and all his posterity, according to justice, would have had to remain under the dominion of death forever. But such a scheme has been devised through Christ the LIFE-GIVER, which the apostle clearly proves in 1 Cor. xv., 1–4. He says, "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand, by which also ye are saved if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain: for, I delivered unto you, first of all, that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; that he" [went to heaven? No, that isn't it]; "that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures."

Thus we have the testimony of the apostle that Christ died for our sins. So we, believers, are free from the condemnation of the law. "That he rose again." And why did he rise again? for the obvious reason that he was not a sinner or transgressor. The law which was out against Adam and his posterity, for their sins had no demand on Christ, for he had not broken the law, and consequently had a right to live again, for he was not holden of death. Acts ii., 24. Then why did he die? says one. He died for our sins, saith the apostle; and as he died for our sins we are free from the law and stand in the same position that he stood, and on the same principle have the same right to live again from the dead, therefore death cannot hold those have had their sins forgiven. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit; for the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii., 1, 2, 11. Those who are destitute of this Spirit are destitute of the quickening principle by which the dead are to be raised up at the last day; for "it is the Spirit that quickeneth," or giveth life. John vi., 63. (Am. Bible Union.) "The flesh profiteth nothing." John vi. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh;" natural or animal; "that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit," or spiritual. John iii., 6. So in order to be raised from the dead we must have the Spirit that raised Jesus. The wise man positively declares that men naturally are beasts. Eccl. iii., 18; and what proof have we that beasts will have a resurrection from the dead? and much more, to die again? Peter speaks of a class on this wise: "But these as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not, and shall utterly perish in their own corruption." 2 Pet. ii., 12.

Man may perish in a sense, and be made alive again, but how men who are like brute beasts, that utterly perish in their own corruption, can be restored or resuscitated to life, we are unable to tell. We think such a thing impossible. This is the condition of those who are out of Christ. But those who believe in Christ are not beasts, because they partake of the nature of Christ, which is a divine nature, and that is the reason why they are to be made alive again. But "man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish. Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning, and their beauty shall consume in their grave, from their dwelling (or, the grave being a habitation to every one of them) margin; Psa. xlix., 12–14. But the Psalmist says, "God will raise me from the dead," or "redeem my soul from the power of the grave;" and the reason he assigns, "for he will receive me." Psa. xlix., 15. So while the Scriptures teach that one class is to be raised from the dead, i. e., those who believe in Christ, the LIFE-GIVER, it also teaches that the opposite are to remain in death forever.

FROM CHARLES C. BARKER.

WATERBURY, CONN., July 20, 1868.

DEAR BR. STORRS: I enclose a dollar which a sister handed me, wishing to subscribe for the HERALD.

The truth has gained several converts here, though much opposition is manifested by quite a share of the Adventists. Unable to answer the testimony adduced, declaring the "Righteous only will live again," intoleration is too plainly shown, accompanied by much talk about "works" and "charity;" rather more elastic in its nature, doubtless, than the New Testament kind which "rejoices in the truth."

"Away with that charity that soothes a lie,
And thrusts the truth in scorn and anger by."

Professed believers are getting decidedly dyspeptic, of late; but little of the "Bread of Life" seems craved; and when partaken must be served up after the Grahamite order, and fed with a small sized spoon. When digestion becomes impaired, the entire system suffers, and a depraved condition of the stomach is induced, we all know, oftener by a lack of good solid, nutritious food, than from any other cause.

Our Father has bountifully supplied us with food; and the heavenly store is accessible and free to all; and it is blessed to see a few at least, of stalwart ones walking up with a real good healthy hunger, intent upon their daily rations.

It looks good to see the old banner of truth nailed to the mast; and I don't feel like going beyond the Master's orders in point of quarters.

May God bless you, Br. Storrs, the day of final victory is nearly come. With much love.

FROM ELD. J. LEWIS.

BECKS CREEK, ILL., July 17, 1868.

BR. STORRS: We are still battling for the truth. The water is becoming more and more troubled. False teachers begin to see their tower is like to fall, and are making one last and mighty effort. But fall it must, and fall it will; for truth is mighty. The "Campaign," with the battering ram, is shattering their mud daubed walls. They dare not come out in open conflict and fight manfully; but they shrink behind the curtain and load with scurrility; but when they fire they harm themselves more than us. In proof of this, I send you a slip from the Shelby Co. paper, hoping you will make some remarks for the benefit of the friends in Shelby and elsewhere. Glory to God, the leaven is working in good earnest in Shelbyville. Our good Dr. P. is not idle. May he continue to do good and the Lord will bless.

"GOOD COMMON NONSENSE."

MR. EDITOR: I was one of the audience at the M. E. Church last Sunday evening, and during the delivery of an excellent discourse by the pastor, was used the expression, in substance, that the doctrine of the "Annihilation of the Wicked" after death "is not good common nonsense."

Now we would not complain if the speaker had brought a few facts to the support of his assertion; but excuse, me, please, the time has arrived in which a mere statement of doctrine unsupported by evidence of any kind, doesn't go far with thinking people. The preacher's ironical allusion to the "Rich Man and Lazarus" as an extinguisher to the "Annihilation" theory, was rather unfortunate, I think, from the fact that the scene of the "Rich man and Lazarus" is fixed before the resurrection and judgment, and if it teaches anything in relation to the state of the dead, it is that the wicked are sent to hell before the judgment, which is contrary to justice and the whole tenor of the Scriptures.

In the spirit of a sincere inquirer after the truth, we would propose a few questions which we should be glad to have answered through the medium of your paper, the more especially as these are questions which are very rarely, if ever touched upon in the pulpit.

Was the death pronounced against Adam for eating the forbidden fruit, death eternal?

What is eternal death? Is it non-existence, or eternal life in misery?

The Scriptures say that Jesus brought "life and immortality to light." Are we to understand that if Jesus had not come there would have been no immortality?

Does the soul of man have a beginning? And it so, why should it be considered an incredible thing for it to come to an end also?

Answers to the above questions will be highly appreciated by numerous persons besides the writer.

OBITUARY.

FELL ASLEEP, July 25, 1868, FREDDIE, infant twin son of JOSEPH T. and JANE A. M. HOWLAND, of Williamsburg, L. I., aged 17 months, of cholera infantum. Funeral discourse at the house, by Eld. Wm. Roworth, from Jer. xxxi., 15–17.

"Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

R. E. LADD, Springfield, Mass., writes: My whole soul and heart is with you in your blessed work; and my prayer never ceases for your prosperity and welfare, and for the success of the cause of truth in which you are battling. I want some of those "Campaign Documents," but cannot well spare funds now for them. If you will trust me with $10 worth I will pay for them as soon as I can spare the funds. I am passing through severe affliction, having been nearly deprived of my precious wife. But she is now so far recovered that we think she will soon be able to be up in an invalid chair. She was dreadfully hurt, and it is of the Lord's mercies that she was not killed. Give my love to the dear household of faith. I love them better and better as the truth shines more and more. I shall never slack my effort to sustain the HERALD OF LIFE, if forty other papers should start up.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We have sent you by express 100 each of the "Three Campaign Documents." Let them be scattered; they are doing excellent service.

The following is Br. Ladd's statement in regard to the case of his wife referred to in the foregoing letter:

On the 4th of July my wife and myself had a narrow escape from instant death. I escaped with a few bruises, but my companion was badly injured, and is still lying very low from the hurt. We were riding in a carriage, when our horse took sudden fright at an uplifted umbrella, and jumping one side threw me headlong over the wheel, carrying the reins with me, and thus uncontrolled, dashed on with wife in the carriage. She was thrown with great violence upon the sidewalk, and partly against a tree. A severe wound was made in her forehead, baring the skull for three or four inches, and bruising the left eye. Her left arm was broken near the shoulder joint, and her left knee smashed into almost a shapeless mass, breaking all the ligaments that hold the joint together. When taken up she was supposed to be dying, and her wounds were so severe that none who saw her supposed she could survive them.

But what is too hard for our merciful High Priest? He has been very gracious to her and to me also, and to the church of God. Her work is not yet done, and until then (as all of God's servants are), "she is immortal."

As soon as I recovered from the shock, and found how badly wife was injured, I made her case known to some of the Lord's praying ones; and see the result. In four days her flesh wounds were entirely healed, showing only scars; and notwithstanding the extremely hot weather, her broken and bruised limbs have steadily and rapidly improved, so that we now feel sure she is out of any immediate danger.

In view of this wonderful deliverance, I wish to express praise and devout thanksgiving to Him who has promised to make all thy bed in thy sickness (Ps. xli., 3); and who has faithfully fulfilled the promise in our case.

It is feared that when she is restored, she will not have the use of her limb, but that it will be stiffened in the joint. But I believe that this also comes within the limits of our Physician's skill. I desire the praying ones to remember her in this matter. It is certain that the "healing balm" has been applied thus far most successfully, to the surprise of our skilful surgeon and all others; and I believe He will finish the work to his own glory. Already it is suggested by "unbelievers," that "she was not so badly hurt as was supposed;" but the truth is that "she had the most skilful Phyician in the world." Let him have the praise. R. E. SARAH G. WADE writes from Missouri: I was once a reader of the HERALD OF LIFE, but for the last twenty-one months I have been wandering over the States of Kansas and Missouri. In all this time I have not met with a family that knew anything of the HERALD OF LIFE. The immortality of the soul is firmly believed here. I have not met with a brother or sister of our views in the West. Indeed, I sometimes feel lonely; yes, I feel like a stranger in a strange land. But expecting now to be settled for a while in Kansas, I send $1 for the HERALD. I must have it for a few months. I cannot do without it. After so long an absence I think I can appreciate its weekly visits, as I have found none of like faith to associate with, I feel hungry for the privilege of hearing from the brethren and sisters abroad. Yours in hope.

REMARK BY THE EDITOR.—We have sent the paper, as you request, and also a few of our "CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS." If you can use more to advantage we will send them. Let us hear from you again. Scatter light and you will soon see light around you. The seed must be sown in Kansas and Missouri. We have a few subscribers in both States.

M. C. CONVERSE, Wolf Creek, Iowa, writes to have "Campaign Documents" sent to several persons, and various works to herself and says: I wish to read them myself and have some to lend, for people here are very ignorant concerning the Bible doctrine of the inheritance of the saints, thinking they go to heaven at death. I am lending my pamphlets to those who will read. We live a great ways from church, and I hear no good Advent preaching when I go; but I feel very thankful for the weekly visits of the HERALD OF LIFE. I am trying so to live that my inheritance will be sure, that I may receive it at the coming of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. O that many others may be led to turn from error of their ways to serve the living and true God. May your health and strength be spared to labor for the truth until the setting up of that glorious kingdom which shall never end, is the prayer of your unworthy sister.

LAFAYETTE NORRIS, Campton, Iowa, writes: I am working very hard this summer, and do not feel much like writing. But my desire is for a closer union with God; for I feel, if my righteousness does not exceed that of most professors of religion my case is hopeless. I see many church members here who show quite a revengeful spirit. I believe the endless torment doctrine tends to make them so. They think it impossible for such and such men to get their just deserts here; and as for death, "that is no punishment at all." They feel that if such and such persons, whom they hate, are not tormented hereafter, they will not be satisfied. I am a stranger to such feelings. Exclusion from a future life is sufficiently awful; and I could desire nothing worse for my most bitter enemy.

SISTER A. RIDER, Scotland, Conn., writes: I want to help on the good cause which seemingly is moving on more rapidly than ever before, and it is glorious news to me; for I fully believe there is No life out of Christ; for He says, He has no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but rather that he would turn and live. We live among those that are joined to their idols, and it seems as though it is of no use to try to enlighten them; but there are some that will hear, and to them I am willing to contribute the widow's mite to help on the good cause. May the Lord help you and all the rest to proclaim the glad news of the Gospel of the Son of God to a world lying in wickedness. Yours for the whole truth.

A. A. BABCOCK, Albion, Mich., writes: Please send me some of the tracts on the JUDGMENT. I think it is the best thing I ever read except the Bible; and but a few of those who say they know the truth understand it. I wish to scatter them around me. If I have have good success, I shall want more. I think the idea that man has an immortal soul is the spike-root of error, more pernicious in theology than the upas is deadly in nature; and all that cling to its branches and nourish the root will share the same fate, when Christ comes, as Adam did after eating of the forbidden tree. I stand alone on the Life views in these parts: yet I am not alone, for I have a host of witnesses from Genesis to "Amen" in Revelation. Our everyday experience and observation teaches that we are mortal. I am truly and fully established on all these points.

THE CURE OF AN EVIL TONGUE.—"The cure of an evil tongue," says Leighton, "must be done at the heart. The weights and wheels are there, and the clock strikes according to their motion. A guileful heart makes a guileful tongue and lips. It is the workhouse where is the forge of deceits and slanders; and the tongue is only the outer shop where they are vended, and the door of it. Such ware as is made within, such, and no other, can come out."

TRAVELLING IN THE LAST CENTURY.—The Newcastle Courant, of October 11, 1712, advertises a line of stages "that performs the whole journey from London to Edinburgh in thirteen days—if God permit—each passenger paying four pounds ten shillings." Now there are two trains a day between the cities, and the distance, 377 miles, is run in eight hours; fare, three pounds five shillings.

Children's Department.

Naaman's Little Maid.

CHILDREN MAY BECOME EMINENTLY USEFUL.

"The Syrians had gone out by companies, and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maid; and she waited on Naaman's wife. And she said unto her mistress, would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy."—2 Kings v., 23.

Come round me, my children, and list while I tell
What in Syria once a great captain befell.
He was valiant, but sav'd by a tender child's aid,
A man of great might, by a weak, captive maid.

The man was Naaman, a chief in command,
The sword of the king and the shield of the land.
His country so oft he had freed from the foe.
He was honor'd and lov'd by the high and the low.

The maid was a child, from her dear native land
Carried far, far away by a Syrian band;
To the wife of the captain, so gallant and brave,
The little maid now is a captive and slave.

Yet the child still remembered the God of her youth;
She talked of his glory, his love and his truth:
She told what the priests of Jehovah had taught,
The power of true faith, and the wonders it wrought.

The chief so renown'd for his conquests abroad,
At home found his life but a wearisome load;
A leper! a leper!—that one heavy blow
All wealth, and distinction, and glory laid low!

Then the young maid of Israel came forward and said
"I know of a man who my master could aid;
Would God that my lord would but go to the same!
He lives in Samaria—Elisha his name.

"Faith, holiness, prayer, are the good man's sole arts;
Yet he cures the diseas'd, and he sees into hearts.*
'Tis Jehovah's great prophet—would God that my lord
Would but go to his door, and be heal'd by a word!"

Thus did the young maid in her exile proclaim
Elisha's high honor, Jehovah's great name.
Though so young and a servant, she sought to do good;
She was true to her master and true to her God.

Nor did the great chieftain despise her request,
In his chariot he hastes to the country so blest:
At the prophet's high word in the Jordan he laves,
And fresh as a child he came forth from the waves.

Not only the flesh did that washing redeem,
He left his idolatry, too, in the stream:
He returned to the prophet with praise on his tongue,
And God—the true God, Israel's God, was his song.

Such good was accomplished by one little maid;
Such honor the Lord on a young captive laid!
Come, rouse thee, my child! Is there nothing that you
For our God or the welfare of others can do?

Light Shining in Darkness.

We take following from the American Presbyterian. It is a letter from R. G. Wilder, and is very interesting. It is a matter of joy that God can and does work where all seems darkness. We trust that a more perfect light will ere long shine in heathen lands.

THE HINDOO RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT.

Kolapoor, April 22, 1868.

Dear Br. Mears: The mental, moral, spiritual conflict in India is daily gathering in force and momentum. The undercurrent of thought and feeling among the more intelligent young Hindoos, is such in many cases as quite to neutralize or even set back the surface flow of superstition and idolatry.

I recently sent you a brief account of the Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen's visit to Bombay. He gave several addresses, one on "Prayer," at the commencement of which he uttered the following prayer, viz:

"We thank Thee, O, beneficent God, that Thou has gathered us in this sacred place of worship to glorify and adore thee. Permit us to approach Thee, and prepare our hearts that we may feel Thy sacred presence. O Thou light of life! Thou art everywhere! Thou art before our eyes in all the objects we behold; Thou dwellest in the inmost recesses of the heart; everywhere is Thy benignant face, and Thy loving arms are around us all. Help us so to concentrate our souls in thy all-pervading spirit, so to feel Thy holiness and purity, that each corrupt desire, each worldly craving may perish, and all the sentiments and feelings of the soul may be brought at Thy feet. May not the pleasures which we now enjoy in Thy company be transitory; may they sweeten our whole lives and continue to endear Thee to us everlastingly. Vouchsafe to keep us always under the shadow of Thy protection, and guide our steps in the thorny paths of the world. Amid the pains and sufferings of the world be Thou our joy; amid its darkness be Thou our light; amid its temptations and persecutions be Thou our shield and armor. Promote among us good-will and affection; sanctify our dealings with each other; and bind us into a holy brotherhood. May we aid each other in that which is good in thy sight. Teach us, O Lord, to spend all our days in Thy service and aspire to be partakers of the rich blessings, the lasting joys of the next world. Be with us always, Thou affectionate Father, and enable us to grow steadily in Thy love. Bring all men in this Presidency under the protection of true faith. May Thy dear name be chanted by every lip, and mayest thou find a temple in every breast. Do Thou, O Lord, condescend to bless this prayer association and the congregation who are here present to-night. And unto Thee we all ascribe everlasting glory and praise."

There is no Christ in this prayer, nor in the Baboo's preaching, else we might at once give him the right hand of Christian fellowship, for whoever grasped more clearly or firmly "the first of all the commandments" (Mark xii., 29); or who better develops the elements of prayer, or an experience of its benefits in stricter accord with that of the humble Christian believer? In his discourse the Baboo says:

"Worship comprises three elements—adoration, gratitude and prayer. You will admit that so far as God is great we must acknowledge his greatness and adore his supremacy, and that so far as he is kind and merciful, and plenteous in loving kindness, so far must we acknowledge all the benefits, advantages, and pleasures he has conferred upon us, and does daily confer upon us, with most fervent and sincere gratitude. But the subject upon which I am about to enter is one which, in many a country and among many a community, has given rise to discussions, to doubts, and to objections. To my mind, superior to these two elements of worship is the third element, namely, prayer. The first two are duties—adoration and gratitude—but the last is a necessity. Without it I cannot live—without it I cannot grow in spiritual life—without it all my hopes of spiritual progress would be in moment blasted; without it life and death would be to me identical. It is my duty to magnify God, and my duty to offer my gratitude to God, but it is indispensably necessary that I should prostrate and humble myself down to the dust, and beg of my God that he should give me that aid which is essential to success in all spiritual progress—which is essential to the attainment of salvation here and hereafter. It is this great point which it is my desire to impress upon you this evening.

"The experience of all mankind ever since man was born down to the present time, has testified that mortal power is not enough to bring down evil, to guard the soul against sin. I feel this daily; in my hourly struggles with the temptations of the world I feel this. It is not a matter which can be argued out by an appeal to theological arguments or to the deductions of logic. No: but I appeal to your experiences, and ask you, whether you have spiritual nerve enough within you to guard yourselves against every sin—not one sin or two sins, not five varieties of sin—but every manner and kind of sin? I say there is not a man of flesh and blood that breathes on our earth who can triumphantly say, 'Here am I; come all manner of sin, and my heart is proof against all attacks.' The fact is, God's aid is absolutely necessary; the eyes must be lifted up in order that we may invoke the blessings of that divine Father without whose aid man cannot advance one single step in the path of religious progress.

"Ask the rude rustic why he prays every day of his life. He would feel astonished and would stand and look, not knowing what to say in reply. All that such an untutored man would say in reply would be this—I know not why I pray, but this I can say, I cannot do without prayer; every day there are so many sins coming and trying to devour me that only for the purpose of self-defence I must humble myself down and offer my prayer to God. If the rude rustic has no other explanation of prayer neither has the wise man. I can give no better explanation of the fact why I have learned to pray and why I am in the habit of offering prayer daily to my God. If I could do without it, this very moment I would leave off the habit. If I had never felt the necessity I never would have ventured upon the work; I would have considered it silly and unreasonable—but I have found it necessary. When God first allowed the truth of religion to dawn on my heart—(allow me to mention one incident from the earliest chapter of my religious life)—when I felt the very first movement that took place in my heart, then I felt the need of prayer. Day after day my heart was full of darkness and I felt the influence of all the passions of the flesh, the allurements of the world, the power of evil, the power of fame, and of lust, and of ambition, and of covetousness, and of worldliness, and of scepticism. Against these multitudinous elements I, a poor man, could not possibly stand. Feeble in body, feebler in soul, feebler still in spirit, how could I stand in the face of enemies so awful, so formidable and so numerous as these, enemies outside and enemies within, contending for mastery over my soul day and night, every hour of the day, every minute of the hour, every second of the minute? What could I do in circumstances such as these? I waited not for the revelation of any particular book, or the teachings of any particular prophet. I consulted my soul, and my soul stated, in language exceedingly distinct and articulate, as it were, 'Pray, and pray, if you want salvation,' and then my proud and arrogant mind was humbled down, and with it was humbled down my head; my heart, which had been eaten up with conceit and arrogance and self-sufficiency, found that there was nothing in it which could withstand the awful shocks of these temptations to me and therefore as my only resource—all sides of the horizon being dark—I felt that in one direction only could I advance, and that was prayer. I felt this word 'prayer' was written in golden letters on the gate of heaven; on the gate on the kingdom of God, as if to show that none entereth God's kingdom except he pass through the gate of prayer; none conquereth sin or temptation unless he humbly, earnestly and fervently pray. Then I prayed. The first day I prayed—and I prayed in the morning and in the night, concealing the matter from the knowledge of my friends and relatives, for they were scoffers then as sometime before I probably was. I was sure that as soon as they came to know of it, they would ridicule me and scoff at me, and try to dissuade me if possible from such a noble and godly habit; but lest such circumstances should happen, I kept the matter a great secret. Day after day I kept on praying, and in the course, I assure you, of a few days, I found as it were a flood of light entering into the inmost recesses of my heart. I found all the darkness gradually being dissipated. Oh, it was cheering moonlight after a most impenetrable darkness and hideous sin. Then I felt cheered, and felt that I could eat and drink—and sometimes I could do so with pleasure. Then I found rest on my bed, and then I found comfort in the company of friends. For I can assure you there was a time in my life when I had almost given up mirth and good humor and cheerfulness, and amusement of all kinds. I felt that the world was dark because my heart was full of darkness, and had not my gracious and beneficent God revealed to me just at this time this great gospel of salvation, namely, prayer, I cannot think where I would have been to-night. You would not have seen me in Bombay addressing you from this pulpit. Oh, it is too much for my feebleness to bear; it overpowers me when it enters my mind—the thought where I would have been to-night if God had not taught me to pray! Prayer to me was the beginning of salvation. Then I inquired; then I investigated; then I tried to consult theological works, then all the other appliances and resources so very precious in the spiritual world were placed in fact at my disposal by the very same God who had led me thus far. I availed myself of these and went on growing in grace, in faith and in purity. And what I felt to be true in my case I say is true in the case of every man. I assure you it is prayer which ought to be considered as the beginning of religious life—the pillar of the kingdom of God—the gate to paradise; the key to God's moral government. Have that, and you have in your hand the means of unlocking the treasures of divine grace. Is it knowledge you want? Come and pray; is there a doubt you want to dispel? Come and pray; is it weakness you wish to remove? Come and pray; is it power you want? Come and pray; is it sin you wish to give up? Come and pray; is it holiness you want? Come and pray. One precept I have given to all inquirers after truth that have called on me, and whoso cometh to me in future for advice shall find the same answer, 'Pray without ceasing,' as was said in days gone by. I will not ask you to pray for riches, fame, or temporal benefits. I am opposed to that doctrine. I recommend prayer only for spiritual blessings, for spiritual knowledge, for spiritual power, and for spiritual holiness. For these three things pray, and if you don't believe me, laugh not at me, but go home and try the experiment, and if on the fourth day of your trial you find experiences give the lie to my statement, I shall retract everything I have said."

The speaker then went on to urge the necessity of sincerity, earnestness, perseverance and specialty in prayer, and in illustration of his subject quoted the king's soliloquy in scene iii., act 3, of Hamlet, pointing out that the man who prayed heaven for forgiveness without really wishing to be rid of the sin, which he asked to be forgiven might apply to his own case the passage:

'My words fly up, my thoughts remain below;
Words without thought never to heaven go.'

He enjoined prayer in solitude, prayer in family, and prayer in congregation as being obligatory on all men, and in the course of the remainder of his discourse he spoke as follows:

"Never shall India be regenerated without prayer. That is a thing which with my whole heart I believe; and if any of you individually were to come and ask me whether you could ever be saved with your knowledge, with your deeds, with your reform movements, I would say at once no such thing will save you. Therefore I would say to you individually and collectively, I would say to all Indian men, women and children, pray, pray, and pray from to-morrow. And what excuse can you have for not beginning to pray from to-morrow? Just after you rise from your bed, why should you not remember what a brother has told you this evening—told you for your own individual sake, for Bombay's sake; for India's sake, for your own family's sake; for your wife's sake; for your parents' sake; for your children's children's sake. Do begin to pray from to-morrow. Set aside your business for five minutes. If you can't pray without some direction, I ask you to use this little book for the present, prepared by an humble brother of yours. Use one of these prayers at a time, one every day. Parsees, Hindoos, all, I beg you to do this. I will go down on my knees, if necessary, only to beseech you to pray to God. I will stake my life, I will undergo any privation, only promise that you will pray from to-morrow."

The Baboo, after concluding his remarks, offered up another prayer, and the assembly then dispersed.

The fact that this Baboo draws crowds of high caste intelligent Hindoos to hear such discourses as this, wherever he goes, that he so thoroughly rouses them and leaves such a profound impression, is certainly one of the signs of the times, and makes an era in the history of the evangelization of this people. No one can be so blind as not to recognize this movement as a direct result of missionary effort and gospel preaching in this land, however much we may regret it is not of a purer type.

A marked evidence of the effect of the Baboo's preaching appears in the comments of the public press. Some of the Bombay daily papers have devoted several special leaders to the subject. The Bombay Gazette recognizes the Baboo as the "intellectual leader in the reform movement of India, and sees in the 'Brahmo Somaj' and its spreading influence, a rising power which is to destroy and supplant idolatry all over India, and become potent enough eventually to grasp the reins of politics, overthrow the paramount power, and banish the English from India." We are not prepared to endorse these vaticinations, but that the Baboo is at the head of a mighty power, and rapidly increasing, we fully believe, and it makes us long to see the church more in earnest to seize on this vantage ground, and cast into these seething, fermenting elements more of the salt of God's truth, and so bring the gospel to bear on the hearts of these intelligent Hindoos, that they shall not only believe in the one living and true God and feel their need of prayer to him, but learn to recognize "God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself," and feel their absolute need of his atoning sacrifice.

The True Church Older Than Sects.

A friend in Cincinnati sends us the following, taken from a paper in that city.

Bible Chapel.

In the discourse of Doctor Summerbell yesterday, in Bible Chapel, he took for his text the words of Christ, John v., 39. "Search the Scriptures," contrasted with the words of Doctor Milner, in his work entitled "The End of Controversy," viz: "The frequent mistakes of the Apostles." Mr. Summerbell disclaimed any sectarian motive prompting the discourse (or series of discourses), but gave a lengthy view of the platform of the Christian Church. He stated that the true church is older than sects, and that the true faith is older than creeds. That they had to exist before it could be divided into sects, and faith before it could be formed into creeds. That Christ's original Church therefore, existed prior to all sects, Roman or Protestant; and that in that original form it was simply without sects or creeds. That this church embraced all the good, all God's children, and that the Christian Church represented by Mr. Summerbell, therefore, was unsectarian and invited to its common fellowship the good of all sects and creeds. The good Catholic, Baptist, Methodist, or Quaker, all who will be received in heaven at last.

THE CHURCH AND THE SCRIPTURES

He said that Christ's Church yet comprises all the good, and is not truly represented by the great national churches, such as the English German, etc., nor yet by the stringent sects with the narrow platforms of human opinion, such as immersion, the decrees, etc., and much less by the overgrown semi-political power called the Roman Catholic Church. Such churches are purely earthly organizations. I review Doctor Milner, not however, because he speaks well of the Roman Church; I would that all he says of her were true; but because the medium through which he sees is so distorted, that he can see no good beyond the pale of the Roman Communion. The Bible is at fault. The Apostles made mistakes. Bible Christians are necessarily wrong. Only Catholic priests know the truth, and they are infallible. Doctor Summerbell's sermon was a defence of the Bible; and in proof that it was designed to be read by the people as a rule of faith and practice, in opposition to the representations of the Catholic work he was reviewing.

The True Gentleman.

A Christian is God Almighty's gentleman; a gentleman, in the vulgar, superficial way of understanding the word, is the devil's Christian. But to throw aside these polished and too current counterfeits for something valuable and sterling, the real gentleman should be gentle in everything, at least in everything that depends on himself; in carriage, temper, constructions, aims, desires. He ought, therefore, to be mild, calm, quiet, even, temperate; not hasty in judgment, not exorbitant in ambition, not overbearing, not proud, not rapacious, not oppressive; for these things are contrary to gentleness. Many such gentlemen, I trust, are to be found; and many more would be, were the true meaning of the name borne in mind, and duly inculcated. But, alas! we are misled by etymology; and because a gentleman was originally homo gentilis, people seem to fancy they shall lose caste unless they act as Gentiles.—Guesses at Truth.

Good Humor.

Keep in good humor. It is not great calamities that embitter existence; it is the petty vexations, the small jealousies, the little disappointments, the minor miseries that make the heart heavy and the temper sour. Don't let them. Anger is a pure waste of vitality; it is always foolish, and always disgraceful, except in some very rare cases, when it is kindled by seeing wrong done to another; and even that noble rage seldom mends the matter. Keep in good humor.

No man does his best except when he is cheerful. A light heart makes nimble hands, and keeps the mind free and alert. No misfortune is so great as one that sours the temper. Until cheerfulness is lost, nothing is lost. Keep in good humor.

"I Was Mistaken."

A lively writer has said, "'I was mistaken,' are the three hardest words to pronounce in the English language." Yet it seems but acknowledging that we are wiser than we were before to see our error, and humbler than we were before to own it. But so it is; and Goldsmith observes, that Frederick the Great did himself more honor by his letter to his Senate, stating that he had just lost a great battle by his own fault, than by all the victories he had won. Perhaps our greatest perfection here is not to escape imperfections, but to see and acknowledge and lament and correct them.

He Thought he Never Prayed.

The Rev. Mr. Kilpin passed a very profane man, and having omitted to rebuke him he awaited him in the morning at the same place.

When he approached, Mr. Kilpin said:

"Good morning, my friend; you are the person I have been waiting for."

"Oh! sir," said the man, "you are mistaken, I think."

"I do not know you, but I saw you last night when you were going home from work, and I have been waiting some time to see you."

"Sir, you are mistaken—it could not have been me. I never saw you in my life before, that I know of."

"Well, my friend," said Mr. Kilpin, "I heard you pray last night."

"Now I assure you that you are mistaken; I never prayed in all my life."

"Oh!" said Mr. Kilpin, "if God had answered your prayer last night, you had not been here this morning. I heard you pray that God would destroy your eyes and ruin your soul."

The man turned pale, and, trembling said:

"Do you call that prayer? I did, I did."

"Well, then, my errand this morning is to request you from this day to pray as fervently for your salvation as you have done for damnation; and may God in his mercy hear your prayer."

The man from that time became an attendant on Mr. Kilpin's ministry, and it ended in his conversion to God.—Selected.

God has written on the flower that sweetens the air—on the breeze that rocks the flowers upon the stem—upon the rain-drop that refreshes the spring of moss that lifts its head in the desert—upon its deep chambers, upon every pencilled sheet that sleeps in the cavern of the deep, no less than upon the mighty sun that warms and cheers millions of creatures which live in its light—upon all his works he has written, "None liveth for himself."

A hidden light soon becomes dim; and if it be entirely covered up, will expire for want of air. So it is with hidden religion. It must go out. There cannot be a Christian whose light in some aspects does not shine.

A Working Man's Contribution to the Bible Society.—The following letter of a working man who has given upwards £150 to the Bible Society is printed in the Wilts County Mirror of Wednesday: "Sir, I am glad you indeverd in your report to move the Pobelleck to so glores work and as you referd to me I wish to inform the pobelleik in your next report that the money was goat by hard work at the averig of 12s. per week how did I get the money I am at work wen my nebor are a sleep also I have thrawn all my idels a side no soking no drinking no pobolleck amusements however inosent knowing that Christ came not to ples him self in his steps am Comanded to tred also: time is adey to work for the night Cometh wen no man can work for thare is no work in the grave nor wisdom nor device men and bretherun work will it is Dey.—ser I remen yours trully. A mud wall Cuteger."

Men to Reason With.—If you can find a man with sense enough to ignore his own pride, to reason without getting into a passion; to contend for truth and principle, and not victory and party; who has patience enough to hear your side of the question as well as his own; and who has the charity to suppose that you are sincere as himself, and have as much right and title to your opinions as he has to his, I say when you find a man of this stamp, there may be some benefit in your exchanging ideas. But to expect an impartial hearing and decision from a person wedded to a party and his own pride, is to labor under a gigantic delusion! You will find that some men do not know the difference between ridicule and reason; between persons and principles. Always avoid disputing with such. You run too much risk. They cannot honor you and may disgrace you. These are little things that it may be well to heed in the art of making money.

Pretty Good.—Dr. H., who is pastor of an Orthodox church, had been for some time annoyed by the forwardness of a lay brother to "speak," whenever an opportunity was offered, to the frequent exclusion of those whose remarks had a greater tendency to edification. This had been carried so far that the pastor, whenever he stated that "an opportunity would now be offered for any brother to give an exhortation," had always a secret dread of the loquacious member.

On one special occasion the latter prefaced a long and tedious harangue with an account of a previous controversy he had been carrying on with the great adversary.

"My friends," said he, "the devil and I have been fighting for more than twenty minutes: he told me not to speak to-night, but I determined I would; he said some of the rest could speak better than I, but still I felt that I could not be silent; he even whispered that I spoke too often, and that nobody wanted to hear me; but I was not to be put down that way, and now I have gained the victory, I must tell you all that is in my heart."

Then followed the prosy, incoherent harangue aforesaid. As they were coming out of the session room, the good pastor inclined his head so that his mouth approached the ear of the militant member, and whispered,—

"Brother, I think the devil was right."

The Newspaper Appreciated.

Without my newspaper, life would narrow itself to the small limits of my personal experiences, and humanity be compressed into the ten or fifteen people I mix with. Now, I refuse to accept this. I have not a sixpence in consols, but I want to know how they stand. I was never—I never in all likelihood shall be—in Japan; but I have an intense curiosity to know what our troops did at Yokohama. I deplore the people who suffered by that railroad smash; and I sympathize with the newly-married couple so beautifully depicted in the Illustrated, as they drove off in a chaise and four, the bald old gent at the hall door waving them a last adieu. I like the letters of the correspondents, with their little grievances about unpunctual trains, or some unwarrantable omissions in the liturgy. I even like the people who chronicle the rain-fall, and record little facts about the mildness of the season. As for the advertisements, I regard them as the glass and mirror of the age. Show me but one page of the "Wants" of any country, and I engage myself to give a sketch of the current civilization of the period. What glimpses of rare interiors do we gain by these brief pargraphs! How full of suggestiveness and of story are they!—Blackwood's Magazine.

It is related of old Dr. Burnett, that he had a horse which he wished to sell, and when exhibiting it to an expected purchaser, mounted and rode the horse gallantly, but did not succeed in hiding the defect.

"My good Doctor," said the trader, "when you want to take me in, you should mount a pulpit, not a horse.

A Receipt for Soap.—An economical family of Pittsfield whose soap bills were eighty cents a month, have for the same amount of money, which the ingredients of the following cost, made an excellent quality of hard soap, which has lasted the same family over a year, or a saving of over 1,000 per cent: Take 6 pounds of sal-soda, 6 pounds grease, and 3 pounds quick-lime. Thoroughly mix the soda and lime in four gallons of water, pour off from the sediment, put in the grease and boil 20 minutes; pour off and before entirely cold cut in bars. Try it and report.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs, Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity; by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or, The Wicked Dead remain eternally under Death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letters to a Clergyman; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburg, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for 2 cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our own expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

THE WICKED DEAD: AN INQUIRER.

CHICAGO, July 21, 1868.

DEAR BR. IN CHRIST: I have been a reader of the HERALD for several months, and find much valuable matter in its columns. I write to acknowledge this; to say to you "God speed you in every effort to spread truth," and to name a thought which has often occurred to me when reading your and your correspondents' arguments against the idea of a resurrection of the wicked.

During the few years since I first got a glimpse of the precious doctrine of a risen and returning Jesus, I have believed in a resurrection of all the dead. Indeed, I knew not for several years that there was a class of Adventists who believed otherwise, and so accepted the resurrection side of the question without weighing or understanding the opposite arguments. These arguments have recently been placed before me, and I have tried impartially and prayerfully to examine them; for better than the best of all else beside do I love God's truth, when I find it; but I am undecided regarding this question; yet I find arguments and Scripture which apparently, at least, prove the resurrection of the wicked dead; and all I have heard and read does not satisfactorily meet them.

But, while I am inquiring I am checked, and my thoughts are led off into other channels by what seems to be an unfair manner of dealing with the theories and reasonings of opponents. I have more especial reference, now, to the habitual practice, among believers with you, of representing the position of those who contend for the resurrection of all, to be that of torturists, and comparing them to the orthodox believers in penal suffering. This, I think, is unjust; for, as I understand it, the theory is, not that the wicked are raised for the purpose of giving them pain, but that the judgment of the Lord may be given to an assembled universe, and all men may see that the sentence of condemnation as well as the award of praise is just, and so God's justice be acknowledged by every one.

Now, little or nothing as such an idea may be worth—and I will give no idea credit for being anything worth which does not stand on God's word or truth—it is nevertheless the one which has been ever present in my mind when considering the reasonableness of the re-living of the dead sinner; and however far, in your opinion, it may be from truth, if it is held by your opponents, give them their due, and let your readers know that the object God has in view—as others understand it—in bringing anybody from the grave, is not torture; then your arguments will carry with them the conviction that they do not need the aid of any such support as error is accustomed to invoke.

May God's blessed Spirit lead you and me nearer and nearer the great fountain of truth and life, and so direct you, who teach, that we who learn may find no hindrance to the ready reception of the gospel. Yours,

JAY FRANCIS.

RESPONSE BY THE EDITOR.

Our friend Francis' very kind remonstrance in the foregoing is received in the same spirit as given. We never design to misrepresent an opponent. If we have done so we regret it. We think, however, our brother may not have looked at the question from our standpoint. If our opponents among Adventists and Orthodoxites do not make it the main point, that the wicked dead will fail of receiving the due reward of their deeds unless raised from the dead to receive "many or few stripes, according to their deeds," then we wholly "misunderstand them." That some of them also hold the view Br. Francis speaks of, we admit; but separate the idea of penal inflictions from the resurrection of the wicked dead, and multitudes among Adventists would immediately abandon that resurrection altogether. If our Br. has read, as we presume he has, our friendly controversy with Dr. Field, who is one of our most intelligent opponents among the Adventists, on this question, can he fail to see that they insist that unless the wicked dead are raised to suffer, there would be inequality in their punishment, and consequently injustice done to some of them, while others would escape the just inflictions for their great crimes? If such an opponent as Dr. Field, a true representative of our intelligent opposers, maintains this view, shall we be accused of charging them wrongfully, or of being "unjust" toward them in placing them among the "torturists, and comparing them to the orthodox believers in penal sufferings?" We do not represent them as holding to "penal sufferings" to the same extent that orthodoxy does; but it is of the same character and for the same reason; that is, they are to suffer—so to speak—to equalize justice according to their deeds, and their sufferings are without hope; in other words, there is no design to benefit the sinners by these penal inflictions.

Our brother may have another view of the subject, as he says he "understands it;" but his view is not the one we especially contend against; yet he cannot say that that does not embrace hopeless torture, and that without design to benefit the tortured. He will not pretend the resurrection life of the wicked is a happy one; and he must admit the exhibition he speaks of being made to them must be one of fearful horror and suffering; and that no plea for mercy will avail anything in their case. Neither will Br. Francis pretend that the exhibition of justice in "the sentence of condemnation" of these sinners to death could not be made to the "assembled universe" of holy beings just as fully without their presence as with it, if such an exhibition is desirable to the Divine mind.

We confess, therefore, that though the view he speaks of may appear milder, so far as words are concerned, it does not appear to us to alter the fact that the main idea of torture is involved in the resurrection of the wicked dead; and so we think he will come, finally, to regard it: at any rate, hopeless torture cannot be separated from that view; and just so far it is like the orthodox view of future punishment, and ignores the Bible doctrine that "the wages of sin is death: not dying, nor any exhibition to the sinner of what he has lost, nor the pain of dying, but death itself; and when once dead he is as dead as he ever can be, and justice has had its full claim.

THAT DISCUSSION.

REMARKS BY MRS. C. C. WILLIAMS.

I AM led to ask, in view of the present position of Dr. N. Field as evidenced in the late interesting interchange of views on the subject of the "non-resurrection of the wicked" with Br. Storrs in the HERALD OF LIFE, wherein the former takes the ground (if I understand him) that they will all be raised, and for no other purpose than to suffer awhile and die again, whether all who read the discussion cannot see that, as he is now, so once were they?" and therefore do not hope that, in his case, soon can truthfully be quoted another line of the stanza, viz, "that as they are now he soon will be?" How often within the last twenty years has the conviction been forced upon me (judging by my own experience) that in nothing does there seem to be such an utter lack of faith in the necessity of well and rationally grounded principles as in religious matters. Not so in science or any branch of study. In these all who know enough about any branch or art, etc., to express themselves intelligibly, know that there are principles underlying each and all; and that everything must bend thereto. But who of us were ever taught to look at Revelation and the Divine Administration in that light? Instead, the most startling and momentous subjects, involving the final destiny of our race, were, and are treated on, and decided by here and there a verse without a thought that the great, good, and wise Ruler of the Universe had any particular system; or if he had, we had no business to inquire into it, lest we should be of those who would pry into the things, we were taught, belonged to GOD alone." When the, at first seemingly blasphemous, question "Are the wicked immortal?" came to the ear, do not all remember how prepared they felt, to meet and beat back such a startling insinuation? by such passages as, "to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise"—"to live is Christ, to die gain"—"having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better," etc. These were deemed sufficient to negative such a question. No matter what the occasion of their utterance, nor what they meant in reality. There were such words; that was enough. Then, too, who ever thought or considered there was, and of necessity must be, a connection with the penalty threatened as expressed in the words, "dust thou art and to dust thou shalt return," with the final doom of the ungodly? Whoever considered that the Judge of all the earth knew just what was right and proper, and would do it? or, that what Paul (and many others also) said about God's judgment was of any consequence, when, as in Rom. i., 32, he said that, His judgment was, that those who commit such like things, as he there enumerates, are worthy of death? and further everybody knows that all human beings, in whatever age they may have lived, are (when unconverted) addicted, more or less, to just such things. What more appropriate wages could possibly be awarded? Now, had it been in the first place threatened that the wicked should return to dust, then be revived and suffer a time according to their wickedness, then die again, then I should expect some passages, for instance Dan. xii, 2, John v., 29, and some others, would mean as we were taught they did, and as it would seem they might from the words employed: but inasmuch as such a construction is not in accordance with the plain terms of the penalty, and as soon as these terms are transcended the perfections of the Deity seem to be arraigned and laid open to imputations none wish to harbor, it seems safe, to say the least, to be content with what a far wiser one than any now claim to be, says sin's wages is; which corresponds exactly with the penalty threatened. I don't remember any place where the wicked are threatened with a resurrection; and judging by myself, none hope they will be; especially for the purpose it is claimed they will be. If Jesus included those who die in their sins, when he said they which are accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead can die no more—are as the angels—children of God, etc., I have no objection. If all can ultimately be thus, 'twill be a happy thing; but I suppose Br. Field hardly expects that; if not, I don't know what better can be done with them than as David says, viz., "they are laid in the grave like sheep;" and, for one, I can't see what end can be subserved by raising them, any more than sheep.

It seems to me like this, one must learn to look away from passages to principles: then from every page of the Bible almost will gleam light, hitherto unnoticed, that will make the discoverer wonder, where have been his eyes. I do hope that not only Br. Field, but all to whom this may come, will learn to reason from the penalty to its infliction, instead of from the different conflicting versions of what the inflictions are said to be to the penalty; all the time remembering the unchangeableness of the Divine Law-giver, that he will not threaten one thing and do another, and entirely different thing; and thus with the heart-felt joy and gladness, can we exclaim with David, "the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. More to be desired than gold; yea, than much fine gold; "yea, sweeter than honey and the honeycomb." Psa. xix., 9, 10. Who can say thus of the judgments men try to palm off on their fellows as genuine? Let the thoughtful ponder and answer.

BUTLER, Mo., July 1868.

"VOX POPULI—VOX DEI."

PROBABLY in the age of chivalry and the Crusades arose this remarkable saying, "The voice of the people is the voice of God." But it is believed that no specific origin or date can be assigned to it. We may well imagine that some event in history of unusual interest occurred to originate the declaration—expressive of unanimity in a certain belief, whatever that may have been.

The rank falsity and pernicious character of the assertion, however, is apparent from a single consideration—that its truthfulness would establish the human race as in harmony with God. Now if the voice of the people is as represented, then assuredly Israel, the chosen people of God, would have required in his momentous history no admonition by the voice of the prophets, or the visitation of executive judgments because of iniquities and repeated violations of holy commands from on high. There was evident antagonism, but the prophets being the personification of the voice of God, it inevitably ensues, the people were usurpers.

In the earlier portion of his eventful history, Israel wandered away from the ark of the covenant and demanded idols for worship. Only the most severe chastisements brought him back into dutiful submission to the requirements of Jehovah. Then again he became restless under the civil forms of government divinely appointed, and demanded the rule of a king. This concession to the voice of the people was made in anger, being contrary to divine wisdom. Israel's minor delinquencies, headstrong rebellions and multiform sins—inevitably followed by punishment, display before our eyes the most wonderful and instructive record of the dealings of God with man known in history. We should certainly expect to find here, if anywhere, the evidences to establish the truth—and being true, consequently the wisdom of this proverb. Surely any shortcomings in its truthfulness, as applied to the history of Israel, can in no wise be considered as made good in the records of the Gentile world. That record is assuredly evil and only evil continually. The curse of blood, with its progeny of curses, stains every page of history of every nation. As it has been in the past, so is it true now, that vice madly rules the hour, stalks the highways of life and jostles virtue rudely to the wall. The boastful civilization and enlightenment of one race or one nation of men over another seem scarcely a mitigation of the evil. The forms of sin are only changed. Indeed, if their multiform character be an aggravation, then the ignorant and barbarous people of the earth would almost seem to possess an advantage.

Nor are men content with outward manifestations of sinfulness in their daily walk of life, but are disposed to exert their intellectual powers, and with carnal wisdom establish many dogmas for the obedience of faith. An intellectual idol is set forth to worship, and we are called upon to bow our faces to the mental Juggernaut. The prerogative of the Godhead is boldly usurped by the assertion of threatened punishment in case of refusal.

For instance, the voice of the people is now persistent in favor of soul-worship, setting forth immortality to be conferred in and through the first Adam. This vision of a shade is evoked from the depths of the imagination, and the hearts of the people sit doting upon it—stranding the bewildered and wrecking many seeking the gospel hope. But the voice of God, through revelation, proclaims the glad tidings of its bestowment in and by the second Adam. By the grace of God, it is the meed of faith—a quality pertaining and inhering to living faith, but having no assimilation with sin.

Now every truth throughout the realm of nature, both in the physical and moral world, has existence in God, but the knowledge of such existence and its relations, has first a begetting in the mind of man. There the seed is sown, or as figuratively represented by Scripture—in the heart. That seed is the word of God, which Christ declared to be spirit and truth. The word springeth forth into life, and full growth is attained in the perfectness of Christ-like life.

The first struggles are for existence, and then it commences a destructive warfare to extinguish error in all its misshapen forms. Sin is error—it is untruth—it is evil, and the warfare must continue unto the utter extinction of sin, which must terminate that the God of truth may prevail. We cannot reconcile in our minds the idea that God will eternally suffer the continuance of this evil. That he will not—has been proclaimed to us through the voice of revelation, despite the voice of the people. Unto his well beloved Son has he committed the ministration to accomplish this destruction. He alone is the way, the truth, and the life.

Now if man suffers sin, error, evil, to germinate and take root in his mind (heart) he is corrupted throughout and perishes; for it is an unhealthy growth arising from the implantation of bad seed. He fails to establish the growth of life before the winter of death sets in to assert its law. But let truth fasten itself there and kindle its softening influences, sending forth healthy, vigorous roots, supplying the sap of life—a fountain of living waters to fruit and green leaves—he rests through the winter of death until there comes the revivifying of spring in another stage of life. The truth sanctifies, and thus gives life. Without truth, there is no sanctification, consequently no life. GOD IS TRUTH: MAN IS UNTRUTH.

May we not, then very properly take heed against the use of this proverb, in view of the tremendous warning given by God through the mouth of Ezekiel in a similar emergency, "As I live ye shall no longer use this proverb among the children of Israel—the fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge." L. T.

FROM JAMES ——, M. D., Solus.

MONROE, N. C., July 10 and 13, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Alone in my office (silence profound,) am I listening to the whispers of fancy? Am I alone? "Nunquam minus solus quam solus"— never have I better or more company than when alone. I am fixed in thought; and hear the voices of sages and saints, of philosophers and poets, prophets and apostles. What an assembly! and but one hearer, one listener! I myself. How shall I arrange their utterances? Pray don't think me insane, visionary, monomaniacal—don't, my brother—but hear first, and then judge. "Statutum est hominibus semel mori"—solemnly says one. It thrills through my whole nervous system, as the voice of inspiration, when lo! a venerable orator, whom I knew in my youth, announces its nature, in his once well-known language, so concise, expressive and truthful,—"mors exaninus—vita et sensu carens—animi hominum sensusque morte restinguuntur,"—and then Cicero was silent—so modest, polite and anxious that others should give utterance to their views of death. Instanter, Moses advanced to the stand and most solemnly declared that dying man must die—that he is but dust and must return unto dust. This is death. And then a wise man observed,—the dead know not anything, they have eyes and ears, but can neither see, hear, nor feel. For there is no wisdom or knowledge in the grave, sheol. Several others, inspired, said, in few words, since these things are so decreed, what will become of the righteous dead? and in one voice, thrilling with hope and exultation, they all exclaimed,—the righteous will arise—they shall be raised at the last day. Moses, Job, David, Isaiah, Paul, all spoke of the resurrection of the righteous, and the glory, honor and immortality destined for them at the last trump, when they (with themselves) should enter into the kingdom of heaven, inherit eternal life, and be equal to the angels. Such, in few words, were their views.

Many others addressed me and urged me most affectionately to study, to search the scriptures, and take heed how I translated figurative language. Here professors of rhetoric and belles lettres, came forward to benefit and enlighten me on the uses loquendi of language, conveying instruction to poor mortals. Their number was legion, though about a dozen occupied the stand—the company retired, for how long I can't say—after having occupied my attention for six hours, without interruption. I will try to give you the substance of some things they laid down as a sure guide—believing they are of vast importance as the language of wisdom and knowledge, sanctioned by unerring, infallible truth—the Bible. You see then I have infallibility: the Bible, as my guide, which all the company that engrossed my attention to-day, most earnestly recommended. Yes, there is one, and only one Infallible Guide, God, whose instruction alone I venerate. I call no man father, papa, pope. It is a popish custom to say, "my father in the gospel ministry." Learn of Christ.

FIGURATIVE LANGUAGE.

"The mother of harlots." We have had much said about the mother. Who will edify us by giving a true description of her daughters, the harlots; so that they may be known by the striking resemblance—family likeness of the mother? Babylonianism first; now who will show us the harlots? Ah! this is a ticklish subject. Shame on the daughters who revile their mother.

Nothing is more common than figurative language. Figures were first used from necessity, and afterward for their beauty. Spirit, spiritus, originally meant breath. Apostrophe,

> "Thee, bold Longinus, all the Nine inspire

The first three words are an apostrophe. The word nine is doubly figurative—an ellipsis, the nine for the muses. Secondly, a personification, the muses for the faculties of the mind. The remaining parts of the two lines form an allegory representing the muses as inspiring Longinus, and blessing him with a poet's fire—a metaphor, fire for genius.

Tropes are so numerous that perhaps nine-tenths of the words in all languages consist of tropes. To draw with precision the line between figurative and literal language is perhaps almost impossible. Dr. Blair was present and never uttered a word at the criticism of a rhetorician, who proved how erroneous was the Doctor's notion that some of the most admired and pathetic passages of the greatest ancient poets, are expressed without a figure; among others, the following from Virgil,—

> "Te dulcis conjux, te solo in littore secum,
> Te veniente die, te decedente canebat."

Almost every word in the two lines is highly figurative. Te—an apostrophe: its repetition a figure. It is questioned whether in all Virgil two lines more figurative could be selected. But turn to the first Epistle of Paul to the Corinthians, xv., contrasting the glories of the resurrected with the infirmities incident to our earthly condition, and concluding in a strain of surpassing eloquence and sublimity. The whole passage, commencing, "Now this I say" . . . . and ending, "O grave, where is thy victory?"—abounds in figures of the highest and most passionate eloquence. Every one of the images it contains—personification, metaphors,—glows with triumphant exultation, which every true Christian shares in the honest triumph; feeling assured that this mortal (he himself) shall put on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruption; that he shall no longer be incident to the frailties and infirmities peculiar to our present probationary state. His ideas are all negative—for he does not know what the condition of the glorified will be; for that knowledge is reserved for the time of his glorification.

But to enumerate all tropes of words—all figures of speech named by rhetoricians, ancient and modern, would be quite tedious, herculean, if not useless and worthless. It is unnecessary, at least. Some claim especially our serious consideration. So said my kind instructors. Following their chain of instruction, it is important to notice some of their injunctions, which they considered absolutely indispensable. Let it be remarked that it is almost impossible to say anything, on the subject of figurative language, which has not often been said before.

> "The moon of Rome; chaste as the icicle
> And hangs on Dian's temple."

Let any man versed in English Grammar, and accurately acquainted with the literal import of every word in these lines, (but ignorant altogether of figurative language or their import) say what they mean. Would he not conclude there never was such arrant nonsense put together in so many words. A woman is a moon! The moon of Rome! as if that city had a moon of its own! That this woman should be chaste is indeed intelligible; but what can be more absurd than to say, she is chaste as an icicle! chaste as that which has no animation and possesses no moral qualifications whatsoever! Yet, as if there could be degrees of chastity between one icicle and another, this lady's virtue must, it seems, be compared to a very particular icicle; an icicle curdled by the frost: curdled from purest snow! And still it will not answer the purpose unless it hangs on Dian's temple! No grammar, no dictionary can explain the meaning of this strange association of words. Let us, however, see how it is translated into the language of common grammar.

The lady is said to be the moon of Rome. This in the first instance is a metaphor, and not a simile. She is not said to be like the moon itself. The meaning, however, is that she possesses certain qualities similar to qualities attributed to the moon. What properties has she in common with the moon? Until we perceive this, here is another figure. The moon is put here not for the orb of night, but for Diana, the goddess, who under the system of the heathen mythology, was the regent of that luminary. Of all the goddesses she was the most distinguished for chastity; and this is the virtue for which Coriolanus means to say that Valeria resembled her. The moon of Rome, therefore, in this quotation, translated into literal speech, would simply say, she is chaste as the goddess Diana. Chaste as the icicle is a formal comparison; a simile, and not a metaphor. Yet the icicle is but metaphorically chaste, because it is cold. This analogy between physical coldness and moral purity, forms the resemblance upon which the chastity of Valeria is compared to that of an icicle. May it not be said with propriety, metaphorical discourse may be called translation—metaphor? There is only one single word chaste, in the lines which means what it literally imports. Similitude is the link of association for metaphor, and the foundation of all the figures in the lines.

Of all metaphors those are most beautiful which substitute animated figures for inanimate objects. To give examples of allegory—allusion—so as fully to illustrate them, would require much time and labor. Take the parable of the trees, and, had it not been translated, but left as that of the rich man and Lazarus, what arrant nonsense would not some persons make out of it according to its literal import. Yes, the grossest absurdities arise from translating literally what was intended and expressed figuratively. Reason and common sense will ever reject arrant nonsense or transparent absurdities. One example in the form of an allegory from Gray's bard, and then for Dives and Lazarus:

> Fair laughs the morn, and soft the zephyr blows,
> While proudly riding o'er the azure realm,
> In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes,
> Youth on the prow, and pleasure at the helm,
> Regardless of the sweeping whirlwinds' sway,
> That hush'd in grim repose, expects his evening prey.

In these lines you discover nothing but the imagery. The shadow stands alone. The body from which it projected, is kept altogether out of sight. The real object intended to be depicted in this representation, was the unhappy fate of Richard the Second of England. The thoughtless splendor of his reign at its commencement, and the melancholy catastrophe with which it terminated, are portrayed; but they are not mentioned. The vessel itself is all you see.

Fables and parables are almost entirely allegories. All fictitious history is allegorical. Some suggest that allegory is but a continued metaphor, amplified. The allegory called allusion is of frequent occurrence.

Now, look at the parable of the rich man, etc. Dead and buried, he opened his eyes, in the grave, sees Abraham afar off, (above the starry skies in the spirit land according to some) and Lazarus in his bosom—converses with Abraham at such a distance; says he is tormented in a flame; wishes him to send Lazarus to dip the tip of his finger in water and cool his parched tongue (the wretch! did he intend to bite the finger* of poor Lazarus? Shame). His sight was beyond all surprise; and how powerful his voice to be heard afar off, more than 100,000,000 miles; and he blind, deaf, and dumb! Knew nothing. How many tropes and figures, personifications, metaphors, metonymies, synecdoches, allegories, allusions, hyperboles, are contained in this parable? Let some reader of the HERALD inform us. Almost every word is a trope. Take it literally, and what arrant nonsense! What consummate absurdity would any English grammarian, ignorant of figurative language, make out it. Who will translate it or give a translation more satisfactory than that which appeared years ago in the Bible Examiner? Let it be published in pamphlet form.

The example taken from Shakspeare, descriptive of the chastity of Valeria, containing but one word, chaste, which means what

*Arabian Nights—"finger bit."

THE WICKED DEAD: AN INQUIRER.

CHICAGO, July 21, 1868.

DEAR BR. IN CHRIST: I have been a reader of the HERALD for several months, and find much valuable matter in its columns. I write to acknowledge this; to say to you "God speed you in every effort to spread truth," and to name a thought which has often occurred to me when reading your and your correspondents' arguments against the idea of a resurrection of the wicked.

During the few years since I first got a glimpse of the precious doctrine of a risen and returning Jesus, I have believed in a resurrection of all the dead. Indeed, I knew not for several years that there was a class of Adventists who believed otherwise, and so accepted the resurrection side of the question without weighing or understanding the opposite arguments. These arguments have recently been placed before me, and I have tried impartially and prayerfully to examine them; for better than the best of all else beside do I love God's truth, when I find it; but I am undecided regarding this question; yet I find arguments and Scripture which apparently, at least, prove the resurrection of the wicked dead; and all I have heard and read does not satisfactorily meet them.

But, while I am inquiring I am checked, and my thoughts are led off into other channels by what seems to be an unfair manner of dealing with the theories and reasonings of opponents. I have more especial reference, now, to the habitual practice, among believers with you, of representing the position of those who contend for the resurrection of all, to be that of torturists, and comparing them to the orthodox believers in penal suffering. This, I think, is unjust; for, as I understand it, the theory is, not that the wicked are raised for the purpose of giving them pain, but that the judgment of the Lord may be given to an assembled universe, and all men may see that the sentence of condemnation as well as the award of praise is just, and so God's justice be acknowledged by every one.

Now, little or nothing as such an idea may be worth—and I will give no idea credit for being anything worth which does not stand on God's word or truth—it is nevertheless the one which has been ever present in my mind when considering the reasonableness of the re-living of the dead sinner; and however far, in your opinion, it may be from truth, if it is held by your opponents, give them their due, and let your readers know that the object God has in view—as others understand it—in bringing anybody from the grave, is not torture; then your arguments will carry with them the conviction that they do not need the aid of any such support as error is accustomed to invoke.

May God's blessed Spirit lead you and me nearer and nearer the great fountain of truth and life, and so direct you, who teach, that we who learn may find no hindrance to the ready reception of the gospel. Yours,

JAY FRANCIS.

RESPONSE BY THE EDITOR.

Our friend Francis' very kind remonstrance in the foregoing is received in the same spirit as given. We never design to misrepresent an opponent. If we have done so we regret it. We think, however, our brother may not have looked at the question from our standpoint. If our opponents among Adventists and Orthodoxites do not make it the main point, that the wicked dead will fail of receiving the due reward of their deeds unless raised from the dead to receive "many or few stripes, according to their deeds," then we wholly "misunderstand them." That some of them also hold the view Br. Francis speaks of, we admit; but separate the idea of penal inflictions from the resurrection of the wicked dead, and multitudes among Adventists would immediately abandon that resurrection altogether. If our Br. has read, as we presume he has, our friendly controversy with Dr. Field, who is one of our most intelligent opponents among the Adventists, on this question, can he fail to see that they insist that unless the wicked dead are raised to suffer, there would be inequality in their punishment, and consequently injustice done to some of them, while others would escape the just inflictions for their great crimes? If such an opponent as Dr. Field, a true representative of our intelligent opposers, maintains this view, shall we be accused of charging them wrongfully, or of being "unjust" toward them in placing them among the "torturists, and comparing them to the orthodox believers in penal sufferings?" We do not represent them as holding to "penal sufferings" to the same extent that orthodoxy does; but it is of the same character and for the same reason; that is, they are to suffer—so to speak—to equalize justice according to their deeds, and their sufferings are without hope; in other words, there is no design to benefit the sinners by these penal inflictions.

Our brother may have another view of the subject, as he says he "understands it;" but his view is not the one we especially contend against; yet he cannot say that that does not embrace hopeless torture, and that without design to benefit the tortured. He will not pretend the resurrection life of the wicked is a happy one; and he must admit the exhibition he speaks of being made to them must be one of fearful horror and suffering; and that no plea for mercy will avail anything in their case. Neither will Br. Francis pretend that the exhibition of justice in "the sentence of condemnation" of these sinners to death could not be made to the "assembled universe" of holy beings just as fully without their presence as with it, if such an exhibition is desirable to the Divine mind.

We confess, therefore, that though the view he speaks of may appear milder, so far as words are concerned, it does not appear to us to alter the fact that the main idea of torture is involved in the resurrection of the wicked dead; and so we think he will come, finally, to regard it: at any rate, hopeless torture cannot be separated from that view; and just so far it is like the orthodox view of future punishment, and ignores the Bible doctrine that "the wages of sin is death: not dying, nor any exhibition to the sinner of what he has lost, nor the pain of dying, but death itself; and when once dead he is as dead as he ever can be, and justice has had its full claim.

THAT DISCUSSION.

REMARKS BY MRS. C. C. WILLIAMS.

I AM led to ask, in view of the present position of Dr. N. Field as evidenced in the late interesting interchange of views on the subject of the "non-resurrection of the wicked" with Br. Storrs in the HERALD OF LIFE, wherein the former takes the ground (if I understand him) that they will all be raised, and for no other purpose than to suffer awhile and die again, whether all who read the discussion cannot see that, as he is now, so once were they?" and therefore do not hope that, in his case, soon can truthfully be quoted another line of the stanza, viz, "that as they are now he soon will be?" How often within the last twenty years has the conviction been forced upon me (judging by my own experience) that in nothing does there seem to be such an utter lack of faith in the necessity of well and rationally grounded principles as in religious matters. Not so in science or any branch of study. In these all who know enough about any branch or art, etc., to express themselves intelligibly, know that there are principles underlying each and all; and that everything must bend thereto. But who of us were ever taught to look at Revelation and the Divine Administration in that light? Instead, the most startling and momentous subjects, involving the final destiny of our race, were, and are treated on, and decided by here and there a verse without a thought that the great, good, and wise Ruler of the Universe had any particular system; or if he had, we had no business to inquire into it, lest we should be of those who would pry into the things, we were taught, belonged to GOD alone." When the, at first seemingly blasphemous, question "Are the wicked immortal?" came to the ear, do not all remember how prepared they felt, to meet and beat back such a startling insinuation? by such passages as, "to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise"—"to live is Christ, to die gain"—"having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better," etc. These were deemed sufficient to negative such a question. No matter what the occasion of their utterance, nor what they meant in reality. There were such words; that was enough. Then, too, who ever thought or considered there was, and of necessity must be, a connection with the penalty threatened as expressed in the words, "dust thou art and to dust thou shalt return," with the final doom of the ungodly? Whoever considered that the Judge of all the earth knew just what was right and proper, and would do it? or, that what Paul (and many others also) said about God's judgment was of any consequence, when, as in Rom. i., 32, he said that, His judgment was, that those who commit such like things, as he there enumerates, are worthy of death? and further everybody knows that all human beings, in whatever age they may have lived, are (when unconverted) addicted, more or less, to just such things. What more appropriate wages could possibly be awarded? Now, had it been in the first place threatened that the wicked should return to dust, then be revived and suffer a time according to their wickedness, then die again, then I should expect some passages, for instance Dan. xii, 2, John v., 29, and some others, would mean as we were taught they did, and as it would seem they might from the words employed: but inasmuch as such a construction is not in accordance with the plain terms of the penalty, and as soon as these terms are transcended the perfections of the Deity seem to be arraigned and laid open to imputations none wish to harbor, it seems safe, to say the least, to be content with what a far wiser one than any now claim to be, says sin's wages is; which corresponds exactly with the penalty threatened. I don't remember any place where the wicked are threatened with a resurrection; and judging by myself, none hope they will be; especially for the purpose it is claimed they will be. If Jesus included those who die in their sins, when he said they which are accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead can die no more—are as the angels—children of God, etc., I have no objection. If all can ultimately be thus, 'twill be a happy thing; but I suppose Br. Field hardly expects that; if not, I don't know what better can be done with them than as David says, viz., "they are laid in the grave like sheep;" and, for one, I can't see what end can be subserved by raising them, any more than sheep.

It seems to me like this, one must learn to look away from passages to principles: then from every page of the Bible almost will gleam light, hitherto unnoticed, that will make the discoverer wonder, where have been his eyes. I do hope that not only Br. Field, but all to whom this may come, will learn to reason from the penalty to its infliction, instead of from the different conflicting versions of what the inflictions are said to be to the penalty; all the time remembering the unchangeableness of the Divine Law-giver, that he will not threaten one thing and do another, and entirely different thing; and thus with the heart-felt joy and gladness, can we exclaim with David, "the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. More to be desired than gold; yea, than much fine gold; "yea, sweeter than honey and the honey-comb." Psa. xix., 9, 10. Who can say thus of the judgments men try to palm off on their fellows as genuine? Let the thoughtful ponder and answer.

BUTLER, Mo., July 1868.

"VOX POPULI—VOX DEI."

PROBABLY in the age of chivalry and the Crusades arose this remarkable saying, "The voice of the people is the voice of God." But it is believed that no specific origin or date can be assigned to it. We may well imagine that some event in history of unusual interest occurred to originate the declaration—expressive of unanimity in a certain belief, whatever that may have been.

The rank falsity and pernicious character of the assertion, however, is apparent from a single consideration—that its truthfulness would establish the human race as in harmony with God. Now if the voice of the people is as represented, then assuredly Israel, the chosen people of God, would have required in his momentous history no admonition by the voice of the prophets, or the visitation of executive judgments because of iniquities and repeated violations of holy commands from on high. There was evident antagonism, but the prophets being the personification of the voice of God, it inevitably ensues, the people were usurpers.

In the earlier portion of his eventful history, Israel wandered away from the ark of the covenant and demanded idols for worship. Only the most severe chastisements brought him back into dutiful submission to the requirements of Jehovah. Then again he became restless under the civil forms of government divinely appointed, and demanded the rule of a king. This concession to the voice of the people was made in anger, being contrary to divine wisdom. Israel's minor delinquencies, headstrong rebellions and multiform sins—inevitably followed by punishment, display before our eyes the most wonderful and instructive record of the dealings of God with man known in history. We should certainly expect to find here, if anywhere, the evidences to establish the truth—and being true, consequently the wisdom of this proverb. Surely any shortcomings in its truthfulness, as applied to the history of Israel, can in no wise be considered as made good in the records of the Gentile world. That record is assuredly evil and only evil continually. The curse of blood, with its progeny of curses, stains every page of history of every nation. As it has been in the past, so it is true now, that vice madly rules the hour, stalks the highways of life and jostles virtue rudely to the wall. The boastful civilization and enlightenment of one race or one nation of men over another seem scarcely a mitigation of the evil. The forms of sin are only changed. Indeed, if their multiform character be an aggravation, then the ignorant and barbarous people of the earth would almost seem to possess an advantage.

Nor are men content with outward manifestations of sinfulness in their daily walk of life, but are disposed to exert their intellectual powers, and with carnal wisdom establish many dogmas for the obedience of faith. An intellectual idol is set forth to worship, and we are called upon to bow our faces to the mental Juggernaut. The prerogative of the Godhead is boldly usurped by the assertion of threatened punishment in case of refusal.

For instance, the voice of the people is now persistent in favor of soul-worship, setting forth immortality to be conferred in and through the first Adam. This vision of a shade is evoked from the depths of the imagination, and the hearts of the people sit doting upon it—stranding the bewildered and wrecking many seeking the gospel hope. But the voice of God, through revelation, proclaims the glad tidings of its bestowment in and by the second Adam. By the grace of God, it is the meed of faith—a quality pertaining and inhering to living faith, but having no assimilation with sin.

Now every truth throughout the realm of nature, both in the physical and moral world, has existence in God, but the knowledge of such existence and its relations, has first a begetting in the mind of man. There the seed is sown, or as figuratively represented by Scripture—in the heart. That seed is the word of God, which Christ declared to be spirit and truth. The word springeth forth into life, and full growth is attained in the perfectness of Christ-like life.

The first struggles are for existence, and then it commences a destructive warfare to extinguish error in all its misshapen forms. Sin is error—it is untruth—it is evil, and the warfare must continue unto the utter extinction of sin, which must terminate that the God of truth may prevail. We cannot reconcile in our minds the idea that God will eternally suffer the continuance of this evil. That he will not—has been proclaimed to us through the voice of revelation, despite the voice of the people. Unto his well beloved Son has he committed the ministration to accomplish this destruction. He alone is the way, the truth, and the life.

Now if man suffers sin, error, evil, to germinate and take root in his mind (heart) he is corrupted throughout and perishes; for it is an unhealthy growth arising from the implantation of bad seed. He fails to establish the growth of life before the winter of death sets in to assert its law. But let truth fasten itself there and kindle its softening influences, sending forth healthy, vigorous roots, supplying the sap of life—a fountain of living waters to fruit and green leaves—he rests through the winter of death until there comes the revivifying of spring in another stage of life. The truth sanctifies, and thus gives life. Without truth, there is no sanctification, consequently no life. GOD IS TRUTH: MAN IS UNTRUTH.

May we not, then very properly take heed against the use of this proverb, in view of the tremendous warning given by God through the mouth of Ezekiel in a similar emergency, "As I live ye shall no longer use this proverb among the children of Israel—the fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge."

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

FROM JAMES ——, M. D., Solus.

MONROE, N. C., July 10 and 13, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Alone in my office (silence profound,) am I listening to the whispers of fancy? Am I alone? "Nunquam minus solus quam solus"— never have I better or more company than when alone. I am fixed in thought; and hear the voices of sages and saints, of philosophers and poets, prophets and apostles. What an assembly! and but one hearer, one listener! I myself. How shall I arrange their utterances? Pray don't think me insane, visionary, monomaniacal—don't, my brother—but hear first, and then judge. "Statutum est hominibus semel mori"—solemnly says one. It thrills through my whole nervous system, as the voice of inspiration, when lo! a venerable orator, whom I knew in my youth, announces its nature, in his once well-known language, so concise, expressive and truthful,—"mors exaninus—vita et sensu carens—animi hominum sensusque morte restinguuntur,"—and then Cicero was silent—so modest, polite and anxious that others should give utterance to their views of death. Instanter, Moses advanced to the stand and most solemnly declared that dying man must die—that he is but dust and must return unto dust. This is death. And then a wise man observed,—the dead know not anything, they have eyes and ears, but can neither see, hear, nor feel. For there is no wisdom or knowledge in the grave, sheol. Several others, inspired, said, in few words, since these things are so decreed, what will become of the righteous dead? and in one voice, thrilling with hope and exultation, they all exclaimed,—the righteous will arise—they shall be raised at the last day. Moses, Job, David, Isaiah, Paul, all spoke of the resurrection of the righteous, and the glory, honor and immortality destined for them at the last trump, when they (with themselves) should enter into the kingdom of heaven, inherit eternal life, and be equal to the angels. Such, in few words, were their views.

Many others addressed me and urged me most affectionately to study, to search the scriptures, and take heed how I translated figurative language. Here professors of rhetoric and belles lettres, came forward to benefit and enlighten me on the uses loquendi of language, conveying instruction to poor mortals. Their number was legion, though about a dozen occupied the stand—the company retired, for how long I can't say—after having occupied my attention for six hours, without interruption. I will try to give you the substance of some things they laid down as a sure guide—believing they are of vast importance as the language of wisdom and knowledge, sanctioned by unerring, infallible truth—the Bible. You see then I have infallibility: the Bible, as my guide, which all the company that engrossed my attention to-day, most earnestly recommended. Yes, there is one, and only one Infallible Guide, God, whose instruction alone I venerate. I call no man father, papa, pope. It is a popish custom to say, "my father in the gospel ministry." Learn of Christ.

FIGURATIVE LANGUAGE.

"The mother of harlots." We have had much said about the mother. Who will edify us by giving a true description of her daughters, the harlots; so that they may be known by the striking resemblance—family likeness of the mother? Babylonianism first; now who will show us the harlots? Ah! this is a ticklish subject. Shame on the daughters who revile their mother.

Nothing is more common than figurative language. Figures were first used from necessity, and afterward for their beauty. Spirit, spiritus, originally meant breath. Apostrophe,

"Thee, bold Longinus, all the Nine inspire

The first three words are an apostrophe. The word nine is doubly figurative—an ellipsis, the nine for the muses. Secondly, a personification, the muses for the faculties of the mind. The remaining parts of the two lines form an allegory representing the muses as inspiring Longinus, and blessing him with a poet's fire—a metaphor, fire for genius.

Tropes are so numerous that perhaps nine-tenths of the words in all languages consist of tropes. To draw with precision the line between figurative and literal language is perhaps almost impossible. Dr. Blair was present and never uttered a word at the criticism of a rhetorician, who proved how erroneous was the Doctor's notion that some of the most admired and pathetic passages of the greatest ancient poets, are expressed without a figure; among others, the following from Virgil,—

"Te dulcis conjux, te solo in littore secum,
Te veniente die, te decedente canebat."

Almost every word in the two lines is highly figurative. Te—an apostrophe: its repetition a figure. It is questioned whether in all Virgil two lines more figurative could be selected. But turn to the first Epistle of Paul to the Corinthians, xv., contrasting the glories of the resurrected with the infirmities incident to our earthly condition, and concluding in a strain of surpassing eloquence and sublimity. The whole passage, commencing, "Now this I say" . . . . and ending, "O grave, where is thy victory?"—abounds in figures of the highest and most passionate eloquence. Every one of the images it contains—personification, metaphors,—glows with triumphant exultation, which every true Christian shares in the honest triumph; feeling assured that this mortal (he himself) shall put on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruption; that he shall no longer be incident to the frailties and infirmities peculiar to our present probationary state. His ideas are all negative—for he does not know what the condition of the glorified will be; for that knowledge is reserved for the time of his glorification.

But to enumerate all tropes of words—all figures of speech named by rhetoricians, ancient and modern, would be quite tedious, herculean, if not useless and worthless. It is unnecessary, at least. Some claim especially our serious consideration. So said my kind instructors. Following their chain of instruction, it is important to notice some of their injunctions, which they considered absolutely indispensable. Let it be remarked that it is almost impossible to say anything, on the subject of figurative language, which has not often been said before.

"The moon of Rome; chaste as the icicle
And hangs on Dian's temple."

Let any man versed in English Grammar, and accurately acquainted with the literal import of every word in these lines, (but ignorant altogether of figurative language or their import) say what they mean. Would he not conclude there never was such arrant nonsense put together in so many words. A woman is a moon! The moon of Rome! as if that city had a moon of its own! That this woman should be chaste is indeed intelligible; but what can be more absurd than to say, she is chaste as an icicle! chaste as that which has no animation and possesses no moral qualifications whatsoever! Yet, as if there could be degrees of chastity between one icicle and another, this lady's virtue must, it seems, be compared to a very particular icicle; an icicle curdled by the frost: curdled from purest snow! And still it will not answer the purpose unless it hangs on Dian's temple! No grammar, no dictionary can explain the meaning of this strange association of words. Let us, however, see how it is translated into the language of common grammar.

The lady is said to be the moon of Rome. This in the first instance is a metaphor, and not a simile. She is not said to be like the moon itself. The meaning, however, is that she possesses certain qualities similar to qualities attributed to the moon. What properties has she in common with the moon? Until we perceive this, here is another figure. The moon is put here not for the orb of night, but for Diana, the goddess, who under the system of the heathen mythology, was the regent of that luminary. Of all the goddesses she was the most distinguished for chastity; and this is the virtue for which Coriolanus means to say that Valeria resembled her. The moon of Rome, therefore, in this quotation, translated into literal speech, would simply say, she is chaste as the goddess Diana. Chaste as the icicle is a formal comparison; a simile, and not a metaphor. Yet the icicle is but metaphorically chaste, because it is cold. This analogy between physical coldness and moral purity, forms the resemblance upon which the chastity of Valeria is compared to that of an icicle. May it not be said with propriety, metaphorical discourse may be called translation—metaphor? There is only one single word chaste, in the lines which means what it literally imports. Similitude is the link of association for metaphor, and the foundation of all the figures in the lines.

Of all metaphors those are most beautiful which substitute animated figures for inanimate objects. To give examples of allegory—allusion—so as fully to illustrate them, would require much time and labor. Take the parable of the trees, and, had it not been translated, but left as that of the rich man and Lazarus, what arrant nonsense would not some persons make out of it according to its literal import. Yes, the grossest absurdities arise from translating literally what was intended and expressed figuratively. Reason and common sense will ever reject arrant nonsense or transparent absurdities. One example in the form of an allegory from Gray's bard, and then for Dives and Lazarus:

Fair laughs the morn, and soft the zephyr blows,
While proudly riding o'er the azure realm,
In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes,
Youth on the prow, and pleasure at the helm,
Regardless of the sweeping whirlwinds' sway,
That hush'd in grim repose, expects his evening prey.

In these lines you discover nothing but the imagery. The shadow stands alone. The body from which it projected, is kept altogether out of sight. The real object intended to be depicted in this representation, was the unhappy fate of Richard the Second of England. The thoughtless splendor of his reign at its commencement, and the melancholy catastrophe with which it terminated, are portrayed; but they are not mentioned. The vessel itself is all you see.

Fables and parables are almost entirely allegories. All fictitious history is allegorical. Some suggest that allegory is but a continued metaphor, amplified. The allegory called allusion is of frequent occurrence.

Now, look at the parable of the rich man, etc. Dead and buried, he opened his eyes, in the grave, sees Abraham afar off, (above the starry skies in the spirit land according to some) and Lazarus in his bosom—converses with Abraham at such a distance; says he is tormented in a flame; wishes him to send Lazarus to dip the tip of his finger in water and cool his parched tongue (the wretch! did he intend to bite the finger* of poor Lazarus? Shame). His sight was beyond all surprise; and how powerful his voice to be heard afar off, more than 100,000,000 miles; and he blind, deaf, and dumb! Knew nothing. How many tropes and figures, personifications, metaphors, metonymies, synecdoches, allegories, allusions, hyperboles, are contained in this parable? Let some reader of the HERALD inform us. Almost every word is a trope. Take it literally, and what arrant nonsense! What consummate absurdity would any English grammarian, ignorant of figurative language, make out of it. Who will translate it or give a translation more satisfactory than that which appeared years ago in the Bible Examiner? Let it be published in pamphlet form.

The example taken from Shakspeare, descriptive of the chastity of Valeria, containing but one word, chaste, which means what it literally imports, is better understood and more easily translated than the parable of the rich man. Was ever thunder heard, or roar of ten thousand cannon equal to the voice of a dead man in his grave, heard by Abraham more than one thousand millions of miles off, or even suppose 10,000 miles off? and the hearing of a deaf man, utterly senseless, so acute that he could hear the whispers of a saint away above the starry skies, in the spirit land! Now all this arrant nonsense, (taken literally) this preposterous absurdity put together must convince every man of common sense and reason, that the rich man never saw Abraham in the kingdom of glorified spirits, made perfect; for the rich man was not born again—could not see if wide awake and alive, any one at such a distance; nor could his voice, while living, reach twenty miles; and when dead and under ground, could not be heard one inch from his nose. Truth.

If my recommendation could have any weight with the Editor of the HERALD OF LIFE, I would most sincerely suggest the wisdom of issuing the translation of the Parables (as it appeared a few years ago in the Bible Examiner), in pamphlet form, with some additional remarks, such as, in his judgment, may appear necessary—pointing out, if he think proper, every figure in the parable; showing the true translation into literal language, in harmony with reason, common sense, and revelation. I believe a knowledge of figurative language is essentially necessary to a right understanding of the Bible, and as requisite as a knowledge of words either Hebrew, Greek, Latin, Italian, Spanish, German, French, Scotch, Irish or Chinese. He who best understands figurative language, and is in heart and life a true Christian, will present Bible truth in the true light, in unity and harmony, unmixed with arrant nonsense, transparent absurdities, or palpable contradictions. May God ever guide and keep the Editor of the HERALD OF LIFE as well as all others engaged in the same work, in the ways of all truth, and make them wise unto salvation, that they may ultimately inherit eternal Life, at the appearing and kingdom of Jesus Christ. Sound doctrine and holy living are weighty arguments. May they be inseparably manifest in the advocates of "Life only in Christ." One remark: The compiler of the foregoing never did believe that any mortal would inherit eternal life but as the gift of God through Jesus Christ; and in 1836, he had no more fear of Hell or the Devil, than he had of the man in the moon; in 1849 he had weighty reasons to doubt the resurrection of the wicked—so weighty that he did not believe they would arise or come to life.

JAMES ——.

"THREE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS."

One Thousand Dollars Wanted.

FOR WHAT?

To put into circulation within the next three months Ten Thousand each of the following works:

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE.

THE JUDGMENT:

TIME AND MANNER OF IT.

AND

LIFE FROM THE DEAD:

Or, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN.

These three documents are for the campaign before us, which is not to be ended till our King is crowned and has the kingdoms of this world subjected to his reign on David's throne. Three thousand each of the above two first-named documents have been printed, and four thousand of the last, and a great portion of them are already in circulation; but there is a wish to increase it to ten thousand each by the next anniversary of the LIFE AND ADVENT UNION. We believe it can be done. It is true, a few have generally had such work to do; but "many hands make light work." If each of our subscribers could pay, or collect one dollar for this object, the full amount and several hundred dollars over would be had to carry on the work.

Who says, I WILL DO IT? You can have all your money back again in the documents, if you wish it.

The three works can be had for 14 cents, including the postage; or, 100 of each for $12, including postage, or for $10 when sent by express or taken at our office.

MEETINGS IN NEW YORK CITY.—Believers in the Second Coming of Christ at hand, and future Life for the Righteous at his Coming, meet for worship every Sunday, at Botanic Hall, No. 68 East Broadway. Service at 10½ A. M. and 3 P. M. Seats free.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Professor Wilson, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we endorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage, six cents.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 5, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE ANNIVERSARY.

THE annual meeting of the LIFE AND ADVENT UNION will be held, Thursday, August 27, at two o'clock P. M., in Springfield, Mass. A preliminary meeting, for consultation and exchange of thoughts, will be held at ten o'clock in the A. M., at the same place. The life and support of the HERALD OF LIFE is the main business of these meetings. Let all its friends be present so far as possible. If that cannot be, let us hear from you on the subject, either before the meeting, or while at it. Do not fail.

The place of our meetings will be in "THE LIFE AND ADVENT MISSION TENT," belonging to Br. E. Wolcott, Oceanport, N. J.; a tent which that brother purchased, and of which he is the sole owner; in which he has been carrying on the campaign for more than a year past at his own cost; which is no small sum, giving glory to the Lord who has enabled him to do this.

Come friends, let us have a grand rally in that consecrated tent in behalf of the Life and Advent cause.

The Advent Camp-meeting, at which the above-named tent is to be pitched, commences the 24th inst, and holds to Monday, the 31st. "THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION" hold their fifth anniversary on Thursday, the 27th inst, as before named.

Persons going to the meeting should go prepared to take care of themselves. The meeting is but a short distance out of the city of Springfield, north of the railroad depot; so that those coming can find accommodations either in the city or on the camp-ground.

"THE RESURRECTION OF THE WICKED."

UNDER the above heading our excellent exchange, The Advance, of Chicago, gives us a column and a half, in its issue of July 23. We thank it for so much consideration of the subject. What of the article relates to "annihilationists" we copy in full, and shall accompany it with notes. The part that relates to Universalists we leave for that class to use as they please. We are as far removed from them in theory as we are from the The Advance; probably farther. We agree with both in some things. We are with the Universalists in rejecting the doctrine of endless woe; and we are with The Advance in the fact that men who die in their sins are hopelessly lost.

The position of those two parties is that of two extremes; but both originate in a mutual starting point, viz., "Man is inherently immortal or has an immortal soul," and is now possessed "of a double nature, material and spiritual." From this starting point Universalism and orthodoxy go out on their campaign to make a final disposition of man.

We come between these two parties, and deny their foundation principle, and challenge the proof of man's having a "double nature," or an "immortal soul." Where is the Bible testimony for such an assumption? We have called for that evidence for thirty years past, but the proof is as far as ever from being produced by either of the extreme parties. Not one text have they ever produced that "man is of double nature," part mortal and part immortal: not one can they produce, because there is none: that is "the difficulty of" their "error." Yes, "however ingeniously framed to meet an exigency, it breaks down somewhere, not fitting into the complete circle of facts," so long as the Bible is the only standard of appeal. Without one text affirming that man has a nature that is "spiritual" and "immortal" they go on, regardless of all opposing declarations of the Bible of man's mortality and perishing condition, and the oft repeated declarations that "all the wicked will God destroy," that they "shall be as though they had not been," that "like sheep they are laid in the grave—they shall never see light" —"shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them."

These are no isolated texts; they are multitudinous in the Bible, and are the general tenor of that blessed volume. Yet the assumption of an inherent immortal soul, without one text in the Bible affirming it, is made to override the whole testimony of inspiration in regard to man's perishable constitution, and his exclusion from life, hereafter, only as a gift of God through Jesus Christ. Words are tortured and torn, as if by wild beasts, to make them tally with the immortal soul theory. Life does not mean life; nor does death mean death in their theology. God is dependent on them to make men understand that when he saith, "The soul that sinneth it shall die," he means no such thing, but that it shall be eternally miserable, according to orthodoxy; and only a little while unhappy, according to Universalism.

Such is the result of this foreign element, attempted to be palmed off on the world as a Bible truth, that man has an immortal soul. Let that idea be proved by one declaration of God, and we will cease our opposition to the system. We know it cannot be done, and therefore stand unmoved and unterrified by any and all the bold assumptions of Orthodoxy on the one hand, and Universalism on the other.

But we come to the article of The Advance, on the resurrection of the wicked, which, so far as relates to "annihilationism," is as follows:

Their resurrection is a future fact. Do we sufficiently consider what it implies? The word resurrection usually stands associated with the completed glory of the righteous—with the redemption of our body," as Paul significantly phrases it, because redemption is comprehensive of our whole ruined being, including the body as well as the soul (1.) It is too often forgotten that man, as man, is of double nature, material and spiritual; that a soul without a body is not fully man, any more than a body without a soul (2). Each is fitted to the other for the purposes of earth, and each will be fitted to the other for the purposes of the eternal future (3). This will be as true of the wicked as of the righteous. Body and soul have shared the probationary experience of this sinful world, and to body and soul in union once more, shall fall the redemptive and retributive experiences of the eternal world. Thus are we taught in the Old and New Testaments: "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life and some to shame and everlasting contempt" (Dan. xii., 2). "The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation" (John v., 28, 29). Thus the wicked as truly as the righteous shall have an appropriate body as the material vehicle and instrument of the soul. What ideas properly stand associated with that fact? Three prominent lessons are suggested (4.)

1. The first in contradiction of the error of the annihilationists, who teach that the "death" threatened to the wicked is, the destruction of their being itself, and not of their well-being. To this theory the fact of the predicted resurrection of the wicked is a sad stumbling block (5). They cannot deny that this is to be, for it is clearly revealed; yet there is no place for it in their theory (6). They probably feel in regard to it as an ardent temperance man (who held to the theory of the intrinsic sin of tasting an alcoholic beverage) did regarding another declaration of Scripture. Being asked by a friend, what he made out of the narrative of the marriage feast at Cana of Galilee, he replied that he was rather sorry that Christ wrought that miracle (7). We can imagine an annihilationist inwardly regretting that, since the wicked are to be annihilated, the death of the body, followed by its crumbling back to dust, should not be accepted as the first instalment of the penalty, which would be completed by the extinction of the soul (8). The body being destroyed already, what can be the propriety of recreating it, to destroy it over again? Such a procedure appears more like child's play than divine retribution (9). No one who reads the works of these errorists fails to notice the embarrassment caused by this unwelcome truth, and the awkward logic, philosophy and exegesis to which they resort, to harmonize it with their fundamental position. But that is always the difficulty of error; like an uttered falsehood, however ingeniously framed to meet an exigency, it breaks down somewhere, not fitting into the complete circle of facts (10).

NOTES BY EDITOR HERALD OF LIFE.

1. Paul truly speaks of "the redemption of our body," but where does he use that expression in the sense of its being a redemption of anything except of our proper personality? He speaks of "the offering of the body of Christ." Does he mean that all our Lord offered for our sins and sanctification was his body only? Surely our Br. of The Advance will not take that position. It was the offering of Himself—his personality as the Christ, the Anointed of God, that Paul speaks of. So when he speaks of "the redemption of our body," it is our redemption—our personality that he speaks of. This is clear where he elaborates the resurrection work, 1 Cor. xv. It is "the dead in Christ" who are perished, "if the dead are not raised;" not, if their "bodies" are not raised. The persons themselves are perished unless they are raised from the dead. The apostle never talks about a "re-union of soul and body;" for the obvious reason that he never recognizes a soul as alive when the man is dead. We do not say that such an idea may not be inferred by a believer in the "double nature" theory; but we do say, Paul never gave utterance to such an idea in the unmistakable language of "Orthodoxy." He talks of man as man, and denies his having a "spiritual nature" by creation, and talks of such a nature only as implanted in us by a union with Christ, and perfected by the resurrection from the dead; then and there to become immortal. He never made such an utterance as an "immortal soul" or a "deathless spirit" in all his ministry or epistles. He explicitly declares the first man, Adam, was "not spiritual," 1 Cor. xv., 45, 46.

(2.) If "a soul without a body is not fully man," why do Orthodox ministers tell us "the soul is the essential man?" Man is a soul, a real, tangible being, and not a fancy. When man is dead, he is a "dead soul." His life is in the hands of God to restore it, or doom it to utter and eternal extinction. Such a disposition of life, God only has power to make. "Forgotten" it should be, that man has a "double nature," because the remembrance of such an idea makes confusion in the whole economy of God's government of the world. It was man that was created: man that was placed under law: man that should die, if he sinned; and it was man to whom God said, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Here is no recognition of the "double nature" theory; but man is addressed, commanded, threatened, and punished as a unit. And this same principle runs through the entire Book of God.

(3.) Then they will never be separated from each other, even supposing them to be distinct entities. "The eternal future"-certainly embraces the period between death and the resurrection.

(4.) We pass this part of The Advance's remarks, because we have so often and so recently shown that Dan. xii., 2 proves that the wicked will not awake, when fairly interpreted; and according to the rendering of the text by eminent Hebrew scholars, who were not of our faith. That text is for us, and not against us. We pass it, therefore, for the present: the very quotation of it, at this late stage of the controversy, is proof of the weakness of our opponents in their attempts to prove the living again of the wicked dead.

We admit that John v., 28, 29 is a strong text on their side of the question; but it is not conclusive for the reliving of the wicked dead, when it may have another construction put on it which will not make it clash with other texts which declare positively, of some of the wicked, "they are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise." Isa. xxvi., 14; and "he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life," John iii., 36, and a multitude of like testimonies found all through the Bible. The general tenor of the Scriptures must rule in the construction of an isolated text and the known perfections of God must also be taken into the account. We venture the assertion that not one text in the Bible can be found which says a wicked dead man shall ever live again. We do not say that none can be found from which it can be inferred; but there is not one positive text in the Bible affirming any one of them shall be made alive from the dead. Here we rest that point for the present. If any one chooses to take the affirmative on it we are ready to meet them.

(5.) Not necessarily, even supposing the wicked dead are to be raised into life; because you cannot prove they are raised immortal without equally proving "they are raised in glory."

If not raised immortal, they may die again; so that your "stumbling block" is as great as ours, to say the least.

(6.) We do "deny" that the doctrine of a revival into life of the wicked dead is "revealed" at all in the Bible.

(7.) We have no such "feeling." We rejoice in every word our Lord has spoken; and especially that he has told us, "they are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Luke xx. Whoever attains to a resurrection into life will find himself a child of God, and be as "the angels of God in heaven." Matt. xxii., 30. Is our Br. "rather sorry that Christ" said such things? We hope not.

(8.) So far as we, personally, are concerned, your "imagination" is lost; for we believe and teach there is only one "instalment of the penalty," viz., "death;" and when that takes place "the law of sin" holds eternal "dominion" over the entire man: so hath God appointed; the resurrection life, which is in Christ only, never reaches any except the "members of his body"—the church.

(9.) We are most happy here to be in perfect harmony with our Br. of The Advance.

That is just what we think. We bid him a hearty welcome to this part of our battle. The absurdity of making alive the wicked dead, or "recreating" them "to destroy" them "over again" is too great to be long believed by a thinking and reflective mind. Prejudice we know is hard to overcome, but it must sooner or later give way if men will allow themselves to think.

(10.) We hope those "annihilationists" who hold to the "error" of the reliving of the wicked dead, will lay these last remarks of The Advance to heart. Their theory must "break down" the whole of their system, if they persist in holding that error. They may be reluctant to believe it is so; but they will find it true. Our motto—"NO LIFE FUTURE OUT OF CHRIST" blazes out over the darkened horizon, and reveals the glorious fact that "The dead are raised incorruptible;" and all who awake from death shall "awake and sing" "O, death, where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be unto God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Isa. xxvi., 19, and 1 Cor. xv., 55–57. Blessed day.

ZION'S HERALD AGAIN.

WE took some notice of the statements, or rather assumptions of that paper, last week, one of which was, "No sinner is convicted or saint sanctified by this view" held by us of the destiny of wicked men. The statement we know is untrue; but we said but little, intending to leave God to be the judge in that matter; our business being to search for the truth and proclaim it, and leave the result with Him. That we do not have such exciting meetings as the Methodists do, may be true; but are those excitements evidence of true conversions to Christ and His truth? We were astonished, beyond measure, recently, by a statement made in The Methodist of this city, which goes to show that the vast majority of those supposed to be "converted" under the process of "convicting sinners" practised by the theology of Zion's Herald, turn out to be hypocrites, backsliders, or die soon after their supposed conversion. The statement made by The Methodist, we publish with deep regret. But such a disastrous result is liable to follow from what we regard as an unscriptural process of "convicting sinners" practised by Methodists, Baptists, and others, representing to them that they have "immortal souls, undying spirit, and that eternal torments await them," etc., thus producing an unhealthy excitement, ending in a profession of religion, for which the persons can give no rational account, only they are "saved from hell," as they suppose. No wonder they are soon found among the missing in the Methodist E. Church, who receive their converts on trial, or "probation," as it is called, for six months before receiving them to membership in full. Other churches fare worse than the Methodists, because these churches receive into full membership at once, and of course retain in full communion all the hypocrites and deceived souls to be dead weights on the body and carry it away into the world and its spirit, while the Methodists give such characters time to float off before they are in "full connection" with them; and "six months" reveal the terrible fact that the vast majority of their converts are hypocrites and backsliders, and they are happily rid of them by waiting a while before taking them into full fellowship. But do they ever think of the awful position in which they have placed this vast multitude of sinners? Most likely, the larger part of them are forever hardened against "conviction" in future, finding no solid ground of comfort or "sanctification" in their past experience, under the process which made them professors of religion. This backsliding, or falling away process, or terrible manifestation of the unavailable process of making converts by the awful idea that "their immortal souls will be eternally tormented, if they do not get religion," is made glaringly to appear by the following facts, from a paper of that church—The Methodist. Read its statements, and see if Zion's Herald has any cause to say of us, "No sinner is convicted," etc., by our views. The Methodist says:

In ten years—namely, from 1856 to 1865 inclusive—there were received on probation, throughout the bounds of our church, the vast number of 1,200,145! In 1856 we reported a full membership of 698,317. In view of the 1,200,000 probationers received in ten years, what ought to have been the membership in 1866. Would any one estimate the net increase during that time at less than 175,000? Yet here are the figures: In 1856 we had 698,317 members: in 1866 we had 871,113—showing a net increase in ten years of only 172,296, an average of but little over 17,000 a year, while the average number of probationers received during the same period was over 120,000 a year! What becomes of the thousands who swell the number of probationers while they do not add to the number of members?

We are well aware of some of the causes which necessarily retard the net increase of membership, but we cannot find in them sufficient reason to account for the vast discrepancy noticed above. While we could not expect to see our membership increased during the ten years by the full number of probationers taken during that period—namely, more than a million—we confess to a feeling of utter astonishment at the revelation made in these statistics of the very small proportionate increase in the time named. The figures tell us that this increase is only about one-seventh of the whole number of probationers received.

IMMORTAL SOUL DIFFICULTIES.

IT has long been acknowledged by some Bible students of the popular school that the immortality of the soul is not expressly taught in Scripture; but is therein assumed, taken for granted. Others of them, however, evidently feeling dissatisfied with the exposed position in which this, to them, important doctrine is thus left, and judging that so prominent an item in their theology must have received something more than mere passing recognition in inspired testimony, they have set about seeking positive proof of it. Numerous passages are produced and claimed as implying the existence of an immortal entity in each member of the human race, but these passages are all seen to be open to the no slight objection that they are of use only upon the assumption that man, formed of the dust of the ground, was first in possession of such imperishable consciousness. Failing to find any other text which they could hope to possibly construe into a declaration that God made such addition to Adam, of whose creation he definitely accounts, they conclude it must be contained in Gen. ii., 7, "the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground—breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Of those who think they find in this passage proof of man's natural immortality was Dr. Adam Clarke, who with great assurance wrote,

"In the most distinct manner God shows us that man is a compound being, having a body and a soul, distinctly and separately created; the body out of the dust of the earth, the soul breathed immediately from God himself. . . . Of the soul it is said, God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life."

No better evidence of the pitiable weakness of the inherent immortality theory could well be furnished than is afforded by the mournful spectacle of men of justly acknowledged eminence in ability and piety, in the face of the divine assertion that God "only hath immortality," resting their faith upon a lone passage by attaching to its language a meaning the very opposite of its plain, natural import; and that, too, when there exists no necessity for doing so, other than that of bolstering up a theory built upon assumption. We well know this is the best that can be done in service of their beloved dogma, but why need they be so blind as to do it at all? Oh, prejudice, thou inexorable task-master, hast thou no regard for thy servants that thou dost require them to descend into such depths of folly? Dr. Clarke represents a large class who have long contended that Gen. ii., 7, affords satisfactory evidence of the soundness of their position, but the whole account of creation so obviously sustains the contrary theory that many have relinquished all claim upon the text as favoring their view. This, it is fair to presume, they have been induced to do because of the light of truth thrown upon the subject by the efforts, under God, of those who maintain the Scripture doctrine of man's nature.

Lange's Scripture "Commentary" is an elaborate work recently published by "John P. Lange, D. D., in connection with a number of eminent European divines," and translated from the German, and edited, with additions, by Philip Schaff, D. D., assisted by a number of somewhat eminent American students of various religious denominations. The authors are inclined to the rendering of "became" instead of "was made" in 1 Cor. xv., 45; and commenting on the verse, say,

"The citation is from Gen. ii., 7, with the addition of the qualifying words 'first,' and 'Adam.' . . . The expression living soul, as used in Genesis, is often taken to indicate an order of being superior to the brute, and is the text of many an argument to prove the immortality of the soul. The incorrectness of this assumption will be readily seen by referring to Gen. i., 20, 21, 24, and elsewhere, in which passages the words translated 'living soul' are applied also to the entire lower creation. They are used indifferently of man and beast to express animal life in general; and it is in this light that the apostle uses them, as the very course of his argument shows. Adam is spoken of as a living soul, not to prove his immortality, but rather his mortality."

Now this concession is only the substance of what we who maintain that man is wholly mortal have asserted and proved hundreds of times, but were seldom acknowledged to be in the right for the reason, more than else, because it happened to be us instead of those in sympathy with modern orthodoxy on the subject, who stated the truth. What will they say now that so many eminent orthodox divines have given unqualified testimony to it, But see how the "Doctors disagree." Some confidently affirm of certain language that "in the most distinct manner God shows us that man is a compound being, having a body and a soul, distinctly and separately created," while others, with equal assurance, affirm the contrary. And this disagreement, be it remembered, occurs upon the only text so long claimed by so many of them as affording positive proof of the immortality of the soul; other texts being urged only as implying it. Can they who rest their faith upon so shaky a foundation be likened unto "a wise man which built his house upon a rock?" Whoever introduces the immortal soul theory into his doctrinal superstructure will surely some day witness its destruction as "wood, hay, stubble," and he will "suffer loss." These profound authors of Lange's "Commentary," after differing so widely from other members of their school, finally "swing around," in further remarks upon the same passage, and "come to anchor" within hailing distance of the position occupied by Dr. Clarke. Hear them:

"The only superiority ascribed to man in the history of creation, is found in the fact that God breathed into him the breath of life, and in this it is intimated that in the act of becoming a living soul, man was at the same time endowed with higher capacities, which brought him into relationship with God, and made him capable of communing with him, and so of rising to a spiritual existence."

Does the "only superiority ascribed to man in the history of creation" consist "in the fact that God breathed into him the breath of life?" Unto what animal, beside man, did God say, "subdue" the earth, "and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowls of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth?" Gen. i., 28. Was not this bestowment upon man of extraordinary powers and privileges an ascription of superiority in creation? Unto man a law was given, a fact which clearly establishes another fact, viz., that he was endowed with faculties of an order which qualified him to become the subject of moral obligations. We have no account that any other animal was subjected to such requirement. Did not, then, the imposition upon man of the obligations of moral law ascribe to him superiority "in the history of creation?" But, finally, is it true that the mere fact that God breathed into Adam "the breath of life" ascribes any inferiority to him? When the human race, except Noah and his family, had become so steeped in sin that they were unfit to live, God determined to destroy them, and he said to Noah, Gen. vi., 17, "Behold I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life." Again, "they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life." Of men and all animals not taken into the ark it is said, "all in whose nostrils was the breath of life" died. All animals that live by breathing are said to have the breath of life in them. How could they get it but by having it breathed into them, as man had? The record says of Adam that God breathed into him the breath of life and he—in consequence of that act, of course—became a living soul; and it says the other animals were living souls, and had the breath of life in their nostrils. How, then, can the expression "breathed," etc., ascribe a superiority to man? Are any so stupidly prejudiced as to be unable to see that God breathed the breath of life into all animals that live by breathing, just as truly as he did into man? Since, like man, they became "living souls" by having the breath of life breathed into them, a process which, related of man, intimates that in the act of becoming a "living soul" he was endowed with capacities which brought him into relationship with God, the conclusion is inevitable that the same process intimates that in the act of becoming living souls the whole breathing creation were endowed with such capacities, and brought into such relationship. Are our commentators willing to accept this conclusion?

Our learned authors reason backward. Man is not superior to other animals because a fuller account of his creation is given; but a more extended account of his creation is given because he was made superior to them. He was so organized as to be qualified for attainment to a vastly higher degree of intelligence than any other animal, and our learned commentators speak just the truth in saying he was "endowed with higher capacities, which brought him into relationship with God, and made him capable of communing with him, and so of rising to a spiritual existence." But where is the consistency in claiming, as being immortal soul believers they must, that man was endowed with a spiritual existence at his creation, and at the same time asserting that in the account of his creation it is "intimated" he was made capable of rising to such existence. In continuation they remark,

"But the possibilities here involved for leading a true, spiritual life, could only be carried out by his abiding in fellowship with God and partaking of the Divine Spirit." [So far very well.] "And had this been maintained by obedience, there is every reason to believe that the higher life of the spirit would have glorified the lower and made it partaker of immortality without the intervention of death. But by reason of the fall, this possibility was cut off, and man becoming animal, or as our version renders it, natural, in the very elements of his character, or in the springs of his existence, became at the same time mortal."

How expertly these logicians perform the feat, so common among theologians of the popular school, of getting sadly at variance wish themselves. One moment they take the ground that Adam was created mortal, but had he maintained a certain relationship with God he would have been made partaker of immortality; and at the very next, they assert that having failed to maintain it, he became mortal. It is clearly intimated in the narrative of creation that by reason of having the breath of life breathed into him, Adam became a "living soul;" a term acknowledged by them to be used in expression of mortality, but they affirm that by reason of the "fall" Adam became mortal. According to some of their arguments Adam was created neither mortal nor immortal. What a perfect nondescript he must have been. If any of our readers love puzzles they have an opportunity to satiate that love by an attempt to harmonize the positions and arguments found in the comments under consideration, or even to form a tolerably correct idea of what the writers wished to say. We cannot think that had they set out to mix up matters they would better have succeeded in doing it.

How hard they who are wedded to theory try to avoid speaking those truths which are seen to oppose their preconceived notions. Despite all efforts to hide truth, it shines, thanks to a beneficent God, clearer and brighter. When confusion is seen to cover the face of such as oppose its progress, let all whose minds are illuminated by it be encouraged to greater faithfulness. Many, in the earlier days of the Reformation, would gladly have severed their connection with papacy but dared not, fearing persecution. So now, multitudes in connection with popular religious organizations see the truth, and would joyfully bear testimony to it against the many errors and inconsistencies of the latter-day theology, but are deterred from it by the dread of religious ostracism. To all such we would say, dare to do your duty. If God be for you, care not who is against you, for the final triumph of truth is an eternally fixed fact. L. C. T.

THE HYMN BOOK.

THE hymn book is now ready, and will be sent off immediately. As to the contributions in money for the book, they fell much below our expectation, while the expense exceeded it a little. We have received twenty-nine dollars; (a few having contributed hymns by request;) while the expense of the first thousand if stereotyped would have been seventy-five dollars, and that, too, with a paper cover. After consultation with brethren in the office of the HERALD, it was thought best not to stereotype them, which made the cost of the thousand fifty-five dollars, without any incidental expenses, to say nothing of time expended in preparing MS. So the cost is five and one half cents each, and when sent by mail a trifle more than a half cent additional. Subsequently we deemed it prudent to have five hundred more struck off while in type, in hope of a market from some source from which to gather the balance of the outlay, in all thirty four dollars. It is hoped that the friends of truth will introduce them, and endeavor to bring the sales up to the first cost at least.

We propose to sell them for ten cents single, at our tent meetings; or, $1 per dozen, if sent by mail, postage paid. They contain fifty miscellaneous hymns; in which, the lovers of truth may sing their hope without having to cull, modify, or explain. We saw the propriety of substituting another hymn than the one chosen, in two or three instances; also of adding to some, and of leaving out in others.

We wish to acknowledge, with thankfulness, the assistance of Henry B. Allen, of Dover, Morris Co., N. J., in naming the music generally used to the hymns.

Orders may be sent to Box 4,658 New York. E. WOLCOTT.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Br. Wolcott is worthy of all praise for his labor in getting up a small collection of hymns for the use of social meetings. They are specially adapted for that purpose, and are nearly all particular metre. By some mistake, on the cover, it is said, "PUBLISHED BY THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION." It should have said, Published at the office of the Life and Advent Union. The UNION, as such, has not sanctioned this or any other hymn book. We trust it will not, without a careful examination by its Board of Directors, of each hymn issued by it, before it takes such responsibility.

This hymn book, got up by the labor and responsibility of Br. Wolcott, is good for the object he had in view; and we hope the sale of it will at least remunerate him for his trouble and expense. It is small, but neat in its appearance; and as we said, will answer all present purposes of social meetings; but for private meditation and devotion something different is needed, if hymns are desirable at all.

THE LIFE AND ADVENT MISSION TENT.

THIS tent was pitched at Rahway, N. J., on Saturday, Aug. 1. The first meeting was held in the evening of that day. The afternoon and evening proved rainy, and in consequence but few came to hear. We spoke from the text, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul." We compared this with Luke's account, "Lose himself or be cast away;" and referred to the fact that man was made of the dust of the ground. We also called attention to the popular error that an immortal soul was breathed into man's nostrils; and proved that man mada of the dust became a living soul by the addition of breath. That the oxygen in the air is conveyed through the nostrils to the lungs, where it mingles with the carbon which is in the blood, "for the life of all flesh is the blood," Lev. xvii., 14. If the blood is the life, then the spirit of the blood, or spirit of life is the air we breathe. If the man made of dust became a living soul by the addition of breath, then it is proper to call a dust man a soul, whether he is dead or alive.

Sunday was a beautiful day; but, to our regret, we found the fact that a tent meeting was being held in Rahway was not generally known. Our leading man, the good brother Wolcott, had returned to his home at Oceanport, on Friday, quite unwell. Br. Bishop had labored so hard (in the hot sun) to get the tent ready that he was hardly fit to preach on the Lord's day. By the way, this good brother is devoting all his time to the interest of the cause we hold so dear; yet he can scarcely obtain for his family the necessaries of life. This ought not to be. "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it not to me." A word to the wise is sufficient.

The attendance on Sunday was small; yet each meeting increased in numbers and in interest. In the evening the tent was about two-thirds full, with a goodly number outside. People came to the tent with lowering brows and a contemptuous sneer; but while they listened the brow relaxed, the sneer vanished; and when they left it was apparently in a thoughtful mood.

In the evening a shorthand writer, or reporter, was present and took down the discourse. If it is published, we hope our friends will send us a copy. A leading member of the Methodist church was also present, who put several questions, which were answered to the best of our ability. There was a great deal of bitter prejudice in this place, which to a degree has been overcome; and as the meetings are to continue through the week we have reason to expect a large attendance next Lord's day. The brethren greatly desire the presence of Geo. Storrs, that he may break to them the bread of life on that occasion. Can he refuse them? or rather, will his health permit him to go?

We wish to add a word about our meetings at Morristown. We had thought that through the busy week-day and evening, the people would not turn out, and the interest would flag: but to our surprise and joy such was not the case. The tent was filled up and a crowd outside every night. Br. Bishop regretted exceedingly the necessity of striking the tent. It would doubtless have been for the interest of the cause had it remained another week. Notwithstanding all our trials, deprivations and want, we feel greatly encouraged to go forward, knowing that the prize will be given at the end of the race. May God help us to work while the day lasts, and to build gold, silver, and precious stones. W. H. HANFORD.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA, July 11, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I write a few lines for the benefit of Br. LaFayette Norris, and the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE. As to "Eld. B.," or Eld. Buck, that cures by laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, I have some personal knowledge. I am now at Williamstown, 7 miles from Fredericksburg, at a meeting. I heard Eld. Buck preach last night; he is on his return from a tour in Ill. Last spring I was here, and heard this Eld. B. preach. There was a man in the congregation that had been healed by him, and he gave his testimony concerning it. He said, he had the asthma for a long time, (I do not recollect how long); he was so reduced he could not work, he could not sleep in a bed, and often his friends had to take him immediately to the door so he could get his breath, and his neighbors thought he would live but a short time; and indeed he thought so himself; and he said he was an awful wicked man; that he added an oath to almost everything he said. While in this situation Eld. B. came to hold meetings in his place, and he came to his house, and laid his hands on him in the name of the Lord, and prayed over him anointing him with oil. He went to meeting that night on foot, quite a distance; came home, went to bed, slept all night, and had never felt a return of the asthma since. When he found that he was healed, he, like the man that was healed of the leprosy, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God. He was as humble as a little child; it would rejoice the heart of any Christian to hear him talk about Jesus, and what He had done for him. I was at his house not long since, and he said he did not know but that he was as well as he ever was, and could do as much work as he ever did.

About three weeks ago, I was here again to meeting; for we have regular preaching here once in two weeks by Br. Lamphene; and there was a man that came six miles on foot to hear what Advent people believed; and after meeting I saw a brother Jones show this man his leg that had been healed by Br. Buck. He said that it had been sore for eighteen months; the bone was affected; and he could hardly endure it; the dreadful pain continued constantly, and he could not endure to have the weight of a hand laid upon it. He said he saw Eld. B. at meeting; and, after it was over, he asked him to come to his house and heal his leg. Eld. B. said he would do it then. Jones said the Eld. put his hand on his leg above the sore, and rubbed it down, and the pain went before his hand; and when he took it off the pain was gone, and it never had returned; his leg got well immediately, and it was as sound as the other. I saw him work the flesh and skin on the bone, and it was as loose as on the other leg.

Again, there is a brother Lamkie that is one of the little band here at this place, and he had a disease called the shingles, and it was very bad; he tried physicians, but could get no help; he could not cut his own firewood, he was so afflicted. He was not a Christian at that time, and when Eld. B. went to his house, he told him he must forsake his wicked ways, and turn to the Lord. Eld. Buck administered to him, and his sore began to heal, and is well. I saw him baptized. I heard him testify to these things, and to the goodness of God. He is an honest German, and they say, or his wife says, he is an altered man in his family.

Once more, and I will close. There was a young lady, Miss Melinda Jenson, of Watertown, Floyd Co., Iowa; she was lame in one of her hips; she could not walk without crutches; she had used them eight years; and if she dropped one of them she could not pick it up. She heard of Eld. B.'s healing, and she told her mother she was going where he was, and that she would never fetch her crutches back again. Accordingly she went with some that were going, though her mother opposed her, and the Eld. administered to her, and she was healed, so that she walked without her crutches the same day; and a few days after, she walked two miles and was baptized and walked back again.

Since I began this letter I have been to meeting in the grove, and Elder Lamphear says, he is acquainted with the girl, and he could testify that she is as sound as any person, and there is not a lady in Floyd Co. that can walk round the house any more sprightly or any quicker than she can. She gave her crutches to Eld. Buck, and he brought them to Williamstown, and I saw them. She was healed last February. Thus much I have written, may the Lord grant the over-credulous wisdom to leave this event with God, for if it is of men it will come to naught, and if it is of God (which I think it is) they can not overthrow it. Please read Mark xvi., 17, 18.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—We give the foregoing place in the HERALD for two reasons, only: first, it was called out by an inquiry of LaFayette Norris, a few weeks since: and second, our respect for Sr. Pitts. We will not question the statements of our Sr.; but at the same time, things of like character have been performed in this city and Philadelphia, where there was not even the pretence of any religion connected with the cures, but wholly by the power of the will of the operator and electricity from his hands. We think hundreds of such cases have occurred in this region within a few years. Supposing the cures in Iowa to be real, it does not follow that there is any supernatural agency acting in these cases. The operator may honestly think there is; but that does not make it so. He may be ignorant of his own magnetic power; and yet it may be wholly by that power that these cures are effected.

We make these remarks to put our friends on their guard, lest "the very elect" get "deceived" in these "last days of peril." Cleave to the Lord; but let us beware of giving countenance to fanaticism. It may seem all right at first, but let us take heed of claiming that such things are by "the mighty power of God." God works miracles for great and important purposes, or to establish and confirm some great and important truth; not for mere human gratification or individual relief. So it seems to us. We cannot therefore hastily believe in any of these pretended supernatural cures. We do not question the fact of the cures, but we are slow to attribute them to any supernatural agency.

FROM ELD. WM. ROWORTH.

NEW YORK, July 29, 1868.

BR. STORRS: It is forty-seven years to day since I first stood up in public to speak for my Master, in the place of my nativity; and my first text was 1 Timothy i., 15. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." But oh! how little I understood the import of this text at that time. Being converted under the preaching of the Methodists, I became doctrinated into their creed; hence the salvation brought to view in the text, I was taught to believe was a salvation from hell-torments; and for this purpose Christ came into the world to save sinners from hell-torments: and this horrible doctrine I preached for twenty-five years, with its kindred doctrines; such as the immortality of the soul; the consciousness of man in death; and their entrance into a sky kingdom at death; with the eternal misery of the lost. But oh! thanks be to my heavenly father for opening my eyes to see the true light; the light of life; that Christ Jesus came into the world to save us, not from a hell of torments, but from death; and this is the good news: life from the dead, by a Resurrection at the last day: and this life is in his Son. As John says, "He that hath the Son, hath life: but he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." And the same apostle says, "they shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth upon them." He shall be holden by the cords of his sins, and forever remain in the congregation of the dead: Prov. xxi., 16. And according to the testimony of David, he shall never see light. He shall be no more remembered, Job says.

I am astonished that many dear Brethren cannot see these plain and positive truths; which to my mind shine as a sunbeam. To me they are precious truths: and I am often led when contemplating them to cry out in the language of the poet,

"Oh for a trumpet voice,
On all the world to call;
To bid their hearts rejoice
In him who died for all.
For all, my Lord was crucified;
For all, for all, my Saviour died."

Yes, blessed be his name, he has made ample provision for all the human race: and the invitation is to all, Come. The joyful proclamation is that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And this life is to be given at his second coming: as the apostle says, "When he who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." My longing heart cries in the language of the apostle John, "Even so come Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Amen.

FROM WM. B. DAVIS.

ROCHESTER, N. Y. July 25, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I am much pleased with the reply to Rev. Wm. D. Bridge in the HERALD OF LIFE of the 22d inst. It expresses my views and feelings ever since 1845. I am well aware of every fact therein stated. God bless you ever in holding up the truth and light of the same to this sinful world, knowing the time is short in which we have to labor in the cause. Yes, God has a cause, and He will take care of it as He has ever done. So will He also of every one that trusts in Him. O, to be Christ-like; all must be spotless. Yes, we must be patient, loving and kind: bearing one with another, in all meekness and humility, no evil-speaking, or evil-surmisings. Rebuking, if need be, in the spirit of love and of Christ. What blessings will follow such a course. Why? Because this is God's way. And to be his we must walk in his way. Unless we do so, how can we have life through Christ? He died for us in vain, and rose for our condemnation, instead of our justification, if we are not found walking as He also walked. God will help us if we look to him for aid and strength to follow in Christ's steps; thus shall we become partakers in the Divine nature. God loves the willing and obedient: they shall eat the good of the land; for the meek shall inherit the earth: the pure in heart shall see God.

Brethren and Sisters, you all want to see God; let us live looking for that blessed hope. I wish to see there all the loved ones. My heart sighs for home. How glorious shall we appear when we see Jesus as he is, and are made like him! Come, then, Lord Jesus; let us have the glorious bodies. Amen. Even so, come Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Let us all remember His words, "Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation; what I say unto you, I say unto all, WATCH." Father, help.

I wish the HERALD to live.

CHURCH AND CONFERENCE ORGANIZATIONS.

IN 1843 and '44 Joshua V. Himes, then a prominent leader in the definite time movement under Wm. Miller, said, "If we ever become a sect we shall be the youngest daughter of the mother of harlots."

This was said in denial of the charge that he and others were seeking to raise up a new sect. Since that time it seems a great change has taken place. What does he now think of the organizations continually going on with his associates in the shape of churches and conferences? This, too, while they profess to be waiting for the immediate return of our Lord from heaven. Advent preachers go into a place, wake up an interest—an excitement—persuade the people to come to anxious seats, get them to say they feel better, and thank the Lord another soul is born, forgetting that the new birth is the resurrection from the dead, of which Christ is our example. He was the "first born."

Having got the converts thus far, they must be harnessed to the Advent sect. This is done by assembling the neighborhood as witnesses; then, not "by one Spirit," but by water "are ye all baptized into one body"—Advent body, of course. Thus, by management, the persons are carried into church organizations. Have they not thus become identified with the "Youngest Daughter of the Mother of Harlots?" It seems clear to me they have; but Br. Braghard sends word to the organ of the sect that he is doing a great work in Sinful Hollow; that he has converted and baptized seventy souls (more or less), and organized them into a church, and gives notice that "no hobby riders are wanted in this section." As much as to say, "We have our sect nicely fixed, and they must not know anything only what we teach them." This is the very spirit of the old "mother of harlots," and shows what a true prophet J. V. H. was in 1843 and '44.

Christ taught life for the righteous only. Peter, Paul, and each of the apostles were "hobby riders," and they "turned the world upside down," and not the world only, but the religionists of their age. Throughout this Christian age the children of God might have remained worthy communicants of the "mother church" had they let their "hobbies" alone. The Adventists themselves might have remained in communion with their elder sisters—the very respectable "daughters" of Madam—and not have been compelled to take the seat of "the youngest daughter," if they had not made a "hobby" of the Lord's coming and, especially, if they had not been "riding" that little "hobby," "definite time," of his coming. A "hobby" is all the go with them; but nobody else must have one but themselves!

Having organized the "youngest daughter," the next thing is to prevent all who can't wear her garments from preaching among them, lest some one might take a notion to alter the cut of their dress somewhat—and "that would make divisions." The only way to prevent that is to organize "conferences"—state and national—at which every minister is obliged to show his hand. If he agrees with the leader or leaders of that conference he may work in the vineyard. But if he is Christ's free man, and refuses to be joined to, and be defiled by the woman (or "youngest daughter,") and dares to differ from her, then he is denounced as an unsafe man—"a hobby rider." They cannot burn him at the stake, but they might as well, so far as the principle is concerned; for they rest not till they can make all their churches think he is a bad man.

I regard these church and conference organizations as the curse not only of this age, but of every age since the Christian era. They cripple every attempt to advance in knowledge by practically saying, "hitherto shalt thou go, and no farther." The true saints knowing that the word of God is to "shine more and more unto the perfect day," have refused to be chained up to an iron bedstead—an organization which will not move forward at the command of God. They have prayed and searched the Scriptures, and when "In thy light" they have "seen light," they have followed it, and declared their faith boldly and manifested it by their works. Conferences, churches and councils have cursed them, but God has blessed them. Men of the world found it to their interest to go with the conferences and councils, and so "exercised authority over them." God's loved ones object to this harlotism, and they are called "hobby riders" in order to disgrace them and destroy their influence. So it has gone, and so it does go on to this day.

It is strange that this spirit should find place among those professing to be looking for the Lord's coming as an event at the door. Let me say to any one engaged in such business that you are preparing a rod for your own back. Those organizations will do for formal professors and hypocrites; they are just such a cloak as their nakedness, or their destitution of the power of religion, needs, to help on in their delusions and self-deceptions. Without such covering nobody would mistake their true character as mere worldlings. Their daily lives, tempers and manners would ever lead one to suppose they were Christ's followers.

Avoid all these human church organizations. It is the tares that are to be "bound in bundles." See that your "name is written in heaven," and that you have, "by one Spirit, been baptized into one body"—"the body of Christ;" and let love to this one Head so diffuse itself through your entire being that it shall involuntarily flow out to every one who manifests the mind of Christ. Let no sectarian walls be thrown around you by any one, however good their intentions may be. Remember, "He whom the Son makes free is free indeed." Give party politics a wide berth; and remember you are on trial for life eternal—that you are now in the judgment; that the account will soon be closed, and the execution of the sentence take place. Solemn thought! May God help us now.

NEW YORK, July 29, 1868.

FOR DIARRHŒA.—Parch a half pint of rice until it is perfectly brown. Boil it down as is usually done, and eat it slowly, and it will check, if not entirely stop the most violent diarrhœa in a few hours. Ordinarily a little brandy, say half a wineglassful, with loaf sugar dissolved in it, will have the same effect. However, it is better in all cases to avoid alcohol as a medicine if other antidotes can be had. In the more obstinate cases, where brandy is used, its efficacy is increased by stirring it with a red hot iron.

PURER AIR.

This is my attic room. Sit down, my friend;
My swallow's nest is high and hard to gain;
The stairs are long and steep; but at the end
The rest repays the pain.

For here are peace and freedom; room for speech
Or silence, as may suit a changeful mood:
Society's hard by laws do not reach
This lofty altitude.

You, hapless dwellers in the lower rooms,
See only bricks, and sand, and windowed walls:
But here, above the dust and smokey glooms,
Heaven's light unhindered falls.

So early in the street the shadows creep,
Your night begins while yet my eyes behold
The purpling hills, the wide horizon's sweep,
Flooded with sunset gold.

The day comes earlier here. At morn I see
Along the roofs the eldest sunbeam peep,
I live in daylight, limitless and free,
While you are lost in sleep.

So all who walk steep ways, in grief and night
Where every step is full of toil and pain,
May see, when they have gained the sharpest height,
It has not been in vain.

Since they have left behind the noise and heat:
And, though their eyes drop tears, their sight is clear;
The air is purer, and the breeze is sweet,
And the blue heaven more near.

DOG BARRY.

THERE is in the museum at Berne an object which attracts universal attention from visitors. It is only the skin of a rough, hairy dog, stuffed and set up so as to look as natural as life. But that dog had a history. His home was the convent of St. Bernard, away on an Alpine summit. There in pleasant weather he was wont to roll about and play in the porch with his fellows as jolly as any dog. But when the storm came on and rough weather set in, Barry nerved himself for the serious business of life; with a little casket of meat and drink tied under his neck and a warm blanket strapped on his back, he set out in search of lost travellers in those fearful passes. Never a fall of snow so heavy or a fog so thick but Barry could find his way, and his keen scent could discover a traveller at a great distance. If they were not too benumbed to walk, the noble fellow refreshed them with the food he brought, and gladly parted with his warm cloak, and then went bounding joyfully onward to show them the way. If they were fast sinking into unconsciousness, he would warm them with his breath and tongue, pull at their clothes, and if all his efforts failed, he would dash off for other help. Forty poor wanderers owed their lives to noble Barry. Surely he had earned a warm, comfortable home in the valley when his age of service was over, and this honorable niche in the museum when his short life was over. There he stands with bottle and collar about his neck, as if ready to start on his old mission. Some people live all through a long life and never accomplish as much good as this dog.

STRIKE THE KNOT.

"STRIKE the knot!" said a gentleman one day to his son, who, tired and weary, was leaning on his axe over a log which he had in vain been trying to cleave. Then, looking at the log, the gentleman saw how the boy had hacked and chipped all around the knot without hitting it. Taking the axe, he struck a few sharp blows on the knot and split the log without difficulty. Smiling, he returned the axe to his son, saying:

"Always strike the knot!"

That was good advice. It is good for you, my children, as it was for the boy to whom it was first given. It is a capital maxim to follow when you are in trouble. Have you a hard sum to do at school? Have you got to face a difficulty? Are you leaving home to live for the first time among strangers? Strike the knot! Look your trouble in the eye, as the bold lion-hunter looks in the face of a lion. Never shrink from a painful duty, but step right up to it and do it. Yes, strike the knot! Strike the knot, my boys and girls, and you will always conquer your difficulties. —Sunday-School Advocate.

DYING SISTER.

LITTLE Anna lay in bed, near the window. The deep flush of fever was on her cheeks. In the same room was her brother Robert, busily engaged in making a ship. His poor sister could ill bear the noise of the hammer; but he worked on as though he did not trouble himself much about her. Was he not an unkind boy?

"Do please, dear Robert, give me a glass of water! my throat is so dry, and my head aches so very much," said Anna, in a gentle voice. Again was the loud knocking of the hammer heard; and once more Anna begged for a glass of cold water, when Robert called out sharply:

"Wait a minute, Anna; I can't fetch it yet." At last he poured out a glass, from a jug which was warm from standing where the sun shone brightly upon it.

"Oh, not that water, Robert; please fetch me a little fresh and cool from the spring."

"Don't plague me so, Anna, you see how busy I am. I am sure that this water is quite good enough."

Knock, knock went the hammer again.

"Oh, my poor head," said the invalid, softly, as she took the glass, drank a little and lay back on the pillow.

That was the last time that Anna asked Robert for a proof of brotherly love. The next day she died; and as the little coffin stood in the room ready to be carried to the grave, no one shed more bitter tears than the little boy who would rather have his own selfish way than listen to the wishes of his dying sister.—Band of Hope Review.

A BLESSED PEOPLE.

BY B. MATHIAS.

[Concluded from last week.]

2.—THE BLESSING OF ALL AMELIORATION.

IT is a blessing to live to see the end of intolerance and persecution, and to enter upon a new era of light, liberty, enterprise and refined civilization; of letters and science, and best of all, the recovery of the holy Scriptures, ("The books were opened;") best understood and appreciated by such as are in the "secret of the Lord." A time when the just strike a path which "shines more and more unto the perfect day." A time when the "power of the holy people ceases to be scattered;" and when "many run to and fro and knowledge is increased."

Up to the ending of the days before named, the veil was upon all hearts; the prophecies shone in a "dark place;" fit representation. "Darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the people;" and this "until the day dawn," another fit representation of the past. Other Scriptures present the same figure. "Whose going forth is prepared as the morning." "Who is this that looketh forth as the morning." "The morning cometh." "The day is at hand." "Sorrow may remain for a night, but joy will come in the morning."

We have seen the deep distress through which both Jews and Christians have waded in those long centuries; and we live to see the dense darkness lifted; revealing a bright horizon.

The Jews, who have served as an unmistakable sign, began to improve in condition everywhere, according to the author above quoted, in the reign of Queen Anne. In 1775. A bill was passed in the reign of George II. for the naturalization of the Jews. Every one is familiar with recent acts in their favor.

Do not these simple facts afford pretty good evidence, that "the times of the Gentiles" have ended? Try this suggestion by the Scriptures. Said our Lord, "Wrath upon this people; and they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the time of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled." Luke xxi., 23, 24. Moses warned the Jews of a punishment of seven times, for their sins, Lev. xxvi., which punishment has certainly ended. If any say, "The time is not out," we can say expressly, The punishment is. And let it be remembered there was to be no commutation of their punishment. "The consumption decreed shall overflow with righteousness." Isa. x., 22. "Make it desolate even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate." Dan. ix., 27. "Unto the end of the war desolations are determined."

This time of blessing is predicted by all the prophets of the Lord who have been "since the world began." Isaiah represents this time thus, "Say unto her that her warfare is accomplished." The Psalmist thus, "The set time has come to favor her." Others, "Fulness of times." The "day dawn and day star rising in your hearts." All times before this were like the night, when the prophecies were as a light shining in a dark place. The search and study were pursued under great disadvantages. Once, in the "Time of the end," these two things are gained, according to St. Peter. Light outside and in. The day breaks, and "the day star rises in the hearts" of the wise.

In order to profit by reading and hearing the word, we must have our hearts as well as our heads interested. We require grace as well as intellect in the work. Oil in our vessels, as well as in our lamps. We must have faith, as well as words. We need inspiration to read what is inspired; in other words to be in sympathy with the prophets, and apostles, with Jesus and his Father, and to be in the goodly fellowship of all saints. The day star will rise in every willing heart, while the day dawn breaks over all, and brings all imaginable blessings. Said Moses, many centuries since, "The Lord shall open to them his good treasure; the heaven to give the rain unto the land in his season." As if the windows of heaven were to be opened and all good things poured out upon them in richest plenty. I am here reminded that the "latter rain" is a figure of this blessed time. Its use is to ripen harvests and fruits. Surely this is a ripening time. A time of all extremes. The "latter rain" is spoken of by the prophets in a way that makes them types of the last days. The great refreshing time. Jeremiah connects it with "the appointed weeks of the harvest." Jer. iii., 3. Hosea, "Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord, his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto you as the rain, as the latter and the former rain unto the earth." vi., 3. "Ask ye the Lord rain, in the time of the latter rain; so the Lord shall make bright clouds, and give them showers of rain; to every one grass in the field." Zech. x., 1.

It may be asked, why are we not blessed, if this blessed time has arrived? We are immensely. We might answer, however, why did not the people to whom Moses promised every blessing, make their threshing reach unto the vintage and the vintage unto the sowing time? and eat their bread without scarceness, and dwell safe in the land? lie down and none make them afraid? Simply because, "when the gospel was preached unto them they did not mix it with faith." Heb. iv., 2. There have been some who are like "the heath in the desert, do not see when good comes;" they are not refreshed by the "latter rain."

Whatever apology there may be for believing too much; so much as to underrate present blessings, "despising the day of small things" (so esteemed) not accepting of the "latter rain," for the thing promised to be in the "time of the end," because it is not a flood, or because it does not give you your bread ready baked; such faith or fanaticism, cannot induce God to compromise his plan, or abate the force of disappointment.

It remains for us all to accept of the "situation" gladly; and seek an explanation of the times. There is no doubt the prophetic numbers are ended, (in my opinion). Really, it is not a matter of so much difficulty, as we have been wont to believe, to ascertain the beginning and ending of the 2,300 years, or the 1,335 years. The greater difficulty is in having the right theory of those times. These numbers are a part of the "sure words of prophecy." The reputation of the "wonderful numberer," is involved in the matter. If there is real uncertainty about the dates of their beginning, then there is nothing wonderful in that personage called "the wonderful numberer," and Daniel is not a peculiar prophet, after all; and the great God is involved in the responsibility, for He was and is, head and front of this whole thing.

Will not twenty-five years' study, among the devout and wise of all countries suffice to do a few sums in addition and subtraction? If these numbers begin at a known date, they will end their given number of years so long afterward. Nobody will stop to dispute that.

In the next place, if the time to begin these numbers cannot safely be (readily) known, why give them to the church, for their use is computation?

If so much uncertainty must enter into the search, it must, by so much, reflect upon the accuracy, if not veracity of Gabriel's statements, with all concerned. Why give the church the prophecy of Daniel at all? Its peculiarity and utility is mainly its chronology. If we have not been in the last years of the 1,335 before this, we are now. I cannot see how it can be for the credit of Gabriel or Daniel, or for God's glory, to suppose any other date for the beginning of these times.

We will, I trust, overhaul our theories. Perhaps we have dropped what we ought to have cherished, and retained what we ought to have dropped. I am assured for myself we can never have another "midnight cry." That in which we had a voice answered to the parable accurately. And was given as a sign, among others, of the immediate kingdom; which signs, taken together form the "Sign of the Son of Man." It will be remembered, the disciples said, "What shall be the sign of thy coming?" He gave them a series, which himself pronounced, "The sign of the Son of Man in heaven."

The chief blessing of this time is, to know that we have come to the "last end of the indignation" (being perhaps the end of the 1,290 years) occurring, as shown above, in 1823. The Jews in Great Britain were socially emancipated in 1775; from that time onward all nations have moved in the same direction. From 1840 to 1848, the Pope, the Sultan, the Czar, all moved in the same way. In my humble opinion the Jews to-day are enjoying the only kind of restoration there can be for them, except they believe in Christ and become "heirs according to promise."

The knowledge of this end and other great matters was suspended until the "time of the end."

Who can but admire this wisdom of reservation of knowledge on these numerical prophecies until the last generation, when these prophecies become appropriate and practical?

This is an accepted time to the thoughtful. It is as if the Lord had returned to the earth "with mercies." The great "pool" is set in motion. God is propitious. He will "hear before we ask, and answer while we are yet speaking." There is nothing we may not have by asking for it. And it is nothing remarkable nor peculiar that we have not found out our privileges in this time. Our race are always behind time with our Maker.

Everything in promises is coming due. We may have comforts, conveniences, means, renewal of strength, and so on. Says David, "He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever." Psa. xxi., 4. "Thou wilt prolong the king's life, and his years as many generations." Psa. lxi., 6. Next verse. "He shall abide before God forever. O prepare mercy and truth which may preserve him." In another psalm it is written, "We shall not die." The same in Hab. i., 12. To encourage this confidence, read Isa. xl., 28–31. Also John xi., 25, 26.

Let us consider our position in relation to Christ, his coming and kingdom at the doors, and the rewards that await all the saints; and our certain knowledge of the fact, that all these are just here upon us. We know by infallible proofs, in the form of universal indications; by many particular signs; by the testimony of our Saviour; by the prophecy of Daniel. We need only notice in particular the symbol of the toes of the metallic image, Dan. ii., "part iron and part clay." What do these materials represent? In my opinion these symbols give us the best defined condition of things of any other prophecy in the whole book. A notion obtained in 1840, and onward, that the toes of the feet answered to the ten horns upon the terrible beast of chap. vii. I wish to respect respectable person's opinions, but in this case I will decline, and with good reason, as you may see:

1. The ten horns have their rise in the sixth century 1,300 years and more before the toes were due.

2. The ten horns were reduced to seven or eight at most at the rise of popery.

3. The Romans and the barbarians of those times, "cleaved as well as mingled." As far as popery was concerned, it was not then, nor has been, nor will be disinclined to "cleave" to anything, or any people that will be so inclined; beside, imperial laws were passed to enforce a union of all people and all religions. There were some who would not accept of the union. They were not, however, the ten horns, or seven or eight horns; but the sterling believers, and the determined Jews. All others did "cleave."

4. As the "iron and clay are certainly intended to represent well defined conditions in governments and kingdoms, it would be quite fanciful and speculative to assume that the iron was papacy, and the clay the ten kingdoms, or that the clay was papacy and the ten horns the iron? For the settlement of such a question you have no data.

But allowing the toes of the feet to be in their natural place in chronology, and forming the last condition of the "kingdom of men," being a kingdom divided against itself," which cannot stand; being in such a case "that the hearing of the report of it shall be a vexation." The more than doubtful strength of these fabrications the more the certainty of the speedy downfall of such a heavy structure upon iron and clay. A little jostle must bring it down.

Again, the extreme degeneracy signified by a descent from gold to iron and clay, "Giveth the kingdom to the basest of men." Again, the stone smites it upon the feet. Feet are not in the knees; but where feet out to be. So much is plain to be seen. Now are we in the feet and toes of this image? Who doubts it? If we are, then it is our privilege to look around for an illustration of this prophecy in the social and political aspect of the world.

Does my reader know of any form of power in any country with which the people are satisfied? Does not the symbol of iron and clay represent antagonism? Rome, certainly, in its kingly state answered to the iron as the preceding kingdoms did to their appropriate metals of brass, silver and gold. But in this last condition another element enters, that questions the right of absoluteism and the divine rights of reigning houses. It takes the form of revolution, brings monarchs to a parley, and extorts concessions, forces them to accept of representations to give charters and constitutions. We have not forgotten the great earthquake of 1848, that shook forty kingdoms or more, small and great, which cast princes to the earth like fallen stars. "Mingling with the seed of men," extemporaneously: finally and officially in conventions. Kings and peasants in the same council, on the same floor. The tendency is not to cleave; the conflict between the iron and the clay is "irrepressible." The situation of our country represents the kind.

The Holy Spirit has given us this well-defined estate of kingdom to be at the time the kingdom of heaven may be looked for. Kings have lost prestige. Their acts are freely criticised; their right of power questioned; many rule by sufferance. This being so we know the kingdom of heaven is due. "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom."

"THE SMOKE OF THEIR TORMENT."

THE Harlot groans while God is causing her flesh to be eaten preparatory to her final burning with fire. The harlot is losing her paramours one by one, and Austria, on whom she has doated so long, has come at length to despise her, and the forsaken harlot wails in the following strains, called "THE PAPAL ALLOCUTION," delivered last June in the secret consistory. It reads:

"VENERABLE BRETHREN: We should never have imagined that, after the convention agreed to nearly thirteen years ago between us and the Emperor and Apostolic King of Austria, to the great joy of all well-minded men, we should be obliged to lament upon the miseries and serious misfortunes which, by the machinations of evil-disposed men, now afflict and annoy in a deplorable manner the Catholic Church in the Empire of Austria. In fact, the enemies of our divine religion have been unceasing in their efforts to destroy the said convention, and to do the greatest harm to the church, to us, and to this Apostolic See. On the 21st of December last, the Austrian government passed an odious law, to be carried out and strictly observed in every district of the Empire, even in those districts where the Catholic religion exclusively prevails. That law establishes free liberty for all opinions—liberty of the press, of all faith, and no matter what confesson or doctrine; it grants to the members of every confession the right of establishing public schools and colleges, and members of every confession are allowed to be admitted on the same footing, with the sanction of the State. Although we felt great grief on being informed of the fact, and wished to raise our voice against it, we nevertheless gave proof of forbearance, and we deemed it advisable then to keep silent, chiefly supported by the hope that the Austrian Government, lending a docile ear to the just complaints of our venerable brethren (the holy prelates of Austria), would return to more wholesome ideas and adopt a sounder determination. But our hopes have been frustrated. In fact the same government, on the 25th of May of this present year, issued another law which compels all the subjects, even the Catholic ones of the Empire, deciding that sons born of a mixed marriage must follow the religion of the father, and the daughters that of the mother; and that under seven years of age they must follow in the stray path of their parents from the true faith. Moreover, the same law suppresses entirely the validity of the promises which the Catholic Church, with reason and with the greatest justice, exacts and prescribes absolutely before the celebration of mixed marriages. It makes apostasy itself a civil law both as regards the Catholic religion and the Christian religion generally; it suppresses all authority of the church over cemeteries, and Catholics are bound to allow the bodies of heretics to be buried in their churchyard if they have not any of their own. Moreover, the same government, on the said 25th day of May of this present year, did not hestate to promulgate a law on marriage which entirely cancels all the enactments agreed to in the convention already alluded to. This law restores the former Austrian laws, which are contrary to the laws of the church; it admits, and even confirms, that form of marriage absolutely condemnable, called civil marriage, when the authority of any confession whatever refuses the celebration of the marriage on grounds which are not admitted as valid as legal by the civil authorities. By this law, this same government has suppressed all the authority and jurisdiction of the church on matters relative to marriage, as also all competent ecclesiastical tribunals on the subject. It has also promulgated a law on education, which suppresses all the influence of the church over educat'o', decreeing that the whole superior supervision of education, literature, and science, as also the inspection of schools, appertains to the State, which finally decrees that religious teaching in the public schools must be placed in the hands of members of each separate confession; that any religious society may open private or special schools for the youth of its faith; that those schools shall also be subject to the supreme inspection of the State, and that the school books shall be submitted to the approval of the civil authorities, with the exception, however, of such books as are meant for religious instruction, books which must be submitted to the approval of the competent authorities of each confession. You see, consequently, venerable brethren, how necessary it is strongly to reprove and condemn those abominable laws sanctioned by the Austrian Government—laws which are in flagrant contradiction with the doctrines of the Catholic religion, with its venerable lights, its authority, and its divine institution, with our power and that of the Apostolic See, as also with our concordat already quoted, and with natural right itself. In virtue, then, of the care of all churches entrusted to us by the Lord Jesus Christ, we raise our voice in your most illustrious assembly; we reprove and we condemn by our apostolic authority, the laws which we have enumerated, and everything, general or special, in those same laws, or in matters which refer to ecclesiastical right which has been decreed or attempted unjustly, in any manner whatsoever, by the Austrian Government, or its subordinates, whomsoever they may be. In virtue of this same authority which appertains to us, we declare those decrees null and powerless in themselves and in their effect, both as regards the present and the future. As regards the authors of those laws, especially those who congratulate themselves on being Catholics, and have not feared to propose, establish, approve, and carry out the above laws and acts, we conjure and entreat them not to forget the censures and spiritual punishments which the ecclesiastical institutions and the decrees of the œcumenical councils inflict, as having been deserved ipso facto by the violators of the rights of the church. Meantime, we rejoice greatly in the Lord, and we give our well-deserved praise to our venerable brothers, the archbishops and bishops of the Austrian Empire, who, with truly episcopal energy, have not ceased to warn their flocks of their duties boldly to defend and protect, by speech as well as writing, the cause of the church and the said concordat concluded with us. We also desire from our hearts that our venerable brothers, the archbishops and bishops of Hungary, following the example of their colleagues, will show themselves disposed to display the same zeal and the same ardor to protect the rights of the church and defend the said concordat against the attacks which are directed against it. Nevertheless, under these calamities, which in these sad times afflict the church everywhere, we do not cease, venerable brothers, with the deepest fervor and humility of heart, to pray to God that he may upset all the criminal designs of his enemies and those of his holy church, suppress their impious efforts, and in his mercy, lead them back into the paths of justice and salvation."

The spirit of the foregoing shows that popery is unchanged in its intolerant character; but God has "broken its teeth," so it can do little else than howl and groan. "The smoke of her torment ascendeth up forever and ever," and will terminate in her being "utterly burned with fire."

PAST EXPERIENCE.—We cannot see by the light of yesterday, nor subsist upon yesterday's food. We need supplies every moment. So long as we feel our weakness, and lean upon an almighty arm we are safe, but no longer.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 90 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY; by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTERS TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburg, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for 2 cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our own expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12mo. Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price, 5 cents.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to GUESS them out. Also in ordering, the name of the POST OFFICE, COUNTY, AND STATE must be given, and written plainly; and if a CHANGE is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters confusion and delay are inevitable.

FROM REV. AMBROSE RONDTHALER.

BETHLEHEM, PA., August 3, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Your affectionate remarks following my letter of the 20th ult., which you kindly published in the HERALD OF LIFE, were "cold water to thirsty souls." Thank you, and again we say, thank you. Your words were in consonance with those of St. Paul to the Thessalonians—"Wherefore comfort one another with these words." Is not the risen and coming Jesus the bond between those still here and those asleep in Him? By faith we look to the Coming One, and this helps us to look on the grave of our Alice with unsorrowing love. "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

How sweet the comfort of your words! And how different such comfort from the comfort of those who do not believe as we do! Still, often their comfort is well-meant—and, therefore, worthy of thanks. Do we not find in the Bible acts of love, which were not always acts of faith? And are not some of them noticed and commended by the God of Love? How touching, for example, the words of St. Luke, "And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments." And the words of St. Mark—"They had brought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him." Love, deep love! But, had they believed that Christ would really rise again on the third day, as He had often told them, these deeds of love would have been left undone. The Lord bless all who show their warm, Christian sympathy and kindness—and the Lord bless George Storrs.

Thank you for inserting the views thrown out on the Parable of the "Sower and the Seed," as also for your invitation to become a regular correspondent of the HERALD OF LIFE. The Lord willing, I shall write from time to time.

Many are the subjects connected with the glorious Life theme; and many, blessed be the Lord, have been well explained. Dark, 'tis true, are some passages, and they remind us of St. Peter's words in speaking of St. Paul's Epistles—"In which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction."

But, although there are dark passages, still they do not startle us in our faith. One of the mightiest words written by Br. Storrs are the following: "God is Love," and any construction of his word that contradicts this testimony, must be erroneous, however plausible it may appear.

Often these difficult passages are quoted by those opposing our views; and sometimes they trouble those who are almost persuaded that we are right. One of these passages is the following: "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Thess. v., 23. Those, who do not think as we do, find difficulties as well as we, in these words of St. Paul. Permit me to transcribe the following extracts from Lange's Commentary on the Epistles of Paul to the Thessalonians by C. A. Auberlen and C. J. Riggenbach, translated from the German, with additions by John Lillie, D. D. New York: Charles Scribner and Co., 654 Broadway. 1868.

"The phrase, spirit, soul, body, is not a mere rhetorical amplification (De Wette), nor yet of itself a proof of a trichotomy of human nature (Olsh.) borrowed by Paul from Philo (or Plato). The phraseology of Scripture is as exact as it is popular; but it does not favor such a division.

"The pneuma, spirit, is the essence quickened, emancipated, become dominant through regeneration by the Spirit of God, and that by means of which man is lord of nature and of the flesh. Of this there is mention here. May your spirit, in which God's Spirit dwells and rules be kept safe. It cannot be the Holy Spirit Himself, for he can suffer no hurt."

Further, on page 95 we read—

Alford: "To pneuma is the spirit, the highest and distinctive part of man, the immortal and responsible soul, in our common parlance; Psuche is the lower or animal soul, containing the passions and desires which we have in common with the brutes, but which in us is ennobled and drawn up by the pneuma. That St. Paul had these distinctions in mind, is plain (against Jowett) from such places as 1 Cor. ii., 14. The spirit, that part whereby we are receptive of the Holy Spirit of God, is, in the unspiritual man, crushed down and subordinated to the animal soul: he therefore is called Psychikos, having not the spirit. Jude 19."

Page 96 we read:

"To assert that enumerations like the present are rhetorical or worse, that the Apostle probably attached no distinct thought to each of these words, (Jowett) is plainly to set aside all sound rules of Scriptural exegesis. Again, to admit the distinctions, but to refer them to Platonism is equally unsatisfactory, and equally calculated to throw doubt on the truth of the teaching. If St. Paul's words do here imply the trichotomy above described . . . . then such a trichotomy is infallibly real and true. And if Plato or Philo have maintained (as appears demonstrable) substantially the same views, then God has permitted a heathen and a Jewish philosopher to advance conjectural opinions which have been since confirmed by the independent teaching of an inspired Apostle."—J. L.

All this, Br. Storrs, is unsatisfactory. However, it shows the difficulties which surround these words even for those who think differently from us.

Halsted's explanation (page 298, The Theology of the Bible) is the following:

"But, or, indeed, may the God of peace of mind—and may complete the pneuma, and the psuche, and the soma of you, the breath, and the life and the person of you. Where pneuma and psuche (both meaning breath) come together as here, one of the secondary meanings of psuche is to be used. The pneuma and the psuche, are to be rendered, the breath and the life; and these being immediately followed by, and the soma, the sōma here means the living person. So that the three words together express the complete living person, as the result of breath and life and soma."

This explanation seems good, and it may be the correct one. My views are the following:

"Man became a living soul." Gen. ii., 7. "The first Adam was made a living soul." 1 Cor. xv., 45. Soul and body stand for the entire being, such as all are in their mortal state. That which is born of the flesh is flesh: and that which is born of the spirit is spirit. Believers have a spirit given them; and this spirit is the germ of the anastasis, of the resurrection.

"It is sown a natural (psuchikon) body; it is raised a spiritual (pneumatikon) body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body." 1 Cor. xv., 44.

To say to an unbeliever, may your soul and body (your entire being) be converted, would sound strange, but it would not be unbiblical. But to say to an unbeliever, may your spirit, soul and body be converted, would not only sound strange but would be unbiblical. An unbeliever has no spirit in the sense in which Paul here uses the word.

Paul's meaning seems to me to be this: may the spirit (given you and which is the germ of the resurrection) and your soul and body (your present being, your individuality) be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. I might bring in more passages to strengthen my view. However, enough has been written.

I do not by any means pretend to say that my explanation of this passage is the correct one; and, perhaps, it is of no value. I would speak with modesty and reserve. If my explanation can be refuted and a better one be given, I shall be very thankful. I may be wrong in my views on some other passages—but, on the truth, "Life only in Christ," Hallelujah, I am right.

Br. Storrs, if you deem what I have written not worthy of publishing, I shall not be offended—not in the least. As I closed my first letter to you, (Nov. 3, 1867) so I close this epistle. "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it." "Brother, pray for us." "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with us all. Amen." Your brother, making no lofty pretensions,

AMBR. RONDTHALER.

FROM ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

BEAVER FALLS, PA. Aug. 3d, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Br. Mason gave me a cordial welcome as I arrived in this beautiful valley from New York. The journey was interesting in the natural scenery presented, and not especially fatiguing. After having enjoyed the quiet and beautiful landscapes which greet us successively as we came on through the fertile valley of the lower country. The more striking features are offered as we rise and wind around the grand old mountain of the Alleghany range.

I will not waste your space by attempting a description of the wonders that are seen, nor try to place before the readers my admiration of the achievements of human skill in overcoming the vast difficulties originally in the pathway of steam travel to the heights of the great dividing ridge of this country. I will only say that the long train glides along upward and onward, following one mountain side; then crossing a chasm between the two, winds along and around another as if it aimed to reach the very peak, till having done all that is possible, in going around, it must go through; and at an altitude of 17,500 feet plunges into a tunnel of a mile in length, and we are at once through and ready to begin our descent to the common and level world on the west side. I have crossed twice before, but it was in the night while passing the mountains.

Leaving New York, via Allentown route, at 8 P. M, or Phila. at 11:15, we reach Pittsburg the next day at 1 o'clock, and start immediately for New Brighton, via the Chicago and Fort Wayne R. R. Beaver Falls is only a mile or two from the station, and has also a station. Distance from Pittsburg about thirty miles.

We began our meetings yesterday morning in a beautiful grove on Br. Mason's lot. The spot is well adapted to the purpose. I assisted, on Saturday, in putting up a stand to speak in, and we had a good attendance on Sunday. A very good interest was manifested in the doctrines that we advocated, and and some excitement as to the things we said. Some call our views, "Infidelity" and some, as in the Apostles' times, wish to hear more of this matter.

In the evening we spoke in the large brick school-house to a good and attentive audience on the gospel power to save. It was a free time, and an impression was made which we trust will be lasting. But to speak three times and deliver long sermons at that, will in such hot weather, be likely to fatigue a pretty stout man. I am in good trim, to-day, however, and expect to take hold in our Bible Class this evening in earnest. We are to have services four evenings this week: two of which are to be occupied by a Bible Class. This is true mission work, and good mission ground. I hope there may be a harvest to the praise of the great Head of the Church.

Br. Mason and family have stood as a beacon light here. He has spoken, and given tracts and publications, taking extra copies of the HERALD OF LIFE, and getting subscribers. In one word making it a point to advance the blessed cause and defend the faith. This is as it should be; and if all were not backward to labor according to their ability, we should see more mission ground occupied, and much more harvest-bearing soil improved. Here there has been no preaching before, excepting the "daily ministration" of truth in the efforts of this family, in the manner above stated, with a consistent walk and conversation; yet the way seems to be prepared, and the field we trust is "white unto the harvest."

This is the work we delight in. To find new places where the people are willing to hear, nay, where they desire to hear, is interesting and animating. What most fills us with delight is, to have people receive the engrafted word, and become joyful expectants of the kingdom and glory of the LIFE GIVER.

To await the coming of Christ, to give life from the dead to such as have obtained the Spirit by faith.

The truths of the Bible do really seem precious when we consider that they are given by inspiration to raise man to the apprehension of the Divine character and glory, that he may behold the blessedness of the Divine image, and come at last to the enjoyment of that inheritance. And with not a little high and exalted enjoyment do we hold to the views that go to make up the Life position, even under the cross and the privations and labors of the work, when we contrast this light with whatever may be held and known as the best attainment without it.

There is such a harmony and perfectness in the Divine economy with the great Life plan, seen and understood throughout that word, as preached by us, that it is commended to mens' consciences in the sight of God.

The doctrine of Life in Christ, only, which we hold, and which becomes a bulwark of defence, secures and fortifies the position that so many have felt they must endorse, viz.; that the dead sleep and that the wicked are punished with destruction, and not with eternal torment: I say it fortifies; hence we see such as embrace it strong in the doctrine that immortality is the gift of God through Christ; while those who refuse it seem in danger constantly of returning to the heathen fable of natural immortality.

THE SECOND ADVENT OF CHRIST.

A LETTER TO S. A. C., OF H——, MASS.

DEAR S——: Why we take this public manner to answer your private correspondence you perhaps can be satisfied in your own mind; suffice it to say, circumstances seem to demand it, and thus, perhaps, we may best serve the household by giving to many that designed only for a few. The words heading this letter introduce to our minds a subject the most pleasing and desirable, as well as necessary, that can arrest the attention of Christians. Yes, the contemplation of those truths associated with this event, by (Adventists), so called, has spoiled the world for them, because such a cluster of glories hang around this grand event as to throw far into the shade all desire of terrestrial things. The Bible, or Holy Ghost Christian, having "tasted of the good word of God and of the powers of the world to come," is ever harmoniously with that word, praying, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." Faith in God's word is "comforting, but sometimes this faith grows into knowledge. This gives us great strength and boldness. "That this same Jesus will so come in like manner as he went into heaven" we know; of his more immediate revelation he says, by the signs given, the fig-tree blossoming, "know that it" (i. e., the inauguration, or setting up the kingdom by the presence and power of its King), "is nigh, even AT the door." We have been taught of a "better country," a "rest." Prophecy, like the published "time tables," brings us to the depot to wait for the express by which we are to fly swiftly from all to which we are already dead (i. e., the world) and embrace in immortalization all the promised glory of God! Well, dear ones, don't get too elated while you

"Talk of the flowers, the unsullied streams
That flow through the paradise of God,
And long to awake from life's troubled dreams,
And walk those golden streets abroad."

Our Father in heaven heaven knew how his children would feel after long and anxious expectation of the coming of the Just One. Therefore, he inspired James to write; "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." And from the numerous admonitions on this point it would seem that this grace is to be tried to the utmost before our glorious hopes are realized. We think, however, that the trial of the church is to be no more of that outward or physical resistance which characterized its early ages. The commission of the four angels, in Rev., to hold the four winds until the servants of God were sealed, seems to forbid any general demonstration of satanic power before the coming of our Lord, and this view tells loudly of the soon coming of that day; for we see in the natural, the political, and the moral world, such a trembling, shaking, upheaving, fearful foreboding, such disquiet, yea, restlessness, how can we expect the restraining grace of God will stay the mighty crash much longer!

However others may think, and whatever calculations or reckoning they make as to the time between this and the actual announcement of, "Behold he cometh," we feel just now as if we were beyond all this sort of figuring; we feel the trembling, we hear the solemn roar as the car of judgment nears to earth's station; we hear Jesus, by his ever present Spirit, say "Watch: what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch;" in other words, get your ticket; gird your robes about you; be awake; all ready; for in an hour when ye think not the Son of man cometh." When the commission goes forth to the angels to gather God's elect, the time of preparation is past; not a thing can then be done; no adjusting of our wardrobe; no brushing up; not a spot or stain can then be effaced. O how important, how solemn is the position we occupy!

"We are waiting to hear the trumpet sound,
And to meet our Saviour in the air!"

"Knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand." Rom. iii., 11, 12.

Here we are, brethren, like the crowd at the depot; the proclamation of God's truth has brought us out from the world, and we are waiting. Now it is an exciting time and place we are in; but be calm; don't get excited; examine yourselves;" have you oil in your vessel with your lamp? Being satisfied on this important point, "I am the Lord," assist others all you can to get them ready; get their tickets; allay excitement. True, a few more "golden moments" are all we have left us for preparation, and did we realize these solemn facts all would be entirely unmanned. Oh, we know near enough the solemn moment for judicious conduct, for holy effort, for useful action. Consider the figure we have used, and conduct yourselves accordingly. Come, trembling, doubting soul, Jesus offers you a ticket; he has purchased life for all who will believe. Accept his arm of love and mercy. He takes you to God, and the Holy Spirit is sealed on your heart. God's mark of love is put upon you; now go in peace; work but an hour, faithfully, fervently, yet quietly for him, and the Master comes and his reward is with him to give to every man according as his work shall be."

Hoping, yea, confidently expecting, that grace which is to be brought unto us at the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ, I remain, your brother in tribulation and patience.

A. BOYNTON.

LOOKING FOR THE LORD.

SOME brethren in the churches think we make this a too prominent theme. Now, dear brethren, let us ask what is the Bible position, which, as Christians, we are to occupy on this subject? That safety only is found on Bible ground, the candid will readily acknowledge. Looking for his coming. "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself. Phil. iii., 20, 21. "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him will he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." Heb. ix., 28. "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour, Jesus Christ." Titus. ii., 13. "Looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God." 2 Pet. iii., 12.

Desiring his coming. "Thy kingdom come." Matth. vi., 10. This is in connection with the coming of Christ the King, as all may satisfy themselves by the word. "He that testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly: amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Rev. xxii., 20. Do we thus desire and pray?

Expecting his coming. "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." Luke xxi., 28. "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." Rom. viii., 19. Two important texts well worth a deep and prayerful meditation.

Waiting for his coming with patience, or patiently.

"Waiting for the adoption; to wit, the redemption of our body. But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." Rom. viii., 23, 25. "So that ye come behind in no gift (or grace of the Spirit), waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. i., 7. "For they themselves show of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven," etc. 1 Thess. i., 9, 10. "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Jam. v., 7, 8.

From the above Scriptures we deduce this conclusion, that as Christians we should be looking with desirous expectation, and waiting with patience for the return of our Lord and Saviour, to give us eternal life. Is our position Scriptural? Is this your position, and is there safety in any other?

May the Lord give us understanding, and grace and mercy in that day.

A. B.

A CHAIR FOR JESUS.

MY little daughter, aged two years and a half, thought it a privilege to set the chairs around the dinner-table—one for mamma, one for papa, and one for Mabel. She would drop her play upon the instant her mother called her to do it. One day, by one of the strange fancies of children of that age, she set a fourth chair, and said, "That for Jeder" [Jesus.] The door was then opened, as usual, for her to go into another room and knock on the study door and bring her father. When she brought him to the table, she pointed out that fourth chair, and told him that it was for Jesus. This was repeated four or five times.

Though, of course, she did not feel the full significance of her words, yet she had a distinct conception of Jesus as a person. The mind of a child is an enigma. Our theory is that they understand very little, yet we are daily and hourly surprised by exceptions. One of my earliest and most vivid recollections is that of the time when the idea of God as an infinite Creator first dawned upon me. I remember that it was in the forenoon, while I was puzzling over the words of my mother the night before, and that, all at once, standing in the yard, and looking up toward the sky, the truth was opened up to my mind, so that the world seemed ever after different, in that God filled it.

But, whatever may have been the understanding of it by our child, it may be supposed that the words had a deep and providential lesson for us, that Jesus was thought about, and spoken of, and that his presence and blessing were invoked at those meals with peculiar interest. How did it convict us of having neglected our Saviour, when, in unrestrained intercourse we spoke so much more freely of other names, of having failed to apprehend his real presence in our morning and evening devotions, and of having ignored, in our trials, his sympathy, wisdom and strength!

A chair for Jesus! How it suggests him as a house companion! It was a wise, and, doubtless, originally devout custom of the Romans, to place their household gods around their hearthstones. Thus their religion became the religion of common life. This is what the Founder of our faith designed our religion to be. We are apt, sometimes, to wonder why Christ did not begin his ministry immediately upon his interview with the Jewish doctors, at the age of twelve, when he gave proof of the power and claimed the authority to do so. We think of the sore need that the world then had for a Saviour, while men, losing confidence in their old and childish mythologies, built altars to the UNKNOWN, and feel as if eighteen years of precious service had been almost thrown away. But it was that he might exemplify, in a life of self-denial, the duties of home religion. The masses of the world are born to toil, and so he toiled. Being in the form of a servant, he did a servant's drudgery. We cannot but suppose that his hands were hardened with the axe and the saw, and the mallet and the plane. We picture him in the lovely mountain forest, selecting the trees, and assisting in cutting and hewing and transporting them. He could not be forgetful that on some such rough beam, his hands and his feet would one day be nailed. A rude cabin may have been his shelter, a bunch of boughs his bed, his food cooked in the rudest way, and his drink the running brook.

In those times men did not live on scattered, isolated farms, but in villages. Village boys played around where Joseph and his Son were working, and crowds of men passed and repassed daily. The labor here would be in framing timbers, and in the general joiner work upon doors, and casings, and windows, and the lattices and galleries of the inner court. It was a business that brought him into contact with other trades, with the smith who wrought the iron and brass, and the mason who laid the walls. He would also be in frequent consultation with those who were about to build, embodying their wishes in drafts, and making estimates of the cost. How natural for him to have said in his teachings: "Which of you, intending to build a tower sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it?" This occupation took him from village to village, and so he became known over a considerable part of the province of Galilee. On the Sabbath he sat in their synagogues and listened to the reading of Moses and the prophets, and to the oral commentary upon it.

At home he was subject to his mother, who pondered so long on all the wonderful signs connected with the birth of her Son, and whose anxiety to have him enter upon his mission of mighty works is seen at the marriage feast at Cana. We know how faithfully he must have performed all the little offices which could minister to her comfort. The just and merciful Joseph passed away before his Son was crucified, and probably before he entered upon his ministry. Evidently he died poor, for we find that Mary was left a penniless widow. The life of Jesus had not brought him wealth, but such love as his could not but gain for him, in some hearts, a store of love, and that love he bequeathed to his mother, when he committed her to the care of John.

Thus, by a life of severe and unrequited labor, was he made like unto his brethren; that toiling humanity, returning home from daily labor, weary, lame and hungry, might be encouraged to look up to him as a merciful high-priest, who could be touched with a feeling of our infirmities. Therefore, can he be a household Saviour to all mankind. A chair may be set for Him, who is as one of them. He can listen to the tale of life's work and woe, and can lift off the burden of it. The home of poverty is made cheerful by his presence. The lonely find him companionable. To those who are careful and troubled because of the labor and loss of this world He gives the good part. Those who cannot obtain a permanent home, he reminds that, though He built homes for others, he had not where to lay his head, and wherever he meets with them, there is a home, foretaste of the mansions he has gone to prepare.

Well may the children set a chair for Jesus, because he noticed them, spoke to them, even interrupting his teachings to take them in his arms.

If men but knew him as a home Saviour, they would not deny him and seek the mediatorship of Mary and of the saints.

But how many families are there that claim the name of Jesus, who have no chair for him! They are ashamed to thank him openly for the food they eat and to ask him to bless it. They are ashamed when they have eaten, to bow down before him and worship him. The worshippers of Brama and the followers of Mahomet confess their faith before their families and neighbors, and it is perpetuated from generation to generation. The Christian religion is, in the present generation, dying out of many families, because it has so little power. Would that they might respond to the Saviour at their doors, knocking sadly and patiently, and would welcome him to a chair! Surely they would find him a pleasant companion at their tables and their firesides.

—Am. Presbyterian.

RELIGION that does not go with us in our daily vocations, controlling and guiding us, is of little value. We should not make it obtrusive or ill-timed in any of its manifestations, but our hearts should be so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of Christ as to cause every act in its own quiet way, to show forth the foundation principles of our life, and speak a stronger language for the Master than direct words. It is in our worldly business, if anywhere, both in its effect on ourselves, and on those with whom we are brought in contact, that its power is made manifest.

WHO becomes every day more sagacious in observing his own faults, and the perfection of another, without either envying him or despairing of himself, is ready to mount the ladder on which the angels ascend and descend.

"THREE CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS."

One Thousand Dollars Wanted. FOR WHAT?

To put into circulation within the next three months Ten Thousand each of the following works:

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE.

THE JUDGMENT:

TIME AND MANNER OF IT.

AND

LIFE FROM THE DEAD:

Or, The Righteous only will Live Again.

These three documents are for the campaign before us, which is not to be ended till our King is crowned and has the kingdoms of this world subjected to his reign on David's throne. Three thousand each of the above two first-named documents have been printed; and four thousand of the last, and a great portion of them are already in circulation; but there is a wish to increase it to ten thousand each by the next anniversary of the Life and Advent Union. We believe it can be done. It is true, a few have generally had such work to do; but "many hands make light work." If each of our subscribers could pay, or collect one dollar for this object, the full amount and several hundred dollars over would be had to carry on the work.

Who says, I will do it? You can have all your money back again in the documents, if you wish it.

The three works can be had for 14 cents, including the postage; or, 100 of each for $12, including postage, or for $10 when sent by express or taken at our office.

The "Generous Offer" Revived.

It will be remembered that the Hon. O. S. Halsted, last winter made the offer to send his work, "The Theology of the Bible," to any subscriber of the Herald of Life for $2, and himself prepay the postage. The retail price of the work is $3. By accepting the judge's offer, you, in fact, get this invaluable work for a little more than half price; as the author gets but $1.68 after paying postage. The book is one to stdy; and with it your Bible will be more perfectly understood. The offer is a most generous one, and we hope many more will avail themselves of it. It is not restricted to your taking one copy at this rate. You can have any number you choose to send the money for. Send $2 for each copy; writing your own name and Post Office address plain, and the work will come to you free of any other expense.

Direct your communication to Hon. O. S Halsted, 417 Broad St., Newark, N. J.

To Brn. Lewis and Walter.

As I do not see that the Tent which we have used in Illinois for the last three seasons is in use this season, if it is in condition to use, and you can do so in time, will you ship it, by express, to Br. Charles A. Hastings, Springfield, Mass. It is needed for the Springfield Camp-meeting. W. S. Campbell.

Beaver Falls, Pa., Aug. 7th.

Luke. xx., 33–38.

There are several expressions in this account of the resurrection that are entirely without meaning, if the wicked are included in the resurrection; unless it is allowed that they also are the "children of God."

1. In the expressions—"Therefore in the resurrection," etc.
2. "They that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead" (leaving some dead).
3. "Neither can they die any more." That is expressive enough.
4. "They are equal unto the angels."
5. "Are the children of God."
6. "Being the children of the resurrection."
7. "Now that the dead are raised."
8. "He is not the God of the dead," (those who will not rise,) "but of the living," (those who will rise,) "Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," and others who are believers as they were.

Paul in 1 Corth. xv., speaks of the resurrected as being raised in-corruptible—immortal—spiritual—powerful—glorious. This is the nature of the resurrection, as described by this apostle. If there be any other resurrection, it was never worthy of his notice.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 12, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The Life and Advent Union.

The fifth anniversary of the Union will be held in "The Life and Advent Mission Tent," on the Camp-ground in Springfield, Mass., Thursday the 27th inst, at two o'clock P. M. A preliminary meeting, in the same place, in the A. M., at ten o'clock. Let not any fail to be there who can be. If this cannot be, let us know what you will do to sustain the Herald of Life another year.

Br. E. Wolcott, the owner of the above tent, is expected to pitch it on Saturday, the 22d inst; and all special meetings to promote the object for which the Union was formed will be held in it. Conference and prayer meetings will be held there, and more or less preaching during the continuance of the camp-meeting.

Resurrection of the Wicked.—No. 7.

BY DR. N. FIELD.

If we literalists, in order to sustain our views, are compelled to resort to such expositors as Prof. Bush, we might just as well turn Swedenborgians at once. But giving Br. Storrs the benefit of the criticisms of Bush and Whiting, what difference does it make in the matter of fact stated by Daniel? None whatever. He affirms the resurrection of many (not all), that sleep in the dust of the earth. This many are divided into two classes; but nevertheless, they are all awake. Is not that so, Br. Storrs? Strike out the preposition "of," and change the adjective some to the adjectives these and those, and then what? Two classes are still indicated as awaking. The order of the resurrection is mentioned here, and in several places in the New Testament; the righteous always first. When, however, we come to chap. xx. of Revelation the time between the resurrection of the two classes is mentioned—one thousand years. This is a significant fact, that the resurrection of the righteous is always mentioned first.

Suppose, then, we read Dan. xii., 2, as Whiting and Bush would read it, and see what difference it will make in the sense. "And many from the sleepers in the dust of the ground shall awake; these to everlasting life, and those to reproaches and everlasting abhorrence." Does this strange and awkward arrangement of the words of the text make any difference in its meaning? Not a particle. These and those alike refer to the wakers from the dust. There is no getting round this. The text cannot be altered in its sense by any alteration in its phraseology.

But Br. Storrs is pleased with the statement that the resurrection of two classes is not mentioned by any other Old Testament writer but Daniel. From this he would infer that there must be some mistake in the translation of the text in question. Does that fact necessarily raise a doubt as to the genuineness of the text or the accuracy of its rendering? If it does, then the whole of his prophecy with regard to the four great Monarchies, the Little Horn, the Setting up of God's everlasting Kingdom, might be invalidated for the same reason.

A few remarks on John v., 28, 29. "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." The passage harmonizes with Dan. xii., 2, for it is evident that the resurrection here mentioned includes two classes; they that have done good, and they that have done evil. If the second class is not resurrected, the first is not. The affirmation is as clear and unequivocal with regard to one class as the other. The meaning is unmistakable. It cannot be explained away. No sophistry or far-fetched criticisms can evade its force.

If the resurrection of the wicked is not taught in this text there is no meaning in words, and the Bible is a contradictory book. If it is elsewhere declared that they will not rise from the dead, then there is beyond all doubt a conflict in the statements of inspired writers on this momentous subject. Every common-sense reader, from an impartial and unprejudiced standpoint, would so decide.

[Concluded.]

Response to Dr. Field.

We are not a little surprised that Dr. Field clings so persistently to Dan. xii., 2. He says if Whiting's and Bush's rendering of the text is admitted, it makes no "difference whatever;" for he affirms the resurrected "are divided into two classes," and are "all awake." He asks, "Is that not so, Br. Storrs?" Here things are mixed together. He assumes that two classes are comprehended in the "many of them" that are raised. This we deny; thus giving an emphatic No to his question. "Two classes are" not "indicated as awaking." The sense of the text, in its most "literal" form, when read with Prof. Whiting's rendering of the words "some and some" into "these and those" is as follows, "Many of them who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; these [who awake] to everlasting life; those [who do not awake, remain] to shame and everlasting contempt." Clearly stating two facts: 1. These "many" who awake, all awake to everlasting life. 2. Those who do not awake "at that time," when "Michael stands up" (verse 1,) remain eternally in death's dominion; for, "the man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi., 16.

"The order of the resurrection is mentioned" in Dan. xii., 2, truly; but the "order" is, those only who awake to everlasting life have any part in the resurrection from "the dust of the earth;" all others remain "in the dust of the earth" to "everlasting shame and contempt"—they "shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them." John iii., 36.

That "in several places in the New Testament the righteous always" are "first" spoken of as in the resurrection, is clear; and it is equally true they are the last and the only ones spoken of as having life from the dead. Not one text in the Bible saith a wicked dead man shall live again. We do not say that Dr. Field and others cannot infer it, just as some others infer the immortality of the soul, but for either there is not one positive text in the Bible.

Flee to Rev. xx., and you may raise a presumption, but it is nothing more; for to say nothing of the symbolical character of that Book, and admitting that two resurrections are spoken of, there is not a word in the chapter that makes it certain the wicked dead are embraced in the second, as we have shown in our previous replies.

We are sorry Br. Field is so ready to throw away the Bible, prophecies and all, if his construction of Dan. xii., 2 and John v., 28, 29 is not the true one. Such hastiness in disposing of the Book of God we regret to see in men professing to be Christians. We never yet staked the truth of the Bible upon the truth of our construction of its language, and trust we never shall.

That John v., 28, 29 seems to sustain our friend Dr. Field and others who appeal to it we freely admit. But what view of Scripture doctrine finds no texts of difficulty? It were easy to show how true it is that all theories have difficulties, else there would be no adverse sects in Christendom.

Our Lord and his apostles made all their appeals to the law and the prophets. Whatever, then, be the import of John v., 28, 29, it cannot contradict the Old Testament teaching, and does not, therefore, teach that those who have "done evil" come into "life," whatever else it teaches. "They that have done good unto the resurrection of life:" they live. "They that have done evil, unto the resurrection of condemnation:"—condemned to what? "He that believeth not shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him"—such are condemned to "remain in the congregation of the dead." John iii., 36; Prov., xxi., 16. In this view the antithesis is perfect. God hath given his Son "authority to execute judgment;" he does it, "at the last day," by his power over all the living and dead—good and bad: to the good he gives life; the bad he condemns to "remain in the congregation of the dead"—leaves the "wrath of God" abiding "on them." Thus he judgeth "the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." 2 Tim. iv., 1.

If any still insist the doers of evil must be made alive because it is said they "shall hear his voice and come forth," and ask, how could this be if they were not made alive? We reply by asking them a like question on Ezek. xxxvii. How could the "dry bones hear the word of the Lord" unless made alive? But they did hear; and as the prophet "prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone. And the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above; but there was no breath in them." They were not alive; yet they heard the voice of the prophet and obeyed. Thus we have inspired testimony that the dead, without life, are said to hear and obey; and until it can be proved the wicked will have life at the resurrection, "at the last day," we may rest assured they "shall not see life"—they have "no life in" them, because they did not "eat my flesh" nor "drink my blood," as saith Jesus, John vi., 53; they have no connection with the life-giving power, and perish forever in their own corruptible nature.

We might go a step further on the subject as illustrated by Ezekiel's vision of the dry bones; we might admit all the dead wicked would come as near to life as the dry bones did, while there was "no breath in them." What then? Were they alive? No. What is lacking? The vitalizing element. What is that? We have no account of any other for dead men, at the last day, but the Spirit of God. But the wicked never had that dwelling in them, and though God should cause them to come out of their graves, and clothe them with flesh anew, what is to give them life? The Spirit of life enters only into God's people—"I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and . . . put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live." Ezk. xxxvii., 13, 14. "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii., 11.

But "I don't believe the wicked dead will come out of their graves and not be made alive." Well, we do not ask you to believe it; we only say, it is far more Scriptural and reasonable to suppose such to be the fact, than to believe they will be made alive to be tormented and killed again; and, moreover, the Scriptures, speaking of the people of God, say, "They shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched: and they shall be an abhorring to all flesh." Isa. lxvi., 24.

If the advocates of the resurrection of wicked men will have it so, why, so be it; but their resurrection will give nothing but carcasses to these dead; carcasses which will be an abhorrence to all living men. These "carcasses" "shall remain in the congregation of the dead," and "not see life."

But some persons sneer at the idea that carcasses shall be brought from the graves to be treated thus. They say, "That is a horrible idea"—they "have heard of savages that thus treated the dead bodies of their enemies; but it is shocking to attribute such a thing to God!" Happy that their sensibilities can be shocked by something; but to them there is nothing to disturb their "pure minds" in the idea that God should make those carcasses alive and then torture that life out of them again! That is all right, in their estimation! They can "strain at a gnat, but swallow a camel" as calmly as if taking a sweet morsel!

We give these objectors to raising lifeless carcasses to shame and dishonor, and to show it is a punishment in God's estimation, Jer. vii., 1, 2. The contents of the chapter commences—the calamities to the Jews both DEAD and ALIVE." What are those calamities to the dead? "At that time, saith the Lord, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of the princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves; and they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the hosts of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: they shall not be gathered, nor buried: they shall be dung upon the face of the earth."

If the Son of man shall thus cause all the doers of evil to "come forth" from "the graves" to "condemnation," not to see life, but to be "dung upon the face of the earth"—whose "carcasses shall be an abhorring to all flesh," who shall say John v., 28, 29, is not fulfilled to the very letter?

An Opponent's Testimony.

We clipped the following from the Advent Herald of last week. We have before said, that paper holds the old view of inherent immortality and eternal misery. It was originally under the supervision of Joshua V. Himes; he has gone forward so far as to abandon the two points above named, but holds to the resurrection of the wicked dead, and to their dying a second time. The present editor of the Advent Herald speaks in this language:

> We have long been of the opinion, that if there is unconsciousness in death, and the doom of the wicked is extinction of being, those who maintain that there will be no resurrection of the unjust hold the more consistent view. If at death there is cessation of being, and "the wages of sin is death," why bring the sinner into existence again, pass sentence on him and put him back where he was? If the punishment threatened the ungodly is blotting out of existence, of course the sooner they are annihilated the sooner they get their "wages." But our difficulty with the entire materialistic theory is to reconcile it with the Scriptures.

Thus we have the confession of our opponents that the theory maintained by us is "the more consistent view." With our view, then, we shall be more likely to make converts to man's natural mortality, and the belief that "death is the wages of sin." We believe the view the Advent Herald takes of "the more consistent" position we occupy on the question, is that which nearly every one of our reflecting opponents among the orthodoxites take. To us, it is the only consistent view of the subject. That held by the advocates of the resurrection of the wicked dead, we once held, but found it was untenable; and that if we maintained that life from the dead was only by Christ, there could be, in the nature of the case, only such life bestowed by Him as God had given him to confer on dying men; and the testimony is clear and explicit that, "God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son:" and Christ saith, "Except ye eat my flesh and drink my blood ye have no life in you;" but "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." The resurrection at the last day is peculiar, and clearly excludes the wicked from any part in it. And as the righteous only are brought into life at the last day, it follows, inevitably, that the wicked "shall remain in the congregation of the dead," unless it can be shown there is a resurrection after "the last day;" such an event it will be difficult to show.

The "difficulty with the entire materialistic theory" which the Advent Herald has, does not pertain to the theory held by us; for, our theory is not in his broad sense materialistic. We believe in a spiritual nature as well as he; only we maintain it is not inherent in man; or man is not possessed of it by creation or natural birth; but that it is, first a seed, by grace, or the favor of God in Christ. That this seed, when retained in a believing and obedient heart, increases in strength and power by means of the person's union with Christ, the Life-giver; so that at the resurrection (whether the person is alive or asleep in Jesus) that spiritual life is developed into eternal life, and the person becomes a spiritual being and immortal, "neither can he die any more," and is a child of God, being a child of the resurrection.

Such we regard as the teaching of Christ; and Paul elaborates the subject in 1 Cor. xv. in such a manner that it seems to us, our Br. of the Advent Herald will yet find our view is the only one that he can "reconcile with the Scriptures."

In a Dilemma.

Br. Storrs: I am perplexed. Allow me to tell you how I got into this dilemma. You know I have never been able to see the non-resurrection of the wicked, though I have always been kindly disposed toward those who claim to see it. But on April 1st, I went to the Conference at Boston; and on Thursday, P. M., listened to a discourse from Br. S. G. Mathewson, of Castleton, Vt., which upset all my philosophy and theology, too; and which, if true, leaves me no alternative, except that of no resurrection for the wicked. Speaking of "Life" and of the State or condition in which the just or righteous are raised up from death, or out of their graves, he used the following language:

> "Talk about different kinds of life! Why, life is life, is it not? I do not know anything about Adamic and Christ life; about animal life and spiritual life; about temporal and eternal life; about mortal and immortal life, as differing one from the other in kind. There is but one kind of life and that was given to Adam; and if he had been obedient, he would have lived right on forever; and that would have been eternal life, would it not? But he was cut off from life on account of his transgression: and so are the wicked. Now this life is given to the righteous only, on account of their faith in Christ; and Paul says, they are raised INCORRUPTIBLE, does he not? The wicked do not get the gift of life! 'For this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they, the dead, might be judged according to men in the flesh.'"

Then leaving the remaining part of the verse (1 Peter iv., 6) incomplete in his quotation, he said:

"Now let us have that right over again, so that we may fairly understand it."

He then began again with Adam's being cut off from life, etc., ran down to the same point in the quotation of Peter, and there he left it.

On asking him after sermon was through, When he came out on the non-resurrection of the wicked? he denied having done so; and on the query, "Why did you preach it, then?" he denied that also.

But on calling his attention to the declarations as made by himself, and desiring to know how he was going to get the wicked up, if so be there is but one kind of life, and that one kind never given to the wicked, but to the righteous only? "O! (said he) I will preach another sermon and clear that up." Well, I hope you will, for it needs clearing up. But he did not clear it up; and as the discourse was before hundreds, and made the same impression on others as on myself, I do really hope our good brother will "preach another discourse" at Springfield camp-meeting and help me out of the dilemma that he has been the means of getting me into. I never had that doctrine put home to me with such telling power since the question came up as on that occasion. But if it be true, as Br. M. says, that there is but one kind of life and that kind the wicked never get, but the righteous only, I declare my poor weak brain can see no escape from the conclusion that there is no possible chance for any kind of a resurrection for the finally impenitent sinner.

What say you, Br. Storrs? Is or is not such a conclusion legitimate to the premise assumed? Please send me the copy containing your answer and oblige yours in hope of life. G. W. Stetson.

Rutland, Vt., June 1, 1868.

Response to Br. Stetson.

Without going into the argument of the two kinds of life, it is undeniably true that "life is life." And further, Br. Stetson is entirely right in his conclusion from Br. Mathewson's statements; we see not how it is possible to come to any other. We trust Br. M. will yet see that it is impossible to reach life and immortality as the gift of God, without excluding the wicked from any and all life, after they are once dead.

We never went forward to our present stand-point, until forced to do so or abandon our foundation principles. We found we had been preaching the doctrine of no future life out of Christ ever since we abandoned the doctrine of inherent immortality, and had to take special pains to keep those who heard us on the Life theme from thinking we taught that the wicked would not live again. This course we pursued for years, till we were forced in the midst of a sermon we were preaching contrasting the two Adams, 1 Cor. xv., to see that there was, in the nature of the case, no life by a resurrection from the dead to any man except in Christ; and that God had given to his "Son power . . . . to give eternal life," and no other, "at the last day." "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life: and this life is in his Son: he that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John v., 11, 12. This we found agreed with Jesus' own testimony, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood ye have no life in you." John vi., 53. But they had the present life in them, though they did not partake of Christ. His words, therefore, will bear no other construction than that of a rejection from being "raised up at the last day" into life.

From these starting points, we came to see that the general tenor of the Bible, and of the gospel in particular, was, that salvation from death is the grand theme of revelation from Genesis to Revelation; and that those who were only partakers of the Adamic nature inevitably perish in death, and are no more forever; that only by connection with Christ would any man be delivered from death's dominion. "The wages of sin is death." "The sting of death is sin." That sting must be extracted or death holds us in his eternal dominion: nothing but "the blood of Christ" will destroy sin: that is the only healing or curative balm; so we see how forcible is that saying of Christ, "Except ye eat my flesh and drink my blood ye have no life in you."

To a like result we are sure all who reject the doctrine of inherent immortality will sooner or later come, if they do not leave off "contending for the faith once delivered to the saints" of "Christ our life." We can afford to wait patiently till their eyes shall be opened to see this crowning truth of the gospel, viz., "Life future and eternal alone in Christ:" all out of him perish as if He had never come into the world, because they would "not come unto Me that they might have life," as saith Jesus.

Those "Four Questions."

A correspondent in Sheldon, Vt., seems quite anxious that we should let him answer the questions we have twice put to Eld. J. V. Himes, as follows,

1. Is the resurrection of the whole Adamic family to take place at one and the same time?
2. If so, are they all raised mortal?
3. If all are not raised mortal, how are we to account for it without admitting a judicial judgment before the resurrection? or,
4. Why is one class raised mortal and the other immortal?

We stated explicitly, "These questions have to do only with the statements in 'Part 1' of Adventism" a work which Eld. Himes and his associates are highly commending and circulating. We wished to know if he and his coadjutors did indorse what seems to be the teaching of that work, viz., that the whole Adamic race are raised from the dead at one and the same time; and that all, saints and sinners, are to be raised mortal. Now, if we are asked to help give circulation to this work, called "Adventism," is there anything unreasonable in our asking the four questions above? We said, "It appears they [the author and publishers of that work] hold to an universal mortal resurrection of all dead ones, saints and sinners." We are still under that impression; and neither the author nor publishers give us any relief or take any notice of the questions we put to them in good faith and with a sincere desire not to misrepresent their position. If their position is what it must seem to every impartial reader of "Adventism" that it is, why should they refuse to avow it openly and candidly? They have a right to their view of the order of the resurrection and the condition of those raised from the dead; but those who are asked to help circulate the work have a right to know if its apparent meaning is its real one. We can see no reason why the author and publishers of it should refuse to state frankly the truth in the matter. As sufficient time has elapsed since our questions were first put to them, and no response has been made by any of the parties concerned, we are compelled to the conclusion that "Adventism," its author, and those who circulate it do hold to a simultaneous, mortal resurrection of all the dead of Adam's race.
